SUBJECT: (C) BULGARIAN MEDICS UPDATE

CLASSIFIED BY: Gregory L. Berry, Chief of Mission, USLO, Tripoli. REASON: 1.4 (b), (d)

¶1. (C) Status of Medics: The five Bulgarian medics sentenced to death for infecting over 400 Libyan children with HIV-tainted blood in a Benghazi hospital are being kept relatively secluded, the Bulgarian Embassy's Dimitar Dimitrov told us December 7. Dimitrov personally speculates this is because members of a Committee on Prison Reform (possibly part of a Libyan initiative to review internal procedures in a number of areas, including prisons) have been visiting the prison and the prison authorities do not want committee members to have contact with the Bulgarians. Libyan authorities turned Dimitrov away on December 7 when he tried to visit the medics; in the past, prison authorities had allowed Dimitrov to visit more or less whenever he wished. Meanwhile, the Palestinian doctor who also received the death sentence has been moved to newer area of the Abu Salim Prison where all six are being held. Libyan authorities allowed his family (four sisters and mother) to visit him within the past few days; his mother had not seen him for some time, since a prison guard insulted her and she refused to return to the prison.

¶2. (C) State of Appeal: The medics' appeal case is now pending with the Neeaba Office (which means "prosecution"), a consultative body within the Supreme Court that reviews all the evidence for a trial and appeal, examines the case profile, and prepares a report that is presented to judges for review, Dimitrov reported. Libyan prosecutors are still protesting the acquittal of one of the Bulgarians, a doctor who is married to one of the convicted medics. According to Dimitrov, the acquitted doctor could be asked to return to prison, which could cause serious problems since he is currently living in the Bulgarian Embassy in Tripoli. (Note: The doctor remains in Tripoli because of his wife, and because Libyan authorities have refused to grant him an exit visa to leave Libya pending the outcome of the appeal. End note.)

¶3. (C) Bulgarian Embassy Reaction to Recent Libyan Public Statements: The Bulgarian government was surprised by the December 5 news reports of Libyan FM Shalgam's statement that Libya would review the death penalty for the Bulgarian medics if Bulgaria provides compensation to the victim's families, Dimitrov said. He reiterated Bulgaria's position that payment of compensation is not an option, since Bulgaria will not agree to deal directly with the families, and because it is an admission of guilt. The Bulgarians view Qadhafi son Saif al-Islam's statement in a December 9 New York Times article that "no one is going to execute anyone" as unofficial.

¶4. (C) Libyan Demands to EU: Ramadan Al Fituri, head of the association representing the families of the 426 HIV-infected children, presented settlement demands to the European Commission representatives currently visiting Libya. According to Dimitrov, the families want the Bulgarian government to build a hospital and provide compensation, medical care and full support for the children for the rest of their lives. Dimitrov says the Bulgarian government did not directly receive a copy of the letter.

E.O. 12958: DECL: 12/12/2014
TAGS: EPET [Petroleum and Natural Gas] , ECON [Economic Conditions] , PREL [External Political Relations] , LY [Libya]
SUBJECT: (C) U.S. OIL COMPANIES PERSEVERE IN LIBYA

REF: TRIPOLI 0026

¶1. (C) Oasis/Oxy Update: The oil majors were in Tripoli the week of December 6 for yet another Libyan economic conference (reftel). The former Oasis partners (Marathon, Amerada Hess, ConocoPhillips) are continuing their negotiations with the NOC for re-entry into the Libyan oil market, as is Occidental. ConocoPhillips told us that they have initialed an agreement with the Libyans for re-entry to the Libyan oil market based on the arrangement they had before pulling out in 1986. Conoco characterized the agreement as "not good," but said the company views it as "dues-paying" in order to return to the Libyan market. Occidental, on the other hand, seems to be hanging tougher with the Libyans. In a November meeting in Libya, Occidental CEO Ray Irani told Libyan PM Shukri Ghanem that the agreement proposed by the Libyans would cost Occidental USD 200 million, something he could not justify to the shareholders. Occidental has offered an alternative to the Libyans; although it has received no response so far, Oxy seems willing to wait it out for a while. Marathon, like ConocoPhillips, appears more willing to pay a price for re-entry into the Libyan oil market.

¶2. (C) EPSA IV Update: Meanwhile, American and non-American oil companies are awaiting the results of the first EPSA IV bid round. Winning bids are supposed to be announced on January 19, but there are rumors that the announcement could be delayed (NFI). Tariq Hassan-Beck, director of planning for the National Oil Company (NOC), has said publicly that the NOC is already working on the round two bidding package, which could take place in the first half of 2005. "We're learning from round one," he commented; but provided no details. Shortly thereafter, Poe Legette, partner, described some of the legal problems encountered in the EPSA IV process, including the fact that contracts must be approved by the General People's Committee and overall uncertainty about which laws apply under which circumstances.

¶3. (C) Azzam Messalatti, chairman of the NOC's upstream negotiation committee, mentioned that the NOC is also working on Development and Production Sharing Agreements (DPSAs) which would be similar to the EPSAs, but focused on development rather than exploration. This is the first that we and some of the American companies have heard of this. Messalatti also briefly mentioned a Libyan "Gas Master Plan," which he said has been approved in response to an increase in demand for natural gas. The plan includes upgrading facilities and developing fields.

¶4. (C) COMMENT: The U.S. oil companies are clearly looking at Libya as a place where they expect to be doing business in the future. ConocoPhillips already has an office here; Amerada Hess, Chevron-Texaco, and Exxon-Mobil are all in the process of signing leases for office space in downtown Tripoli and are bringing in country managers for Libya. Some of the U.S. oil companies commented privately (as they have in the past) that it's not clear that the way the EPSA IV round was run will result in the best foreign partners for Libya. According to them, the process doesn't really allow for consideration of the bidder's experience and quality of technology. The only time such factors could have been considered was in the qualifying round, but given that 68 out of 120 companies qualified, some companies wonder how much weight was given to those aspects of the bidding process. Of course, the U.S. companies have a personal interest in cutting down the amount of competition, and their edge is clearly in the experience and technology they can bring to development of Libyan oil fields, not necessarily in being the ones offering the sweetest financial deal to the GOL. END COMMENT.

REASON: 1.4 (b), (d)

¶1.    (C) Summary:  French Embassy DCM Maurice Dabdoush (please protect) December 15 confirmed rumors circulating around Tripoli that Jacques Chirac's November 24-25 visit to Libya was not a happy experience.  While the French President accomplished his most important goal - that of simply showing up here, as his UK, Spanish, Italian, and German counterparts have done in the past year - there were no major breakthroughs in foreign policy or business contracts.  Libyan "game-playing", including a surprise welcome ceremony in front of Qadhafi's bombed-out house from the 1986 raids and trying to invite Venezuelan President Hugo Chavez along to the state dinner, irritated Chirac and cost a certain amount of good-will, Dabdoush said.  End summary.

The Rumors

¶2. (C) Dabdoush and newly-arrived French Ambassador to Libya both departed Libya within hours of Chirac. By then Tripoli was abuzz with rumors that the visit had gone poorly. The take of many here, including the British embassy, was that Chirac's efforts to "ingratiate" himself with the Libyans after the coolness of recent years and the ill grace with which the UTA dispute was resolved had failed. The diplomatic community and the media interpreted the fact that Chirac's welcoming ceremony was held at Qadhafi's former house in the Bab al-Azizia barracks, which suffered a direct hit in the U.S. 1986 bombing and is now a shrine to the 1986 "martyrs of imperial aggression", as a slap in the face to the U.S. by both the Libyans and French. Many were also scratching their heads over the November 24 state dinner, which the Libyans advertised as a double bill in honor of both Chirac and Venezuelan President Hugo Chavez, who was also in town, but which only Chirac attended.

The Irritations

¶3. (C) When we finally caught up with Dabdoush December 15, he confirmed that neither he nor his ambassador had been recalled, as some here had speculated, but instead had returned to France to recuperate from the stress of the visit. From the GOF's standpoint, the visit was a moderate success, Dabdoush said; Chirac can now say he's visited Libya, as so many of his European counterparts have done recently, and spent quality time with Qadhafi, as reported reftel. However, disorganization and constant Libyan "game-playing" with the schedule irritated Chirac and cast a pall over the visit. Notable irritations included:

-- Qadhafi gave an interview to Le Figaro the day before Chirac's arrival, in which he criticized Libyan actions in Cote d'Ivoire, infuriating Chirac.

-- On the morning of Chirac's arrival, Libyan Protocol invited diplomatic heads of mission to a state dinner in honor of both Chirac and Chavez. This was news to the Chirac's advance party, who passed it the President before his departure. Chirac categorically refused, stating that he would have a quiet dinner with the Ambassador "over a bottle of wine" in that case (note: alcohol is illegal in Libya). The Libyans disinvited Chavez, but Dabdoush told us that Chavez's security guards later got into a shoving match with some French ministers in the elevator of the Mehari Hotel, where the dinner took place.

-- Chirac had no intention of visiting the 1986 bombed-out house, according to Dabdoush. The French advance team had agreed that the welcoming ceremony would take place in the Bab al-Azizia barracks so that Qadhafi would attend, but the ceremony was supposed to happen in another part of the barracks, Dabdoush asserted, showing us the initial site scenario diagrams to illustrate his point. Chirac felt ambushed, and made his displeasure felt by his icy demeanor during the ceremony and his subsequent refusal to put an inscription in the guest book, where other heads of state, mostly African, have gone on for pages about the injustice done to the Libyans in 1986.

-- The Libyans ambushed Chirac again on November 24 by trying to get him to lay a wreath at a monument for victims of 1986; Chirac refused.

What Was Accomplished

¶4. (C) Besides actually showing up, not much, according to Dabdoush; the five cooperation agreements signed during the visit were merely window dressing, and no significant business contracts were concluded. Although Qadhafi made his now-standard plea for military sales, the GOF will respond with caution. Dabdoush predicted; while the EU arms embargo has been caution, Dabdoush predicted; while the EU arms embargo has been lifted, certain sales are still tightly controlled under the so-called "toolbox" arrangement. France will stick to these prohibitions. Notably, the subject of Abdullah Sanoussi did not come up; Dabdoush said that the Libyans "know better now" than to press for clemency, which he believes Chirac is not inclined to give in any case. (Note: Sanousi was convicted to life in prison in abstentia for the UTA bombing; the French were enraged when Qadhafi rehabilitated him, after years spent under house arrest, and made him chief of military intelligence.) Dabdoush thought the Libyans have done a "fair" job in keeping Sanoussi out of the public eye, as they have requested.

Chirac and Qadhafi

¶5. (C) Chirac and Qadhafi do not enjoy warm relations, Dabdoush said. They first met in 1976; to Dabdoush's knowledge, the last time they saw each other was during the Five Plus Five Meeting in 2003 in Tunis, when Chirac was irritated (again) after Qadhafi fell asleep during Chirac's speech.

Comment

¶6. (C) Chirac's visit brought to mind, as so often here, a phrase that has become almost a technical term in the diplomatic corp: Libya's unmatched "wackiness factor." The Canadians are awaiting PM Martin's visit with some trepidation, especially after Saif al-Islam demanded an apology for Canada's participation in international sanctions on Libya in the 1980s and '90s. End comment.

SUBJECT: LIBYANS PLEASED WITH SAUDI DECISION

REF: RIYADH 5509

CLASSIFIED BY: GREGORY L. BERRY, CHIEF OF MISSION, U.S. LIAISON OFFICE TRIPOLI, DOS.
REASON: 1.4 (b), (d)

¶1. (C) August 10 COM spoke at some length with Ambassador to the UK Mohammad al-Zway and his colleagues about the Saudi decision to pardon and expel three Libyans accused of an assassination plot again then-Crown Prince Abdullah (reftel). Zway had just returned from Sirte; he flew there August 8 to talk with Qadhafi immediately after learning of the Saudi decision. At our urging and that of the British, the Libyans' official reaction on August 9 had been restrained (they refused official comment to the press, though someone on background pointed out that a pardon implied a conviction, which had not taken place -- probably on balance the best we could hope for).

¶2. (C) In the August 10 meeting, which included External Security Organizations Chief Musa Kusa, Internal Security Organizations Chief Abdullah Sanussi, MFA America's Director

Ibrahim Dridi and Qadhafi's personal interpreter Fuad Zlitni, Zway described the Saudi announcment as a positve and good step. Giving a uniquely Libyan spin to the statement, Zway said that it was positive news, even though there had never been a real problem between the two countries; "at most it was a personal misunderstanding." According to Zway, the personal matter only escalated because the Saudis withdrew their Ambassador from Tripoli. In the Libyan version of events, they did not respond to this petty action, and didn't withdraw their Ambassador from Riyadh until they were forced to do so under Saudi pressure.

¶3. (C) "Qadhafi never supported the Libyan opposition," said Zway. He believed that the Saudis have now acknowleged that truth and responded appropriately to the Libyan overtures, so that the situation will now move forward. Referring to U.S. requests for guarantees, Zway said that the Libyans are the ones who were justified in asking for guarantees. From the Libyan point of view, the Saudis are a wealthier nation with more resources at their disposal, and therefore the Saudis are obliged to take the initiative in improving relations from now on. Zway pointed out that in his analysis, the Saudi opposition is self-generated as a result of Wahabi fanaticism. Since Libya stands firmly against Wahabi extremism, it can't align with the Saudis. He also said that the Libyan opposition derives from radical Islam, implying that the Saudis were to blame for inciting trouble in Libya. Zway asked for the U.S. to intervene with the Saudis and ask them to rein in the Islamists and cut out "the root of terrorism."

¶4. (S/NF) Abdullah Sanussi urged that we specify a timeline for moving foward now that "the Saudi issue is out of the way" (in his view). He also took the opportunity to point out that the U.S. is the party responsible for the pause in progress in the bilateral relationship, since Musa Kusa is waiting for a coordinated list of intelligence questions from the Washington interagency community. (In passing, he suggested that any meeting with A/S Welch take place in Tripoli rather than Europe, since that, "would allow for higher-level participation.")

¶5. (C) Musa Kusa expressed appreciation for the efforts of the U.S. and UK, but emphasized that Libya had put forth the most effort in making the Saudi decision possible and deserved recognition for its initiative. He highlighted the three day mourning period and telegram of condolences as "extraordinary" steps (see para. 8 for text of condolences). Kusa repeated again that Libya had never had a problem with the Saudis -- any misunderstandings were created when the Saudis withdrew their Ambassador from Tripoli. Looking forward, Kusa warned that the Saudis must pay close attention to their relations with Libyans abroad at the risk of creating new difficulties that, "would involve more than three or four countries."

¶6. (C) All of the Libyans emphasized that, "the file should be closed forever; we anticipate a new chapter." In answer to this repeated point, COM agreed that the Saudi announcement should make it easier for us to find appropriate language for the assurances that the U.S. will need from Libya. That should be a topic for discussion in preparation for the next meeting between the Libyans and A/S Welch. Zway closed the meeting by reiterating Libya's common interest in working with the U.S. on counter terrorism efforts, saying, "we are working toward a common goal."

¶7. (C) COMMENT: Qadhafi's condolence message on the death of King Fahd and his dispatch of his son Saif al-Islam to represent Libya at the funeral were clearly intended as positive gestures. It is interesting, however, that the Libyan press has said nothing about Saif's role. There is a limit to how conciliatory Qadhafi is prepared to appear.

¶8. (U) NOTE. After King Fahd's death, the secretaries of the General People's Committee declared a three day mourning period and Qadhafi issued the following condolence message:

and Qadhafi issued the following condolence message:

To the family of the late Fahd Bin-Abd-al-Aziz,

We have learned with great sadness of the death of our brother King Fahd, and we would like to extend our sincere condolences and our sympathy to your fraternal family. We also pray God to forgive him and receive him with His abundant mercy. To God we belong and to Him we return.

SUBJECT: SENATOR LUGAR'S MEETING WITH QADHAFI AUGUST 20

CLASSIFIED BY: Gregory L. Berry, COM, USLO, Tripoli.
REASON: 1.4 (b), (d)

¶1. (C) SUMMARY. In a conversation with Senator Lugar on August 20, Colonel Qadhafi complained that Libya had not been properly recognized and rewarded for its decisions on WMD. He suggested that the most appropriate "rewards" would be defensive weapons to protect the country against the threat of emerging extremist regimes in its neighbors, and the application of nuclear technology for peaceful purposes. Qadhafi insisted that the greatest threat to the region came from religious extremism, which he regarded as inextricably linked to the Saudi regime. END SUMMARY.

¶2. (C). Senator Richard Lugar, accompanied by NEA PDAS Gordon Gray, NSC Director Tim Pounds, Chief of Staff Ken Myers, Jr and professional staff members of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee Daniel Diller and Michael Phelan, traveled to Sirte on August 20 to meet with Libyan leader Qadhafi. USLO COM and Acting DCM escorted the delegation to Sirte. Qadhafi, swathed in an embroidered robe with a matching cap, greeted the entire delegation in his desert encampment at midday. Qadhafi's advisors said they had taken him from a day of rest and fasting to accommodate the delegation's tight schedule. Given the intense noontime heat, Qadhafi's advisors arranged for a water truck to spray cooling mist in the immediate area in an attempt to lower the temperature. Qadhafi, initially distracted and swatting the air with his favorite prop, a branch of desert scrub brush, opened up the meeting by saying that the delegation's time in Libya was too short and the timing was difficult. Senator Lugar expressed appreciation for the Libyans' hospitality and said he hoped the countries would normalize relations. Lugar said he wanted to learn more about how to move the relationship forward. Lugar told Qadhafi that the U.S. appreciated Libya's decision to give up its WMD and noted its concern about the State Sponsors of Terrorism List. Lugar hoped that there would be more visitors to Libya, including student exchanges and scientific cooperation, particularly in the energy sector. Lugar expressed his concern about human rights, especially the Bulgarian and Palestinian medics and Fathi al-Jahmi.

¶3. (C) Qadhafi became more engaged as Senator Lugar thanked him for receiving members of Congress as part of the expanding bilateral relationship. Qadhafi replied that Libya's objective was improved relations. It was not Libya's wish for confrontation caused by a lack of communication. As a small, developing nation, Libya had no interest in hostilities with superpowers. Qadhafi made a case that the former hostility between the U.S. and Libya was perhaps due to occasional misunderstandings because of the circumstances of the Cold War and East/West blocs. He said that some parties had an interest in creating problems between the U.S. and Libya, but that now the enemies of yesterday are friends, noting, "Egypt is now a friend of the U.S., that is a big change in the region." Qadhafi also described the Palestinian/Israeli dialogue as a hopeful sign. Qadhafi said he wanted to avoid mistakes and a relapse in the relationship. "No one benefited from confrontation in the past; everyone lost." He continued, "we need to change our policies for mutual benefit."

¶4. (C) "Libya's steps are a service to world peace," said Qadhafi, as he moved deeper into his opening monologue. Qadhafi took credit for helping Bush and Blair win reelection and said Libya wanted to help the U.S. and the UK out of conviction and principle. Libya's assessment was that it didn't benefit from having a nuclear bomb, so it decided to abandon its programs. Qadhafi also claimed Libya was told it would be rewarded by Blair and Bush for its decision, but "Libya has not been rewarded." He said that Libya was urging North Korea and Iran to give up their WMD programs, but "they say Libya's experience is a bad example, and this is true." According to Qadhafi, the Libyans are disappointed that more rewards have not materialized; "the idea of shifting from military to peaceful use is made insignificant." Qadhafi said the U.S. should seriously reconsider its response.

¶5. (C) Qadhafi emphasized that Libya needs to guarantee its self protection. Libya was not asking for offensive, but rather defensive equipment in accordance with international law: "Libya has a right and a need to protect itself." He continued, "we were promised the U.S. would help, but there has been no action." The world needed to see that the peaceful uses of nuclear energy were more beneficial than military uses; it needed to see the direct impact on economic development for Libya. "We expected Japan, China, the UK and U.S. would reward Libya; we are sorry that we have been ignored; we are looking for reward from the whole world." Qadhafi reiterated that Libya took an unprecedented step to end its WMD program, a historic decision in service of world peace and security. Instead of being rewarded, Libya was attacked by the Muslim and Arab politicians and press. Libya was "called foolish for surrendering its power and advantage without any compensation," he said.

¶6. (C) Lugar responded that the U.S. worked to renew the relationship in stages; it recognized and appreciated the Libyan relationship in stages, it recognized and appreciated the Libyan steps. Business opportunities and tourism had expanded for Libya and it was possible to cooperate on mutual defense. Lugar said, "we respect and want to enhance Libya's security; we understand your feelings and want to change the status quo to get Libya off the State Sponsors of Terrorism List." Lugar emphasized that with cooperation and a couple of key decisions, the U.S. believed removal from the list was close at hand. He also explained that when Qadhafi and Bush agreed to normalize the bilateral relationship, both the Senate and the U.S. citizens, would review President Bush's decision and Lugar hoped to hold a constructive and successful debate that would confirm the normalization. "Libya has other friends thanks to your reception of other congressmen," Lugar said. "It is an important moment for us; we want to have all the good news possible," he continued. While the friends of Libya want to advance the relationship, Lugar said, "we need help with visas for official visitors and the business community." He also pointed out the importance of prompt issuance of Libyan visas for teachers at the American school. Lugar offered "words of assurance that we are moving toward the finish line," and expressed gratitude for all the information shared by the Libyan officials who had met with the delegation.

¶7. (C) At that point of the discussion, Qadhafi decided to move into a private session with Senator Lugar and COM. In the smaller meeting, Qadhafi repeated his refrain that Libya had not been rewarded for giving up its WMD, acknowledging that some benefits had accrued, but "not what is requested; Libya is patiently waiting." He characterized student exchange, an American school and business activities in Libya as "welcome, but as good for the U.S. as for Libya." Senator Lugar asked Qadhafi what he specifically had in mind. After some byplay, Qadhafi focused on two points as appropriate "rewards." First, he wanted Libya to be able to defend itself with defensive weapons if, as he fears, extremist elements should take control in Algeria, Tunis, Egypt or Sudan (the world is "living on a volcano," with the risk of extremist explosions in many countries). Second, Qadhafi wanted to demonstrate the potential benefits of nuclear technology, as in desalination programs. He needed something to prove to the Libyan people that the world recognized the wisdom of Libya's decision on WMD.

¶8. (S) Turning then to the threat of terrorism, Qadhafi plunged into his now-familiar analysis of Wahhabism, which he sees as inextricably linked to the Saudi regime, and the dangers it poses for the region. The U.S. mistakenly has dismissed his concerns about the Saudis as nothing more than the result of a sour Libyan-Saudi bilateral relationship, Qadhafi said. In fact, his analysis has nothing to do with the personal disagreement between him and then-Crown Prince Abdullah. The fact is that, if the world wants to destroy terrorism root and branch, it must remove the base of terrorist activity and ideology by opposing Wahhabism. "A Libyan goes to the hajj and becomes indoctrinated," he said -- "thousands are being indoctrinated." The U.S. will pay a heavy price for its continued support for Saudi Arabia. The longer the present Saudi regime remains in power, the more likely it is to be replaced by religious extremists. (In passing, Qadhafi argued that a strong secular regime in Syria would continue to resist extremists inspired by Usama bin Laden, and the U.S. should adjust its policy toward Syria accordingly.) He stressed that he strongly opposed the use of force to change the regime in Saudi Arabia; instead, the U.S. should change its political position to support dedicated Saudi reformers. If we actively support "the Saudi people's right to self-determination," we would see the kingdom peacefully dissolve into its constituent provinces -- "the same thing that happened with the USSR." When Lugar asked skeptically how a moderate group would come to power if Saudi Arabia underwent a political transformation, Qadhafi insisted that it would be a natural process -- "the peoples would break off by themselves."

¶9. (C) Senator Lugar brought the conversation back to ongoing U.S.-Libyan cooperation on counterterrorism and non-proliferation, saying that we need to work together and need to be thoughtful about the use of nuclear energy for peaceful purposes. Qadhafi said that he would rely on the Senator to relay his message, but would also like to meet directly with President Bush. "Libya is still waiting," he said, for the promised benefits from its December 2003 decisions. He added that he would also like to talk with the President about Africa and "the new colonialism from the East" (i.e., growing Chinese and Indian influence in Africa). Qadhafi also suggested that Secretary Rice should visit Libya: "When she comes to the area but does not stop in Libya, people may say there's a boycott." At the close of the meeting, the Lugar delegation flew back to Tripoli and met with other senior Libyan officials (reported septel).

SUBJECT: CELEBRATING 36 YEARS OF QADHAFI

CLASSIFIED BY: Gregory L. Berry, COM, USLO, Tripoli.
REASON: 1.4 (b), (d)

¶1. (C) Summary: A hundred thousand or more Libyans gathered on Martyrs Square in Tripoli August 31 to commemorate the 1969 revolution which brought Colonel Qadhafi to power. Qadhafi passed up the opportunity to address the multitude, but he appeared on the reviewing stand for half an hour to receive the adulation of the crowd and to study a written "declaration of loyalty from all Libyans." Apart from a cheering section supplied by the revolutionary committees, the crowd seemed mostly to have its mind elsewhere; the reaction to a spectacular fireworks display in particular was astonishingly tepid. Generally, outside observers saw in the event what they expected to see; to take one example, an Arab Ambassador who is disdainful of Qadhafi and all his works claimed that the crowd's indifference was a measure of the regime's isolation. End Summary.

¶2. (C) The government did whatever was necessary to get tens of thousands of supporters into the center of Tripoli for Revolution Day celebrations on August 31. Reportedly, government officials in the outlying areas of Libya were told to be in Tripoli for the celebration or risk losing their jobs. We heard rumors that each "shabbiat" (district) official was ordered to be at the cermony along with a minimum of two other attendees. Universities and other institutions sent busloads of participants. USLO LES staff relayed rumors that the government would hand out 200 dinars to everyone in Green Square the afternoon of August 31. Transportation was a special challenge; there were many reports of security officers arbitrarily commandeering private vans and busses in the larger national interest. In the end, the regime got what it needed -- a large enough crowd to look impressive on television, but not so large as to overwhelm the carefully choreographed program. To judge from the result, officials had more trouble lining up the groups that were to parade in front of the reviewing stand; some of the noisier groups circulated through two or three times in a great circle to fill out the three-hour event.

¶3. (C) The centerpiece of the celebration was a spectacular fireworks display produced by a French company. (In a typically Libyan moment, the French coordinator of the show was visited by Libyan security on the morning of the event and told that the fireworks had been canceled because explosives were too dangerous. That edict was later reversed, and the show went ahead as planned.) Interestingly, while Western observers went to some lengths to find places to see the show, the Libyan crowd was largely indifferent. Many Libyans ignored the bright lights altogether, turning their backs on the display and chatting with friends. Cameramen from state television, who spent most of the evening broadcasting pictures of smiling children and solemn tribesmen, had trouble finding suitable shots during the fireworks. One young woman in particular was shown holding her ears and staring about in confusion when the explosions were at their loudest.

¶4. (C) Qadhafi appeared for about half an hour near the end of the event. When his face popped up on the video screens around the square, the security cordons dissolved, giving the impression that the tightly packed crowd was surging forward to be close to the leader. The cameras eventually zoomed in on Qadhafi, showing him studying a short document entitled "Pledge of Loyalty from the Libyan People" and containing what appeared to be a few pages of signatures. (One sardonic soul noted that, given the size of the document, there must be about a million signatures per page.) To the surprise of everyone, Qadhafi said nothing at all to the crowd; he was smiling and apparently relaxed, but gave the impression of someone who had done it all many, many times before.

COMMENT

¶5. (C) Outsiders generally saw what they expected to see. The Egyptian Ambassador -- bored, cranky, and no admirer of the regime in any event -- claimed the indifference of the crowd to the parade and spectacle was a sign of how feeble and out of touch the regime had become. Asked by a slightly startled colleague whether he was predicting that the regime was tottering, the Egyptian spread his hands wide and said, "Why knows? Something like this can glide for a long time before it crashes."

(C) USLO COM met previously with Qadhafi advisors in advance of the Cairo Foreign Minister's Conference to urge that Libya send senior officials to Iraq. During a meeting on September 27, Qadhafi Senior Advisor Abdulati Obeidi told Charge that a Libyan delegation had just completed a visit to Baghdad to explore upgrading diplomatic ties. The purpose of the trip was also to offer condolences after the death of Shia pilgrims in the bridge stampede. Obeidi said that the Libyan delegation agreed to establish a consular relationship at this time. There is no specific timeline for sending an Ambassador to Baghdad, but they anticipate the relationship will continue to expand in other areas. Obeidi mentioned that Talabani and other senior Iraqi officials had visited Libya in the past. He also said that Qadhafi met with the Iraqi "ex-president" in Algeria (Note: we think he meant Allawi at the Arab summit). Libya wants to engage with the Iraqis and encourage them to end Sunni/Shia discord that the Libyans view as detrimental to Iraqi stability and the broader regional situation.

CLASSIFIED BY: Ethan A. Goldrich, Deputy Principal Officer, USLO Tripoli, State.
REASON: 1.4 (b), (d)

¶1. (S) We received a draft MOU in response to reftel dip note regarding the proposed transfer of Libyan national, Abdul Rauf Omar Mohammed Abu Al Qusin,also known as Abu Abdul Rauf Zalita to the exclusive custody and control of the Government of Libya, under circumstances satisfactorily confirmed in an exchange of diplomatic notes between the USG and Libyan government that will ensure he will not pose a continuing threat to the USG or the GOL. The MOU was provided in Arabic and the text of the USLO translation is in para 5.

¶2. (C) The draft MOU addresses USG concerns that the individual be treated humanely and in accordance with the laws and international obligations of Libya. It also addresses the issue of providing confirmation that the GOL is abiding by its commitments by referencing a "Watchdog Committee."

¶3. (C) However, it does not provide any of the other written guarantees the USG has requested. The draft MOU lacks any written guarantee that Libya will take necessary steps to ensure that the individual does not engage in or facilitate terrorist activity and thus continue to pose a threat to the international community, Libya and the United States. Neither does the draft MOU include any written guarantee that the USG would continue to have access to the individual or any intelligence obtained during investigation, prosecution or surveillance of the individual. The Preamble to the draft MOU states that the guarantees are provided in the context of the global war on terrorism and intelligence exchanges, but this falls short of the written guarantees requested by the USG.

¶4. (S) On several occasions since November 14, we have asked the Libyan MFA (GPFLIC) to explain the deletion of language from the draft we provided on October 27. They eventually told us that COM may receive an explanation in an as yet unscheduled meeting with the head of the External Security Organization (ESO). We will report any further explanation we receive.

¶5. (C) Begin text of unofficial USLO translation of MOU and attached Note Verbale:

The Great Socialist People's Libyan Arab Jamahiriya
The General People's Republic
For Foreign Liaison and International Cooperation
Note Verbale

The General People's Secretary for Foreign Liaison and International Cooperation (General Office for the Americas) presents its compliments to the USLO in the Great Jamahiriya:

And has the honor to enclose herewith a draft Memorandum of Understanding between the General People's Secretary for Foreign Liaison and International Cooperation in the Great Jamahiriya and the US Department of State as regards with the assurances provided relating to the transferred people.

The General Office for the Americas requests from the esteemed USLO to relay the draft to the relevant entities in the US to examine and express their views thereof.

The General People's Secretary for Foreign Liaison and International Cooperation (General Office for the Americas) avails itself of this opportunity to renew to the esteemed USLO its highest considerations.

Tripoli: November 14, 2005

Draft Memorandum of Understanding Between the General People's Secretary for Foreign Liaison and International Cooperation in the Great Socialist People's Libyan Arab Jamahiriya And
The US Department of State
As regards the assurances provided relating to the transferred people.

Preamble:

Within the framework of combating terrorism, exchanging of security information between the Specialized Security Entities in both countries, and promoting the international efforts in the field of Global War waged by the world to put an end to terrorism and terrorists wherever they are, and whatever their nationalities or their origins, and facilitating the process of exchange and handing over of individuals indicated in terrorist crimes or suspected of engaging in such crimes,

Both parties have agreed to the following:

Article One

Definitions:
1-Forwarding country: is the country which has a terrorist individual or suspect of having relations to terrorist actions, not of its nationals holding its citizenship, and who it wishes to deport outside its territories.

2-Receiving country: is the country which accepts to receive the deported individual - whether he/she holds its citizenship or not, or it is his/her place of residence - or any other national from another country both parties agreed to deport and receive.

3-Assurances: are the rights and commitments requested by the deporting country (forwarding country) from the receiving country for the benefit of the (deportee) as of treatment, accommodation, investigation, trials, arrest, imprisonment, enforcement of prison sentences, and the compliance with the human rights principles and so forth of rights that respect the humanity of the individual.

4-Requests: are the requirements presented by the forwarding country through its Department of State to the receiving country via its Ministry of Foreign Affairs, or what is covered through the diplomatic channels as usual in relation to the subject matter of this memorandum, and the written response from the receiving country to the forwarding country as regards the receipt of the (deportee) as soon as possible.

5-The Watchdog Committee: a group of people having qualifications in law, psychology and social fields of specialization to be chosen equally from both countries.

Article Two:
If the deported individual has been previously tried, indicted and sentenced in absentia by the receiving country, his/her judgment in absentia will be nullified as soon as he/she is deported and arrives at its territories. And procedures of his/her retrial is to be resumed.

Article Three:
The receiving country guarantees, within reach of its national laws, not to execute the capital punishment, if it was pronounced in a final verdict against the deportee.

Article Four:
When one of the entities (organs) of the receiving countries arrests the deportee, or commits him/her to jail, this will be done according to laws in vigor, and in locations where healthy conditions, and proper food are provided, and his/her treatment will be suitable and humane, in line with the international customary rules.

Article Five:
When one of the state organs arrests the deportee in the receiving country, he/she will be immediately notified as of the reason of his/her arrest, and the charges leveled against him/her. The arrested person shall have the right to contact his/her attorney immediately.

Article Six:
Any one of the State security organs that undertakes the arrest of the deportee, shall undertake to refer him/her to the specialized office of the attorney general within the limited period stipulated by the law.

Article Seven:
There shall be no constraints or obstacles for the deported person to use his/her right, in the receiving country, to contact the Watchdog Committee.

Article Eight:
The deportee shall have the right, in the receiving country, to practice his/her own religious rituals whether in confinement or outside.

Article Nine:
Should the deportee be indicted in the receiving country with any criminal charges, he/she will be tried in front of the specialized courts and to provide him/her with all the necessary assurances (fair trial, public hearings, and an attorney to plead for him/her in case he/she does not have his/her own chosen attorney, and to allow him to prepare his/her challenges, to call his/her own witnesses, as well as to be informed about the contents of all the case files. And he/she shall have the right to appeal the verdicts and to repeal them up to the level of the Supreme Court).

Article Ten:
In the receiving country, verdicts in any criminal cases are pronounced against the deportee in public. Audience and media can be kept away from part or all of the court proceedings, and to prevent them from attendance, in observation of the public order, the public etiquette, and the national security.

Article Eleven:
Both countries shall have the right to withdraw from the present Memorandum, and in the time to be agreed upon when signing the provisions of this document. However, all the rights and assurances given to the deportee in the receiving country shall remain in vigor.

Article Twelve:
The present document is drafted into two copies having the same binding legal effect one in Arabic, the other in English, and both copies shall be signed by the entrusted people.

End Text.

¶1. (S) According to press reports, army chiefs of staff from Algeria, Tunisia, Egypt, Libya, and "the Western Sahara Republic," announced November 17 the creation of a joint military force. We obtained additional information about the agreement in November 29 meetings with the Egyptian Embassy and the visiting Canadian regional defense attache.

¶2. (S) The Canadian was well informed. He told us an agreement was indeed signed in Tripoli to create a North African Brigade for the African Union Peace and Security Council. Under the agreement, the Brigade would consist of two Algerian battalions, an Egyptian battalion, a Libyan battalion, an Egyptian headquarters element, and a Western Sahara reconnaissance unit (which in actuality would be run by the Algerians). Logistical bases may be located in Egypt and Algeria. The Brigade is supposed to be stood up by 2010, but both the Canadian, and the Egyptians were skeptical it will ever see the light of day. The Egyptians commented that they were in no hurry to move things forward, but confirmed that the HQ would be Egyptian.

SUBJECT: UNHCR OPERATIONS STRUGGLING IN LIBYA; BUT OPTIMISTIC ABOUT FUTURE

CLASSIFIED BY: Ethan Goldrich, Acting Principal Officer, USLO Tripoli, State.
REASON: 1.4 (b), (d)

¶1. (C) During a series of meetings over the last three months, the Tripoli-based UNHCR representative, Mohamed Hantosh Alwash, has conveyed information about local operations and ongoing negotiations with the Libyan government to sign a Memorandum of Understanding. UNHCR's primary interlocutor in the Libyan government is Ramadan Irhiam, the Director of International Organizations at the People's Bureau for Foreign Liaison and International Cooperation (MFA). During the last three years, UNHCR has tried without success to negotiate parameters for its local operation. Currently the Libyan government does not officially recognize the office; it will not accept note verbale or other communications from UNHCR and forces the operation to function as a subset of the UNDP office, contrary to the UN organization chart.

¶2. (C) Alwash believes the Libyans have not been able to determine any benefit to having a UNHCR operation in the country. His goal is to use his contacts and local experience (Alwash worked at this UNHCR office in the 1980s and helped with the repatriation of Egyptians) to convince Libyans the UN exit strategies and voluntary repatriation solutions will solve its problem with a "revolving door" for sub-Saharan African economic migrants and other refugees. Alwash plans to give his MFA interlocutor, Irhiam, a draft paper outlining refugee problems faced by Libya, along with proposed solutions.

¶3. (U) UNHCR experiences visa problems similar to those of USLO and other missions. Alwash has one assigned staff member who has been waiting over seven months for permission to enter Libya. With his current roster of six employees (one stateless person, one Iraqi, one Sudanese, and three Eritrians), Alwash says he cannot begin to fulfill his portfolio of responsibilities for repatriation, protection and resettlement of refugees. He also said that UNHCR had been trying for over a year to send auditing teams to survey the local office's accounting, but the temporary duty travelers had not been granted visas. Alwash also said UNHCR tried to send a communications expert to set up computer operations, but the Libyans also denied a visa to the information specialist. The office, given the lack of cooperation from Libyan authorities, does not have much in terms of funding or other resources.

¶4. (U) An estimated 30,000 Palestinian refugees live in Libya according to Alwash. He said they don't have a "protection" problem. The Palestinians have trouble finding employment and housing or registering newborn children. Most of the Palestinians carry Jordanian, Syrian, Lebanese or Egyptian documentation that is difficult if not impossible to renew. The documentation is criticial to the refugees ability to find work, especially now that Libya institutes regular "sweeps" to deport illegal laborers. UNHCR concentrates its efforts on helping refugees work with local consulates to get new identity papers.

¶5. (U) Alwash said Libya's principal challenge was illegal immigrants, especially sub-Saharan Africans. His contacts reported that 590 illegal immigrants traveled from Libya to Malta during September, and great numbers also travel to Italy and other Mediterrean countries. The September figure is considered representative of an average monthly immigration flow. When Alwash has the cooperation of the Libyan authorities, he hopes to make arrangements for USCIS to visit and assess the refugee population. He thought that 2007 was the most likely time for a first USCIS trip to Libya. In the meantime, Alwash has said he might ask for USG assistance with one particular resettlement case. (Comment: We expect that any USCIS visit here would be preceded by a visit from the Regional Refugee Coordinator. End Comment)

¶6. (U) While it could takes months to finalize an MOU, Alwash is currently focusing on coordination with local "NGOs". The term is in quotes because the Libyan NGOs all report to the Jamarhiryah government bureaucracy at some level. Alwash utilizes the Al-Wahfa Society to implement some part of the UNHCR care and maintenance program for refugees. He is also trying to form a partnership with the Al-Qadhafi Foundation for Charitable Activiites (under the direction of Qadhafi's son, Saif al-Islam) and the Watasimo Foundation (under the direction of Qadhafi's daughter, Aisha). Alwash is also coordinating to some degree with the World Islamic Call Society (WICS), which he described as "generally helpful." Under the sponsorship of one of these organizations, Alwash plans to hold a conference on refugee issues during the second half of 2006.

¶7. (C) December 18, Alwash told USLO that he was optimistic about the future. Based on recent conversations with Libyan officials, Alwash doesn't think an MOU will be signed anytime soon, but he does get a sense that there is a general "reconsidering" of their point of view.

¶8. (C) Biographic Note: Mohamed Hantosh Alwash, a Canadian citizen of Iraqi origin, in his forties, represents the UNHCR in Tripoli. He previously served in Tripoli during the 1980s, as well as in Geneva, Beirut and Amman. During his previous assignment in Tripoli, he worked on the repatriation issues dealing with Palestinians and Egyptians. He has two children enrolled in a French-language local school.

REASON: 1.4 (b), (d)

¶1. (C) Summary: Director and Founder of Libya On Line (LOL), Moawiya Maghur, describes the genesis and fast growth of Libya's most weighty Internet portal, and estimates that more than 20 per cent of Libyans under the age of 35 access the Internet on a regular basis. LOL offers a range of products, from technical consulting and product design to online marketing and assistance with trade shows. LOL's sponsors include Coca Cola and British Airways, drawn by circulation figures that surpass those of local newspapers, and reach a more affluent audience. End Summary.

20% of Libyan Youth Are Connected

¶2. (C) Econoff met 1/6 with LOL's director, Moawiya Maghur, son of former Libyan Foreign Minister Kamal Maghur, at the Tripoli offices of Libya On-Line. Maghur's premises serve as combined company headquarters and Internet cafi, which LOL uses as a marketing tool for its various services, including software development, networking, web hosting and domain name registration. Maghur says LOL, which employs 15 men and women (the majority of whom are young, female, and by Tripolitanian standards, extremely liberally-dressed), has registered 2000 domain names in 2004, and is currently hosting 600 sites. LOL employs two individuals whose job it is to read and provide English language translations of Libyan press and television programs. With regard to the Libyan cyber market as a whole, Maghur estimated that 5% of the total population uses the Internet, but that the figure was considerably higher, perhaps 20-25% among those under 35, and those living in Tripoli. "We even get a lot of older people, in their mid to late sixties, coming in here and chatting or video-conferencing with their children and grandchildren abroad," Maghur said. "Of course," he continued, "the Internet offers a way of livening up one's social life a bit. As was the case in Jordan in the early 90's, for example, many young people here use the Internet as a means to get to know each other without having to be seen in public." In addition to its Gargaresh location, LOL operates a cyber cafi at Tripoli International Airport. Maghur says that business is good, particularly in the area of networking services. LOL has run into some problems marketing, the same issues that plague most high-profile businesses in Tripoli: "We bought a 3000 LD (about 2500 USD) sign for the front, and they came and took it down. They said the sign needed to be in Arabic."

Libya On-Line: Libya's Principal Portal

¶3. (C) The showpiece of LOL is its eponymous Internet portal, Libya On Line, which Maghur's brother started on a shoestring budget in Ottawa, Canada, as a means of introducing people in North America to Libya and its culture. Libya On-Line contains an impressive set of information on Libyan tourist sites, government institutions, and private businesses, as well as a "Yellow Pages" directory of 2000 contacts. Maghur says he originally worked with Libyan Chamber of Commerce to develop the directory, but that the Chamber was so difficult to work with that he pulled out of the agreement after a year, at a financial loss: "We entered into an agreement with them to organize a trade expo; we printed CDs and brochures for them, and even managed part of the event-then during the show, one of their employees came by and started screaming, demanding to know why we were stealing their name." Maghur expects to expand the directory using a database of business names collected from a friend at the Tripoli land registry, which keeps the names of most new Libyan businesses. LOL is sponsored by Coca Cola, Puma, British Airways, Afriqiya, and Libtra Tours, a member of the Hosni Bey Group (refcable). LOL gets about 45,000 hits a month, compared with 33,000 a month three years ago.

The Genesis of Libyan e-Commerce:

¶4. (C) While others scoff at the idea that there are any "e-businesses" in Libya, Majhur says it is no joke, that LOL, through its Canada parent Visions, has helped create e-commerce capabilities for a number of local firms and artists, using Canada-based payment systems. Maghur gave as case in point a website for a singer (Maghur wouldn't give us the name, but a reliable source indicates it is likely Sheb Jilani, the "most self-important" of rising Libyan musical talent), who wanted to sell his CDs direct to the international market. "We sold about 500 of these, and he came back to us a bit later and said he's worth a hundred times as many. We gave him back the CDs, and he tried to do it himself. Within a month, there were pirated copies of the CD all over Tripoli (one has to wonder if LOL had anything to do with this)." Maghur works with Libyan graphic artists to put their work on line, and is in the process of organizing a competition for Libyan singers, replete with internet voting and prizes. LOL also manages trade events, through affiliates. LOL will launch a sister site, "Tijara" (trade), in three months, focusing on providing useful information for foreign businesses, including Arabic information for foreign businesses, including Arabic translations of foreign press (the portal is bilingual, Arabic-English).

¶5. (C) Comment: Moawiya Maghur is among perhaps a half-dozen private businessmen we have met whose projects and business sense have impressed us as "out of the ordinary". Some of the others include Buraq Air's CEO Mohammed Bubeida, Mohammed Gherwash, head of Winzrik Tours, and Hosni Bey, of the Hosni Bey Group (refcable). All of these individuals are foreign-educated. The personalities appear to be such that they would succeed in even a significantly more competitive market. End Comment.

STATE FOR NEA/MAG SBUTLER; NEA/MAG AWELLS; G/TIP FASSEFA

E.O. 12958: N/A TAGS: PHUM [Human Rights] , SMIG [Migration] , LY [Libya]
SUBJECT: (U) LIBYA - FIFTH ANNUAL TIP REPORT SUBMISSION

REF: STATE 273089

¶1. (U) The U.S. Government resumed direct bilateral relations with Libya on June 28, 2004, after a 24-year gap, following Libya's decision to eliminate its weapons of mass destruction programs and Missile Control Technology Regime-class missiles.

¶2. (U) Libya remains among the countries considered special cases because although press, media, and NGO reports indicate a significant human trafficking problem within its territory, the USG has not been able to verify these reports directly because of its long absence from Tripoli. During the reporting period, Libya engaged with affected countries, particularly in Europe, to combat illegal migration, smuggling and human trafficking. Until this reporting period, the Libyan Government had denied it had any problem with immigration and trafficking in persons.

¶3. (U) There are an estimated 1.5 million non-Libyans resident in Libya, most from North African and Sub-Saharan African nations. This intricately mixed migrant community makes identification of the various groups and the circumstances under which they arrived in Libya difficult. According to most reports, Libya is a transit country for men, women, and children from Africa and Asia who hope eventually to migrate illegally to Europe. A large number of Africans arrive via the arduous journey through the Sahara across Libya's porous borders with Chad, Niger, Sudan, and Egypt, although many reportedly die in the desert before reaching Libya. Libya's porous 1100-mile (1,770 km) coastline is a route also used by traffickers in North African countries. Those attempting to reach Europe through Libya are exploited by smugglers who promise employment in Libya so that they can earn the $800-$1,000 per person fee to cross the Mediterranean. However, some may be forced to work as prostitutes, laborers, and beggars to pay the debt to traffickers because jobs are not readily available.

¶4. (U) African, Libyan and European smugglers reportedly operate much like an organized crime syndicate using deception to entice would-be migrants from their country of origin. Hundreds are reported to have perished in the waters of the Mediterranean when their boats, supplied by smugglers, capsized or when they were left afloat in boats that were in poor condition. In 2004, there were reports of thousands of Africans arriving into Italy each month by boat.

Government Action

¶5. (U) Due to lack of information, the extent of the Libyan Government's efforts to fight trafficking is not clear, but it has begun joint and active collaborations with other affected countries, particularly Italy, indicating that Libya recognizes it has a problem and is making an effort to fight human trafficking. In June 2004, the Libyan Government organized a conference of regional governments that are facing similar problems. In October, the Government invited the International Organization for Migration to Tripoli to discuss migration management. The Government considers all foreigners to be economic migrants and does not stipulate whether they are refugees, asylum seekers or trafficked persons.

¶6. (U) In February 2004, the Libyan Government extradited a major Eritrean human trafficker to Italy, after the Italian Government issued a warrant for her arrest. In 2004, the Nigerian police handed over 20 of its nationals to Nigerian anti-trafficking authorities for further investigations and prosecution. The victims were on their way to Libya via the Niger Republic.

Areas for Improvement

¶7. (U) The Government of Libya, given the extensive trafficking within its territory, should conduct research to determine the extent of the problem and continue cooperating with neighboring countries. It should work with source and destination countries on anti-trafficking efforts by sharing information as well as tracking and evaluating its anti-trafficking efforts. Libya should similarly combine forces with the International Organization for Migration and NGOs active in the fight against human trafficking.

SUBJECT: QADHAFI SONS SQUABBLE OVER COCA COLA

REF: Tripoli 53

CLASSIFIED BY: Gregory L. Berry, Chief of Mission, USLO , Tripoli. REASON: 1.4 (b), (d)

¶1. (C) Summary: A lengthy standoff between the franchise-holder for Coca Cola-Libya, Ka'Mur Bottling Company-U.K., and two of Mu'ammar Qadhafi's sons, Mu'tassim and Mohammed, appears to have stabilized in the wake of a compromise agreement. The problem became public on December 28, 2005 as security troops controlled by Colonel Qadhafi's son Mu'tassim encamped at the Tripoli Coca-Cola plant, owned jointly by Ka'Mur Bottling Company and the Libyan Olympic Committee (LOC) through their joint venture, the Global Beverage Company (GBC). With the plant shut for more than three months, Colonel Qadhafi's daughter Aisha may have intervened to broker a compromise, according to which LOC would--at an unspecified future date--sell its shares in GBC to the Libyan Social Security Fund. Mu'tassim's men left the plant in late February, shortly after USLO sent a strongly-worded diplomatic note to the Ministry of Foreign Affairs expressing concern over the legality of the plant shutdown and urging a swift resolution to the conflict. Coca Cola's General Manager for Libya credits USLO support for helping keep the incident under control as Ka'Mur, GBC and Coca Cola worked their own channels. End Summary.

Long-standing Qadhafi Family Interests Background to Conflict

¶2. (C) In the late 1990's, Coca Cola distributed its product in Libya under the supervision of the Office of Foreign Asset Control through Al Fursan, a Libyan distributor. At the time, Al Fursan bought product from Coca Cola's plant in Tunisia on consignment and distributed through channels in Tripoli and Benghazi. Mu'tassim may or may not have been directly involved in linking Al Fursan with Coca Cola through Ka'Mur. What seems more likely is that Ka'Mur attempted to build Al Fursan into a partner while the U.S. embargo was still in effect, then severed the relationship when Al Fursan demanded a greater piece of the action, including rights to the franchise. Ka'Mur (whose name is a mixture of "Kawther" and "Murina", two embargo-era Libyan soft drinks) then created the joint-venture between Ka'Mur and LOC, GBC. According to Husni Bey, Chairman of the Husni Bey Group (HBG), Mu'tassim was indeed responsible for bringing Ka'Mur into Libya. (Note: HBG is the agent for U.S. consumer products manufacturer Procter & Gamble). Bey believes Mu'tassim shut the plant down as revenge for Mohammed's "takeover" of Ka'Mur while he (Mu'tassim) was in Egypt, exiled for his role in an act of "insubordination" against his father in the late 1990's.

¶3. (C) Immediately after the formation of GBC, Al Fursan filed suit against Ka'Mur and Coca Cola for breach of contract, and sent correspondence to Coca Cola International claiming that Ka'Mur had stolen the franchise from them. Ka'Mur then filed a counter-suit with the Libyan Court of Appeals, which it won. Al Fursan demanded damages for lost business as well as restitution of the franchise; the company apparently lost on both counts. Ka'Mur claims it prepared a counter claim for more than the amount demanded by Al Fursan, for materials it says Al-Fursan bought from them prior to the rupture but never settled. Both Bey and Azza Maghur, Ka'Mur's attorney in the counter-suit against Al Fursan and the sister of a close associate of Mohammed Qadhafi, say it is likely that Al Fursan made the initial overture to Mu'tassim after legal efforts against Ka'Mur failed. Both claim Al Fursan's lawyer, Ibrahim Legwell, fabricated allegations against Ka'Mur and inaccurately described the situation and possible consequences Mu'tassim (Note: Maghur showed Econoff documents supporting this claim. As an aside, Legwell and Reema 'Ali, his U.S.-based partner, have been aggressive in courting U.S. corporate clients, even as they denounce U.S. companies as "tools of imperialism").

Threats, Clashes and Interventions

¶4. (C) Abdul Galil Besher, Chairman of the Board of the Coca Cola Bottling Company of Egypt and a member of Ka'Mur's board, requested a meeting with COM on January 19 to discuss an "issue" related to the Tripoli bottling plant. Besher indicated that on December 28, two weeks after the plant began production, "two military cars carrying armed personnel without clear identification illegally broke into the facility, asked the employees to leave the premises and shut down the plant." Kamal Shahata, a member of Ka'Mur's Managing Committee, told USLO during a follow-on meeting two weeks later that during altercations with Mu'tassim's forces, one expatriate worker was slightly injured and some plant materials were destroyed. Early in the crisis, armed men allowed plant managers to enter the premises singly or in pairs, but then barred Ka'Mur and Coca Cola employees completely. In the following weeks, various individuals described by Shahata as "freelancers" attempted to extort shareholdings and/or cash in return for a resolution of the conflict. On February 7, anonymous callers threatened three key Coca Cola employees, all Jordanian nationals, with key Coca Cola employees, all Jordanian nationals, with "political problems" and direct bodily harm. Shehata indicated that Ka'Mur immediately filed complaints with the Shaabiyya (municipality) of Tripoli, the local police station as well as the equivalent of the District Attorney. Shehata and Besher complained that at no time did any Libyan authority offer a legal justification for the plant's shutdown. Shehata and Besher filed for "personal protection" with the Tripoli police and on February 8 visited Mohammed Qadhafi. They report Mohammed Qadhafi declined to get involved personally, yet encouraged Ka'Mur to do "everything within its power to resolve the matter according to Libyan law." Shehata returned to Tripoli the first week of February to meet with Rajab Shiglabu, Chairman of the Libyan Foreign Investment Board (LFIB), under whose authority Ka'Mur began operation in Libya. On February 9, Besher and Shehata requested USLO's assistance in taking Ka'Mur's case to higher-level authorities, stressing the implications for other current and prospective U.S. investors. He insisted the company would accept nothing less than a full and satisfactory legal settlement of the matter, as anything short would expose the company to further risks.

Rumors of Deal Brokering to Resolve Squabble

¶5. (C) On February 20, Econoff received a text message from Kamal Shehata, then abroad, saying that the Libyan authorities had given GBC the green light to re-start production. When Econoff met again with Shehata on February 24, he confirmed that the bottling plant re-opened and was operating at half-capacity. Shehata said that the restart followed a dramatic incident in which men loyal to Mu'tassim abducted and assaulted one of Mohammed Qadhafi's in-laws to "send a signal to The Engineer (Mohammed)." The incident allegedly took place at Mohammed's Gargaresh residence on the night of February 15. According to Shehata, Mu'tassim's associates arrived to Mohammed's residence and began shouting for him to come out. Receiving no response, they left in search of one of Mohammed's cousins, whom they stowed in the trunk of one of their cars and brought back to the residence. According to Shehata, one of Mohammed's associates, overhearing Mu'tassim raging earlier in the evening, called Ali Mehanna, the founder of Ka'Mur and one of GBC's board members, to urge him to "leave the city (Tripoli), immediately" as Mu'tassim's men were coming for him. "Because they could not find Ali (Mehanna), Mu'tassim's men grabbed Mohammed's cousin instead," said Shehata. Rumors circulated through the business community in the days following the alleged assault that Aisha Qadhafi had brokered a deal between the brothers, obligating Mohammed to sell LOC's shares in GBC, in return for Mu'tassim's leaving Ka'Mur and LBC alone. Shehata denies that Aisha was involved, instead crediting Mohammed with the decision to sell LOC's shares in GBC to the Social Security Fund as a means of lessening tensions with his brother. Shehata, who spoke with Econoff in hushed voice in the lobby of the Corinthia Hotel, said that although he had heard "stories" about doing business in Libya, he "never imagined" that what transpired was still possible here. "You know the movie, The Godfather? We've been living it for the last few months." On March 20, a mid-level manager at the Tripoli plant told Econ/Comm Assistant that Mu'tassim the night before assaulted one of Mohammed Qadhafi's cousins (on his Mother's side), a member of LOC, in an incident that he claimed is directly related to the plant closure. This individual, who spoke on condition of anonymity, said at that time the issue over Coca Cola remained "very much alive." On March 19, a mid-Level (Libyan) manager at the plant told the Econ/Comm Assistant that Mu'tassim had assaulted another of Mohammed Qadhafi's cousins, and that the "compromise" threatened to unravel.

Coca Cola Plant Operating at Capacity Since Mid-April

¶6. (C) Since mid-April, the Coca Cola plant is operating at pre-shutdown capacity. In a March 22 meeting, GBC's General Manager, Azem Yousef, looking visibly under stress, said that despite recent positive developments, he was "not optimistic" about a long-term solution to the dispute. He said the next milestone would be the transfer of shares from LOC to SSF, "hopefully this summer." At the moment, it is unclear who the losers and winners are in the so-called truce: Mohammed is to divest the shares of LOC, Ka'Mur apparently is being forced to accept a greater ownership stake in the company by the U.S. parent and Mu'tassim seems to have gotten nothing (which may be the source of his ongoing discontent). Coca Cola volunteered to participate as a sponsor of several USLO events in the recent Tripoli International Fair, held April 2-12. Yousef told Econoff that the only hope for a lasting solution rests with successful transfer of shares from LOC to SSF, perhaps in June. He added that as far as he was concerned, "Libya is not a place worth doing business." Shahata told Econoff in February that if Ka'Mur had known how much trouble Libya would be, the company would have never entered the market.

Advocacy Efforts on behalf of Coca Cola

¶7. (C) While unlawful seizure and shutdown of a foreign commercial enterprise in Libya is a violation of 1997 Law No. 5 for Foreign Investment, USLO was obliged to take into consideration when responding to Ka'Mur's original complaints the fact that Ka'Mur is not a U.S. entity. To protect the broad interests of a brand representing several million USD in annual sales to a U.S.-based company, USLO met Rajab Shiglabu, Chairman of the Libyan Foreign Investment Board (LFIB) February 20 and asked that the matter be resolved. Shiglabu offered assurances that the case would be mediated through the Libyan justice system and that any dispute would end soon. USLO also met with Under Secretary of the General People's Committe for Economy and Trade on March 16 and was told that "the matter should not concern the U.S.; the Libyan government will determine who should hold the licenses." Two days before the plant re-opened, USLO sent a strongly-worded diplomatic note expressing serious concern over the plant closure and noting the growing risk of severe damage to U.S. investor confidence in Libya. Yousef, in his March 22 meeting with Econoff, said he was "very grateful" for USLO assistance, indicated that the diplomatic note likely did have a positive effect, and did not think that USLO could push further at this time.

¶8. (C) Comment: The Coca Cola incident is a case study in the involvement of Qadhafi family members directly influencing the flow, pace and nature of economic activity. Family members squabble over personal financial interests with little regard to the possible impact on foreign investors or international public opinion. In this incident, LFIB proved ineffective in enforcing provisions of the 1996 investment law it is charged to implement. Given the number of people who knew of some aspect of this dispute and the plant closure, it is also noteworthy that the news was kept out of the press, other than for a brief mention in the on-line, "dissident" internet website Libya Al-Yowm. All parties involved -- including the foreign companies -- had an interest in keeping things quiet as long as there seemed a possibility of a near-term solution. The Coca Cola squabble is typical of the power struggles likely to continue as the Qadhafi children and other regime elite continue to define (or re-define) their respective spheres of commercial influence (see Septel). The lesson learned for future USG advocacy is that pressure has to be applied to a variety of different entities, given the diffuse nature of the Libyan Jamahiriya ("state of the masses"), and it may be difficult to access information given a cultural bias towards resolving conflict through personal intervention. End Comment.

Office, Department of State.
REASON: 1.4 (b), (d)

¶1.    (C)  SUMMARY. Qadhafi often speaks out publicly against government corruption, but the politically-connected elite has direct access to lucrative business deals.   This commercial access can easily be cut off when individuals fall out of favor.
The Qadhafi family and other Jamahiriya political favorites profit from being able to manipulate the multi-layered and regularly shifting dynamics of governance mechanisms in Libya.
They have strong interests in the oil and gas sector, telecommunications,  infrastructure development, hotels, media distribution, and consumer goods distribution.  The financial interests of Qadhafi and his key allies present both opportunites and challenges for reform efforts in Libya.  Any reform is likely to be cyclical over the long-term.   END SUMMARY

Saif's Call For Freedom of the Press Equals Net Profit

¶2. (C) As with many other regimes, politically-connected members of the Libyan elite have direct access to lucrative business contracts. Qadhafi often speaks out publicly against government corruption and sometimes dismisses officials who are caught in gross improprieties. In some cases, it appears that falling out of favor politically can trigger the discovery of improprieties in business dealings that might not otherwise come to public attention. As reported reftel, Saif al-Islam's One-Nine group will reportedly start marketing foreign publications in Libya in the near future. The Qadhafi Foundation, Saif's quasi-NGO, is hailing the move as an example of freedom and reform in the Jamahiriya. At the same time, it is another example of how the Qadhafi family and other Jamahiriya political favorites profit from being able to manipulate the multi-layered and regularly shifting dynamics of governance mechanisms in Libya. The Qadhafi family will clearly accrue significant financial gains from having exclusive rights to distribute foreign press in Libya, as well as effective censorship over any troubling articles that might appear. The One-Nine group gets it name from the September 1, 1969 anniversary of the Muammar Qadhafi-led military coup that overthrew King Idris.

Oil and Gas Revenues Channeled to Qadhafis and Political Elite

¶3. (S) All of the Qadhafi children and favorites are supposed to have income streams from the National Oil Company and oil services subsidiaries. Saif is involved in oil services through One-Nine Petroleum and other Qadhafi family members and associates are believed to have large financial stakes in the Libyan Tamoil oil marketing company based in Europe and Oil Invest. AbdelMagid al-Mansuri, the former "director" of One-Nine Petroleum, was responsible for the ill-executed "U.S.-Libya Economic Forum" held at the Corinthia Hotel December 2004. The Forum was viewed as a blatant attempt to tie up lucrative percentage deals for Libyan elites looking for representative relationships with U.S. companies. During 2004, the internet-based publication Libya al-Yown distributed information tracing a large number of sweetheart deals to One-Nine's Oil and Gas division, as well as unnamed oil service companies in Scotland, home to a well-connected Libyan expatriate community. It is believed that millions of dollars are distributed to politically connected Libyans and Libyan expatriates via the oil services companies. Econoff met with al-Mansuri, who was publicly chastised by Saif during the December 2004 conference, in February 2006 and the former "director" was looking for new employment after the bungled deal making.

Aisha Competes with Saif on Charitable Activities and Broad Commercial Interests

¶4. (C) Dr. Aisha Muammar Al-Qadhafi, General Secretary of the Wa'atassemo Charity Society, is patron of the December 4-7, 2006 Infrastructure Libya: The International Exhibition and Forum for Libya's Infrastructure and Economic Development implemented by the UK conference organizer Montgomery and Associates. Also listed as cooperating organizations are the General People's Committee for Planning, the General Board of Infrastructure and Urban Development, and the Inspector General of Housing and Utilities. At the same time, there will be a U.S.-Libya Oil, Gas and Energy Exhibition and Forum at the same International Fairgrounds, also under Wa'atassemo sponsorship, and coordinated by U.S. company Nathan and Associates. Until recently, Aisha has been in the public eye based on charitable activities, sponsoring human rightsseminars and the situation in Iraq (with a distinct focus on the negative effects of the presence of U.S. and foreign troops), signing up for the international advisory board for Saddam Hussein's defense strategy, and promoting social welfare for women and children. She now appears to be branching out into areas that will give her more direct connections with the energy and construction sectors, especially since the government has announced that housing development will the major focus of the 2006 budget distributions. Nasser Nageh, a member of the Libyan Business Council and a Wa'atassemo event coordinator (also formerly an active member of a Revolutionary Committee) said that Aisha was actively looking to branch out into other areas, perhaps because of her recent marriage to a Qadhaf al-Dam with additional business interests. Aisha is also reported to have financial interests in the private St. James Clinic of Tripoli, one of the two most trustworthy medical facilities that supplement the unreliable health care available through public facilities. In addition to health care management and referrals to hospitals to Malta and elsewhere in Europe, the clinic has an extensive aesthetic surgery practice.

¶5. (C) The recent controversy over the Coca Cola plant in Tripoli also highlighted Qadhafi family involvement in commercial enterprise. While three different sons Saadi, Mohammed and Mutassim, were all rumored to be fighting at different points over who had the right to the representative license, the dispute was supposedly argued before the courts and resolved through mediation. The very twisted tale of the Coke franchise, reported in Tripoli 53, continues to confound the local business and diplomatic community attempts to ascertain exactly what interests are in play. One well-connected consumer goods distributor said that Qadhafi's son Mutassim was involved in setting-up the Coca-Cola franchise held by the Egyptian Ka'Mur group during the late 1990s. Some rumor that Mutassim was linked with a coup attempt around 2001 and informally exiled to Europe and Egypt, only allowed to return to Tripoli for short trips to visit his mother. Supposedly, Mutassim lost control of many of his personal Libyan business interests during the period of 2001 to 2005 when his brothers took advantage of his absence to put in place their own partnerships. Mutassim was recently spotted by Pol/Econ Chief arriving on a British Air flight at Tripoli International Airport, greeted by a small group of well wishers and protocol assistants with bouquets of flowers, then whisked off to the VIP arrivals lounge and into his vehicles without passing through customs or immigration. Qadhafi son Mohammed heads the Libyan Olympic Committee that now owns 40% of the Libyan Beverage Company, currently the Libyan joint venture Coca-Cola franchisee. The British Ambassador to Libya reported his sources attributed the resolution to a deal whereby Mohammed Al-Qadhafi was prevailed upon to relinquish his/Libyan Olympic Committee's share of the joint venture and sign it over to the Libyan Pensions Fund. Another Ambassador chimed in that he heard it was sister Aisha Al-Qadhafi who mediated the dispute between the two brothers and got Mohammed out of the soda business. If Libyan government officials are asked about the Coca Cola case, the standard response is that the government was making sure that all the proper licenses and registrations were in place.

Telecommunications Controlled by Mohammed

¶6. (S) Mohammed, who has plenty to keep him busy through his control of the General Post and Telecommunications Committee, has major input over any telecomm or internet service. Frequent USLO requests over the last two years to meet with the GPTC have been ignored by the Libyan government, even requests for meetings with senior U.S. officials and Congressional delegations. Several U.S. companies are actively pursuing contracts to provide a much-needed upgrade to the local telecommunications network, but the Libyan government rejects any trade promotion activities for telecom through official government channels. Based on Colonel Qadhafi's experience overthrowing King Idris and the recognized importance of controlling radio broadcasts in 1969, and the role of mobile phone networking during the 2006 Benghazi riots, the family would definitely want to preserve its strong control over the telecom sector.

New City Planned by Saadi

¶7. (S) Saadi is also branching out into infrastructure development. His functionaries contacted USLO public affairs section for publications in Arabic language on economic and commercial issues. Saadi's staff then notified USLO that he planned to establish "a new city in the west of the country, in the area between Zwara and the Libyan-Tunisian border. The new city will be under the management and supervision of the Engineer al-Saadi al-Qadhafi." As Saadi's staffers frame the interest, "he wants information on how the U.S. can help with this matter." That general area of coastline has an island that has been slated for tourist development in the last couple years without any subsequent action, perhaps because a large oil processing facility mars the view from the island, and also because outside investors can not get liquor licenses for hotels populated by foreign tourists. The Qadhafi family is already in the tourism business through the large percentage of ownership in the Bab Africa Corinthia Hotel. Local business contacts claim the Qadhafi joint partnership with the Maltese Corinthia Group was the linchpin in acquiring prime real estate for the hotel venture. Saadi also keeps busy with his soccer teams, the Olympic Committee and his miltary career, as noted in the Coke dispute, sometimes using troops under his control to impact business deals.

Consumer Goods Distribution Controlled by Few Family Holding Groups

¶8. (C) Food distribution is also reportedly controlled by only four or five politically-connected families. There are no large western-style food markets in Libya. There is small western-style market in Tripoli and some smaller shops in the city that carry more imported items, but most of the neighborhood shops go to the distribution warehouses controlled by the people with strong government ties. The consumer products distribution are largely controlled by three merchants, including the Husni Bey Group, a diversified holding company that runs a range of operations under the direction of Husni Bey's children. Bey does not characterize his company as politically well-connected, but has learned to expand operations through key alliances and he knows how to work the system to his benefit. More importantly, he knows how to recover when his businesses get caught up in the financial interests of the more connected political elite. The Akida Group, run by the Akak family, is rumored to have close ties to the ruling regime and it runs a virtual monopoly over air conditioning equipment, heating units, and small appliances as the local LG agent.

¶9. (C) The government attempts during the 80s to instigate large socialist-style department stores failed; the shells of the state enterprises sit empty around Tripoli and other Libyan cities. (At least one is rumored to soon be rehabilitated as a modern shopping mall for privately owned stores.) Starting in modern shopping mall for privately owned stores.) Starting in the mid 90s, people were once again allowed to open small businesses. During Eid holidays, Libyan families buy new clothing to wear during the celebration and treat children to toys and sweets from small stores. The men tend to wear traditional embroidered wool robes produced locally or in Egypt or Syria, while women may indulge in new fashions imported from European or Asian manufacturers. During the January 2006 Eid, local women complained that the clothing variety available in the local shops was limited. Rumors circulating in Tripoli claimed that Qadhafi's second wife, as well as his daughter Aisha, own or have financial interests in many of the new clothing stores opened in the post-sanctions era. The rumors also say that Qadhafi's wife told the customs authorities to release only the shipments consigned to her stores. The other clothing stores did not get their shipments cleared from customs until after the holiday shopping spree had ended. Most of the garments in local stores are imported from China, Malaysia and India. Small boutiques have a limited supply of expensive goods imported from Europe, and these enterprises in particular seem to have the financial backing of people with strong ties to the ruling elite.

Qadhafi Incorporated Lifestyle

¶10. (C) Qadhafi himself keeps a low profile in Tripoli. The Bab al-Azizia compound has facilities for banquets and other public events, but it is not lavish in any way compared with the ostentation of the Gulf oil state families or Hariri clan. Qadhafi's wife travels by chartered jet in Libya, with a motorcade of Mercedes waiting to pick her up at the airport and take her to the destination, but her movements are limited and discrete. She hosted a banquet for diplomatic women in the Bab al-Azizia compound on the occasion of the al-Fatah (Revolution) holiday in September that was festive but not extravagant. Since the family keeps a tight control on the media and most of the Qadhafi children spending excesses take place outside Libya, there is not much public reaction to the coffers of Qadhafi Inc. Compared to egregious pillaging of State coffers elsewhere in Africa, or the lavish spending of Gulf Arabs, the Libyans don't see much to complain about in their leader's lifestyle, as long as he does a good job of making sure other people get a piece of the pie. And when Libyans do complain, they are removed from access to financial rewards.

Comment

¶11. (S) The financial interests of Qadhafi and his key allies present opportunites and challenges for reform efforts in Libya. At a minimum, it seems safe to say that reform will have its ups and downs over the long-term, as individual, regime and national interests come into play. If and when foreign publications do become available in Libya, there will be a financial gain for Saif. At the same time, the family will still have control over monitoring what information is released to the public. Over the long term, demand for more outside information would inevitably create pressure for open access and more press freedom. Similarly, Libya has a stated commitment to moving forward with WTO accession and joining international financial organizations. But it is doing so on its own timetable, a slow timetable. Reported septel, the General People's Congress just passed in April 2006 new agency and representation rules that run counter to WTO principles. While the General General People's Committee for Economy and Trade has working groups actively revising legislation to prepare for WTO accession, it will take some time to reconcile all the different structures of the Jamahiriya government (translation: "State of the Masses"). Libyan government officials have been telling P/E Chief for 10 months that the WTO accession will be presented in Geneva "in a few weeks, that only the translation has to be finished." Institutional development is very primitive and the Libyans have a cultural and social preference for elements of distributive economy, placing great value on financial rewards that flow from affiliation with regime leadership, security services etc. There was a shipment of BMWs delivered to the government in early 2006, for example, and it seems likely that the young men driving them around town got the vehicles "distributed" through their affilation with different government entities. With regard to reform partnership efforts, there are the greatest opportunities to promote positive change by engaging in the Central Bank's efforts to establish banking controls and standards, partnering with the General People's Committee for Manpower and Training on civil service reform, and cooperating with the General People's Committee for Economy and Trade in its WTO accession efforts.

Libyan market under the current restrictions," was the assessment of the bank officer manager. Banks in Libya are simply custodians of salary payments; they are not able to fulfill most of the banking services. For example, a bank earns only 1.75% per annum on funds placed at the Central Bank. The interest doesn't even cover the expense of bank operations given the bloated employment rolls.
He estimated that more than 8000 families relied on salary payments from the commercial banks. In the case of Sahara Bank, it might currently have 3000 employees, but if run efficiently by professional managers, could operate with fewer than 1000 staff members. Queried about the Secretary of the General People's Committee for Finance (Finance Minister) position that foreign bank participation had to be delayed unless there were assurances the branches in remote locations of Libya would remain open, the banker responded, "what is the point of keeping those branches open when no services are offered? People would be better off buying gold that might appreciate in value since they earn so little interest on deposits. Money might as well be stuffed under the mattress." Regarding the sale of the Sahara Bank underway for a year, he said that at 10 dinars per share, the price was overstated and not a good value.

BANKING SUPERVISION LAGS IN PRACTICE

¶3. (C) Asked about anti-money laundering efforts in Libya, he said that banks were required to submit regular reports to their head offices, which in turn reported to the Central Bank. The weak link in the chain was implementation by poorly trained and poorly paid staff. While the international community has been developing standards and procedures, Libya has been trapped in the past and required total regeneration. He estimated the banking sector is at least 30 years behind. In his view, the effectiveness of attempts to freeze suspect accounts would always be hampered by innate problems with names, spellings and birthdates in the Arabic speaking world. He also believed that, despite the new AML law, there were still not enough safeguards in the system. He noted the ease of evading a blocking order through slight variations in the names on an account or through tip-offs from bank staff. Many bank personnel were very uncomfortable with the idea of reporting on clients.

¶4. (C) In terms of informal money exchange, he said that the gold souk was the best form of hawala and also the most accurate predictor of exchange rate levels. People used the gold merchants to transfer money out of Libya for both legitimate and illegitimate transactions. In general, Libyans prefer to "avoid the eyes of the government" and make informal payments whenever possible. He stressed the importance of not attracting attention to oneself - inevitably someone else decides they deserve a cut of the action or can set up a competing enterprise.

CONTRADICTORY, COMPLICATED POLICIES

¶5. (C) The Libyan government tried last year to inject more liquidity into the economy by reducing the interest rate on money banks deposited at the Central Bank to 1.75%. The Government hoped that the lower rates would force banks to offer more attractive financing to private businesses and thereby encourage private sector development. However, at the same time, the Central Bank required that private businesses pledge collateral worth 125% of the loan's face value in order to secure a loan. The collateral rule is extremely difficult for most borrowers to meet. As an example, he cited a company that had acquired land worth $2 million dinars and imported millions of dinars worth of equipment, but the Libyan banks refused to provide any loans to expand and develop the business because of the 125 percent collateral rule, combined with many other regulatory burdens.

¶6. (C) In his estimation, Libyans don't take risk because they don't trust the government. There have been too many cases of favoritism in business deals and government rulings. He said, "the Bedouin mentality is still very strong. The tribal system predominates. Family ties and connections are a primary consideration in every decision. Deep seated priorities are consideration in every decision. Deep seated priorities are access to water and livestock survival - there are parallels to modern business decisions." In addition, there is a deep seated distrust of the government and the reform effort. People know that the reform effort is being "managed" by Saif al-Islam and don't think that it will bring any real benefit to the public. They want assurances that their government salaries and subsidized goods and services will continue indefinitely. They have a tremendous sense of entitlement and deep seated belief that the government owes them a regular salary for minimal work. He also described that he sees as deep-seated resentment towards Libya's neighbors, especially Egypt and Tunisia. Libyans were forced to travel during sanctions and had bad experiences with border crossings, customs formalities. They felt disrespect from their neighbors and humiliation. There was particular resentment of smuggling rings that profited from Libya's isolation.

CREATIVE CASH TRANSFER BY LAUNCHING SUBSIDIZED TRACTORS

¶7. (C) In terms of smuggling, though, the Libyans seem equally creative at finding ways to get items across borders. At one point, the Libyan government was attempting to encourage agricultural production by giving subsidized tractors to farmers. The resourceful farmers made deals with smuggling rings on the other side of the border to take possession of the tractors in return for cash payments. In order to make the exchange without going through customs controls, the farmers would take the subsidized tractors with a full tank of subsidized petrol to a remote field, rig the machine so it would continue for miles in a straight line, and then launch the unmanned equipment in the direction of the border. The conspirators on the other side would eventually recover the tractor somewhere in Tunisia or Egypt and deliver cash back later. In the unlikely event a roving border patrol encountered the unmanned tractor, everyone involved had some degree of deniability: "I lost my tractor."

HOPE IS ON THE HORIZON

8. (C) A McKinsey employee stopped by the Embassy to inform us that they have been hired by an individual, "who can not be named," to prepare a comprehensive strategy for implementing bank privatization in Libya. McKinsey planned to spend a week interviewing all the Libyan bank officials, both state and private, then return to Tripoli in several weeks for a second round of meetings after the initial assessment. McKinsey's mandate is to come up with a plan that can get foreign banks into Libya in the near term, while at the same time formulating a plan for dealing with the state banks and their unwieldy payrolls of public employees as well as their nonperforming loans.

¶9. (C) Embassy Comment. It is just another example of the "state of the masses" that the Jamahiriya is not able to reach consensus within its many committee structures to move forward with a banking privatization plan on its own, or even to reach consensus to hire experts to make recommendations. Similar to the National Economic Strategy funded by Saif al-Islam, launched with great acclaim, but still without any activity associated with it, the challenge will be getting the McKinsey bank privatization plans actually implemented.

SUBJECT: VOLUNTARY VISITOR PROGRAM TO INCREASE LIBYAN TRAINING CAPACITY IN THE WATER SECTOR

¶1.       SUMMARY: PAs tripoli requests a two-week voluntary visitor study tour with escort interpreter(s) in the U.S. for a small group of decision makers in Libya's water sector to introduce them to a range of U.S. government, ACADEMIC and professional water institutions and organizations.

¶2. BACKGROUND/justification: The Government of Libya has identified water management as one of its key strategic priorities. In October 2004, the U.S. and UK organized a water management and desalination workshop under the auspices of the Scientist Engagement program. That workshop culminated in the development of cooperative projects to help Libya improve its capacity in seawater desalination, impaired water treatment, groundwater management, and analytical water chemistry. In July 2005, Libyan Secretary of the General People's Committee for Manpower, Training, and Employment Matug Mohamed Matug expressed interest in expanding U.S.-Libya cooperation in the water sector. In response, USG officials held additional detailed discussions with Libyan water officials and experts and developed a joint water action plan that will guide U.S.-Libya water cooperation over the next 18 months. While Libya has a core cadre of competent water experts, those experts have worked under relatively isolated conditions over the last two decades and need updated training in current water science and engineering techniques and applications. This program is designed to introduce a small group (8-10 participants) of decision makers in Libya's water sector to a range of U.S. government, academic, and professional water institutions and organizations that would help inform the development of a Libyan national water training needs assessment and the establishment of Libyan training institutions in the water sector. The program also will help expand our bilateral relationship with Libya by promoting further U.S.-Libya cooperation.

¶3. Overview: Our vision for the program is a two week study tour that will demonstrate how the United States trains its professional corps of water experts. Within the U.S., water training is carried out by federal, state, and local government agencies; public and private universities; and professional associations. The Libyan participants will meet with representatives from these groups. The U.S. institutions will explain and discuss their short-, medium-, and long-term training needs; and how they determine and meet those needs.

¶4. Participants: The group should include Libyan decision makers and technical experts from government agencies involved in water training, an academic water expert, and an expert from a professional water association, if one exists. We will draw of the following agencies and institutions:

General People's Committee for Manpower, Training, and Employment

National Bureau of Research and Development

General Water Authority

Renewable Energy and Water Desalination Research Center

Great Man Made River Authority

General Environment Authority

Agriculture Authority

Planning Committee

Al Fatah University

¶5. Schedule: Notionally, the schedule would include stops in Washington DC, Chicago, Denver, and northern California (probably the Sacramento area), starting on a Monday as follows:

Days 1, 2, and AM of 3 - Meetings in DC

Department of State

Department of the Interior

Geological Survey

Bureau of Reclamation

Department of Agriculture

Foreign Agriculture Service
Agricultural Research Service

Army Corps of Engineers

Water Research Institute

Environmental Protection Agency

American Society of Civil Engineers

Water Environment Federation

PM of Day 3 - Fly to Chicago

Days 4 and 5 - In Chicago

Argonne National Laboratory Integrated Water Management Group

Purdue University-Calumet Water Institute

Metropolitan Water and Reclamation District of Chicago

Environmental Protection Agency

Days 6 and 7 - Weekend - Fly to Denver

Days 8 and 9 - In Denver

Geological Survey Training Center

Bureau of Reclamation

Colorado State University

American Water Works Association

AM of Day 10 - Fly to California

PM of Day 10, and Days 11 and 12 - In California

California Dept of Water Resources

University of California at Davis

Lawrence Livermore National Laboratory

Day 13 and 14 - Weekend - Fly to DC for onward trip to Libya

¶6. Biodata of participants will be sent septels.

¶1. (C) SUMMARY: On July 11, 2006, Deputy Secretary of Commerce David Sampson, accompanied by DCM met with Taher Sarkez, the Under Secretary of the General People's Committee for Economy and Trade (Economics Ministry). Looking forward, Sarkez hoped that more U.S. companies would register in Libya, especially in the healthcare and infrastructure development fields. Overall, Libya requested more training and technical assistance. Referring to his own fondly-remembered travel experiences in the U.S., he called for more exchange visits and increased tourism on both sides, especially professional and educational exchanges. His staff also shared information about the new commercial agency law and company registration process. END SUMMARY.

LIBYA'S REFORM PLANS

¶2. (U) Under Secretary for the General People's Committee for Economy and Trade (Economics Ministry), Taher Sarkez, welcomed Deputy Secretary of Commerce David Sampson to Libya and presented a broad overview of Libya's economic strategy. He said the General People's Committee for Economy and Trade (GPCET) had pursued improved relations between our two countries for a long time and now hoped to stress trade opportunities. He said Libya was trying to develop its private sector and attract foreign investment, adding that a free trade zone was announced this year, the stock market was in the planning stages and an export board was operational. He claimed that Libya was in the final stages of preparing a memorandum requesting WTO membership. Looking forward, he hoped that more U.S. companies would register in Libya, especially in the healthcare and infrastructure development fields. Overall, Libya requested more training and technical assistance. Referring to his own fondly-remembered travel experiences in the U.S., he called for more exchange visits and increased tourism on both sides, especially professional and educational exchanges.

U.S. CALLS FOR OPENNESS AND TRANSPARENCY

¶3. (C) Deputy Secretary Sampson said he would focus on demonstrable activities resulting from the meetings. He thanked Libya for its strategic, significant steps and hoped that his visit would lead to expanded prosperity for both countries. Noting the Libyan aim to diversify beyond the oil sector, Deputy Secretary Sampson called for more commercial and legal transparency in the Libyan system that would be conducive to attracting investment and expanding opportunity. He described small business expansion as the engine of growth for the U.S. economy and advised the Libyans that business incubators and government contracting access for small business were important programs. He called for resolution of any difficulties with visa issuances on both sides to help open new markets.

¶4. (C) Since the free flow of trade and investment is critical to economic development, Deputy Secretary Sampson offered cooperation on Libya's planned WTO accession and noted that export controls would gradually be eased. At the same time, he urged Libya to remove any prohibitive boycott language from contracts. He also announced that export licenses were granted for Boeing aircraft purchased by Buraq Air, and that he hoped to see more purchases of U.S. aircraft by Libya in the future.

¶5. (U) The head of the Libyan Foreign Investment Board, Rajab Shigbalu, reviewed some of the many agreements Libya signed with other countries. Referring to the proposed OPIC agreement pending since last year, he said any proposed agreements offer reciprocal treatment to both parties. Pointing out that the OPIC draft did not offer any protection for Libyan funds in the U.S., he did not offer any indication that the proposal might move forward.

¶6. (U) A representative of the Libyan Export Promotion Board, established one month ago, struck a positive note saying, "our first call was from a businessman exporting to the U.S." Emphasizing that Libya needed to export more than oil to gain hard currency he said, "Libya suffers from Dutch Disease," and that he sought contact with the U.S. Department of Commerce to plan joint events or sign a cooperative memorandum. He also requested training and technical assistance. Deputy Secretary Sampson advised that the U.S. National Export Strategy might serve as a helpful template for new Board's efforts.

¶7. (U) Encouraging more U.S. businesses to open in Libya, the commercial registration manager said that all citizens could start companies, as opposed to former practices that limited fields of activity. Mr. Daouki said that 620 foreign companies were registered in Libya specializing in construction, oil, communications, and medical services. He claimed that registration files could be processed in ten days. In addition, he said the new commercial agencies law, for which implementing regulations are being determined by the General People's Congress, was meant to expand opportunity. Giving more detail, he said 60 percent of the companies could be owned by the "founders" while 40 percent of the company had to be open to public participation. The goal was to broaden participation by all Libyans in commercial activities since there was a perception that some people with special connections dominated the import market in the past. "Companies requiring significant capital to build showrooms, warehouses, workshops, and equipment must provide a way for all Libyans to invest in the enterprises," said Daouki. Libya doesn't want individuals to import expensive equipment without ensuring the associated agency can provide support and maintenance over the long-term. In the GPCET analysis, company registrations were low because people didn't have the capital required. It is trying to put in place legislative mechanisms and regulations to distribute work and opportunity equally. Daouki noted that there was a "grace period" until August 17 for existing agents to legalize their operations under the new regulations. "During the sanctions period," Daouki said, "non-Libyans, especially Egyptians, Tunisians, and Maltese exercised agency control and this is now prohibited under Libyan law."

¶8. (U) Deputy Secretary Sampson agreed to return to the GPCET on July 13 for an informal question and answer session with the Libyan press to expand on plans for future cooperation. He also invited Under Secretary Sarkez for a reciprocal visit at the Department of Commerce in the U.S.

¶9. (U) The U.S. meeting participants included:

Dr. David Sampson, Deputy Secretary of the Department of Commerce
Ms. Aimee Strudwick, Chief of Staff to the Deputy Secretary of Commerce
Ethan Goldrich, DCM
Elizabeth Fritschle, Pol/Econ Chief

The Libyan Participants included:

Taher Sarkez, Under Secretary of the General People's Committee for Economy and Trade
Milaud Daouki, Manager of Commercial Registration

Mohammed Hassan Ayyab, Americas Desk Officer at the General People's Committee for Foreign Liaison
Rajab Shiglabu, Secretary of the Libyan Foreign Investment Board

¶1. (C) Summary and Comment: Libyans with whom we are in contact have no sympathy for Hizballah, but are angry about the ongoing Israeli attacks in Lebanon and Gaza. After initially discouraging public demonstrations, the government has allowed a few carefully orchestrated and tightly controlled events to take place. Libyan public statements have been muted and aimed more at criticizing fellow Arab states than anyone else. Comment: In this opaque society, the wishes and anxieties of the majority of Libyans are often difficult to gauge. However, Libyans seldom miss an opportunity under any circumstances to express their opposition to U.S. policy on Israel and the Palestinians. Under the present dramatic circumstances in the region -- to judge from what we are told by Libyan officials, businesspeople, students and others -- that opposition is fueling intense popular anger and frustration, which does not have much meaningful political outlet. Libyan officials tell us they are paying a price in domestic and international public opinion for the relatively low profile they are maintaining during the Israeli operation. They hope we have taken note that they are avoiding undue criticism of the U.S. during the crisis. End Summary and Comment.

¶2. (C) Libyans we've encountered have little sympathy for Hizballah, whom they blame for creating a problem that has distracted world attention from Gaza, but they are angry at the cost in lives and property of the Israeli operation in Lebanon. Satellite dishes are ubiquitous in Libya and the images of dead and wounded tend to be far more vivid than what appears on western television. The Libyan government is carefully managing local reaction. The Government prevented demonstrations July 14, instead channeling people's energy into mosque prayers and sermons. A small demonstration was held at the Palestinian Embassy July 16. On Friday July 21 the conflict was again discussed in the Friday sermons and the government carefully orchestrated protests in Tripoli, Sebha and Garian as a controlled outlet.

¶3. (C) Embassy locally-employed staff in the vicinity of Tripoli's Green Square reported that Friday, July 21st, 2006, by 1425 hours, shortly after lunch time Friday prayer, the Qadhafi Foundation for Development's "Oppressed on Earth Society" organized a demonstration zone supplied with one fire brigade truck, four ambulance vehicles, six towing vehicles and numerous other ISO vehicles and personnel. In addition, a helicopter hovered over the area for the duration of the demonstration, along with heavy presence of Public Security troops outside UN facilities, the Embassies of Palestine and Lebanon and near the Peoples Congress Building at Liberty Square.

¶4. (C) Initially about 450 demonstrators gathered from the nearby Mosques in Green Square, known before the Qadhafi-led revolution as "Martys Square." After 1430 hours, more demonstrators arrived by bus from cities and villages ithi a 120mile r ius of Tripoli. Each busload of demonstrators had preprinted signs designating what Peoples Committee they represented. The demonstrators were also supplied with Libyan, Lebanese and Palestinian flags. There were also preprinted signs, "please give blood," and "stop war in Lebanon and Palestine." By 1445 approximately 1500 to 2000 demonstrators were in Green Square, half estimated to be young, between 15 to 24 years old and the other half in their 30s and 40s. About 10 percent of the demonstrators were young girls, from 16 to 20 years old. At 1505 the demonstrators start moving to local UN offices, at 1520 they arrived at UN facility where they stayed until 1605 and then departed by bus.

¶5. (C) The official Jamahiriya News Agency reported that demonstrations were also organized in Gharian and Sebha. According to the government-run news website, "the demonstrators

According to the government run news website, "the demonstrators expressed in their slogans their condemnation and denunciation of the international community ignorance with its international institutions of the crimes perpetrated daily against children, women, and elderly in Palestine and Lebanon. They called on the lively force, people's activists, civil society and student and youth organizations to move using all means in defense of the Lebanese and Palestinian people and use pressure to stop the Israeli aggression." (Embassy Comment: Given the government-organized demonstrations in Benghazi that got out of control with tragic results in February, it does not appear that any protests were allowed in Benghazi last week. End Comment.)

¶6. (U) In addition, the Social People's Leadership in Great Jamahiriya issued a statement that "the worsening conditions of the current Arab state created by the Official Arab Regimes make the Arab Rulers bury their faces in dust in order not to see the anniversary of this revolution that passes at this bad times in the history of the Arabs." It continued, "what is going on in Lebanon, Iraq and Palestine is clear proof that the Arabs are under slow death while Arab Rulers sit on Ruins." (Embassy Comment: This is yet another jibe at the Saudis and other Gulf Arab rulers. End Comment.)

¶7. (U) The Libyan local press also highlighted that Palestinian president Mahmud Abbas phoned "the leader of the revolution" Friday night July 20 to "express gratitude to the leader for supporting the Palestinian people and their legitimate rights and for the support of the Libyan people to their Palestinian brothers."

¶8. (C) Libyan officials tell us they are paying a price in domestic and international public opinion for the relatively low profile they are maintaining during the Israeli operation. They hope we have taken note that they are avoiding undue criticism of the U.S. during the crisis.

¶9. (U) Qadhafi's son, Saif al-Islam, head of the Qadhafi International Charitable Foundation, also issued a public statement, "It is with great agony and concern that I followed the dramatic sad events going on in Lebanon and the cruelty of the Israeli aggression on both the Lebanese and Palestinian peoples amid international and Arab disgraceful abandonment." The additional text of the statement follows:

TEXT OF SAIF AL-ISLAM STATEMENT

On the occasion of the rumors relating to the calls to convene an Arab summit on the issue, we would like to tell the Arab leaders to dismiss the idea of convening such a summit and to save face, since their summit in case it convened will not be of any good, and will not be able to stop the tears, the blood, or the destruction going on in Lebanon and Palestine, and we think that the alternative to verbal support is to call for the following:

1- To convene an Arab summit, one whose results should be agreed upon in advance, and where the outcome would be to transfer the oil windfall resulting from rise of oil prices stemming from the shedding of Lebanese and Palestinian blood, or at least a part of it, to support both peoples materially.

2- To grant Lebanon the material and moral support it needs to strengthen its defensive capabilities so as to enable it to defend its land and people.

3- The Arabs have to legitimate the resistance in Lebanon and acknowledge it in view to back it politically and morally both internally and externally.

Only in such a case will the meeting be meaningful, and the summit fruitful, but any other buffoonery speeches should be avoided, and it would be better for everyone to stay home and watch the sad news on TV.

In light of these dramatic situations, Gaddafi Development Foundation, and the Libyan Red Crescent will fly air caravans to deliver food and health relief, and to install field hospitals in defiance to the Israeli barbaric air force. The GDF will also provide help to those who are willing to volunteer to help their brothers the Lebanese, and to transfer any humanitarian aids.

END TEXT OF SAIF AL-ISLAM STATEMENT

¶10. (C) Comment: End Comment.

¶1. (C) EUCOM J-5 MG Scott Gration became the first American general officer to visit Libya in over a quarter of a century during a low key July 8-12 visit. His visit was hosted by MG Ahmed Mahmoud Az-Zway, the nominal head of the Staff College and Bureau of Technical Coordination, and de facto Libyan military point man for dealing with the USA (including on the WMD issues). He also met with MG Riffi Sharifi, the head of the Air Force, Dr. Ahmed Fituri, the MFA U/S for American Affairs, and paid a site visit to the Libyan Naval Academy, the American cemetery, and the ruins of Leptis Magna.

¶2. (C) Uppermost on the Libyan agenda were the eight C-130's in Georgia and the C-130's in Libya. The Libyans want both sets assessed and if possible refurbished for Libya's use. The Libyans are also interested in refurbishing CH-47 helicopters, which they bought from the Italian company Augusta. Az-Zway also asked about help from the U.S. in setting up English language labs, a battle simulation center and improving Libya's coastal, border and air defense systems.

¶3. (C) MG Gration stressed a "crawl, walk, run" approach in which we should first develop a common understanding and vision, then start exchanges and non-lethal cooperation and then joint inter-operability. He explained where things stood on licensing an assessment of the C-130's in Georgia and thought a U.S. military team might be able to do an assessment of the planes in Libya. He also thought an assessment of the CH-47's might be possible, but pointed out logistical difficulties in getting spare parts to repair these older aircraft. He suggested we start with some professional training at NDU, and then technical training. He also invited Az-Zwayy to visit EUCOM. Az-Zwayy responded that he was more interested in visiting the U.S. Gration told post these early stages of the relationship should be handled through field grade mil-mil contacts. He would not recommend additional general officer visits until before the end of the year.

formalize the defense relationship. Gration thought formalized annual or biannual meetings might be in order. They did not discuss the actual MOU text. They did sign a set of minutes summarizing what was discussed. (Both texts faxed to State NEA/MAG.)

¶5. (C) This message was cleared with EUCOM J5.

¶1. (C) Summary: Libyan MFA U/S Obeidi called in the P-5 Ambassadors and COM's July 31 to condemn the Israeli bombing in Qana and to call for an immediate ceasefire UNSCR. CDA responded by citing the Secretary's statement about an emerging consensus on the necessary elements of a ceasefire and lasting settlement. UK Ambassador said a UNSCR should address root causes of the conflict. French Ambassador said France was working for an immediate ceasefire. End Summary.

¶2. (C) General People's Committee for Foreign Liaison and International Cooperation (MFA) Under Secretary for European Affairs (and Qadhafi advisor) Abdelati Al-Obeidi summoned the P-5 Ambassadors and Chiefs of Mission to hear Libya's urgent call for a ceasefire in Lebanon. Al-Obeidi was sent up from the alternate capital in Sirte, specially to deliver the demarche. He did so in two separate meetings with 1) the Russians and Chinese and 2) the U.S., UK and France.

¶3. (C) In our meeting, Al-Obeidi said that the Libyan Arab Jamahiriyya condemns the attack against civilians in Qana. He said there is no defense and no explanation under international law for what can only be seen as an act of state terrorism. He argued that the kidnapping of two soldiers does not justify the destruction of a country and its infrastructure and the killing of women and children. He noted that many countries have already condemned the attack and he requested an international investigation and a trial of the perpetrators. Targeting Hizballah fighters might have been expected, but not the targeting of infrastructure and civilians.

¶4. (C) He criticized the UN Security Council for failing to pass a resolution July 30 on the situation in Lebanon and for failing to condemn the killing of the four UN peacekeepers. He said the SC Presidential Statement was inadequate. The UNSC must take firm action to impose a ceasefire on both sides, including Hezbollah, he said. It is wrong to say that the time is not yet right for a ceasefire, when civilians are being killed, he added. "When will the time be right? After Lebanon is destroyed and all the civilians are dead?" he asked. Al-Obeidi said issues cannot be worked out under fire and therefore the ceasefire should be unconditional. He noted that the Israelis have unilaterally ceased fire for 48 hours and said that could easily be extended indefinitely.

¶5. (C) Al-Obeidi said people will lose faith in the UNSC as an institution if they see that it can only impose resolutions on places like Iran, Sudan, and North Korea, but not in this situation. He added that statements coming from Israel and "some members of the Security Council" are not encouraging. He cited recent Al-Qaeda statements, and said the absence of action by the Security Council will only encourage extremism. Even moderate individuals and governments are beginning to question their moderation, he said. He called on the UNSC to speak with one voice, act under Chapter VII and find a peaceful solution.

¶6. (C) CDA responded that the U.S. was deeply distressed by the images of suffering in the region, and was working for a sustained and genuine cessation of hostilities. He cited the Secretary's statement concerning an emerging consensus on the necessary elements of a ceasefire and lasting settlement. He noted that we are deeply engaged at the UNSC.

¶7. (C) The French Ambassador said France shared Libya's concern and was working for an immediate ceasefire resolution. The British Ambassador said the UK shares Libya's distress including on the killing of the four peacekeepers and was working for an early UNSCR to end the fighting and address its causes.

Oil and Gas Sector

¶1.  (SBU) Repsol said it will increase its production in Libya by

66%, reaching 415,000 barrels per day by 2010. Following the discovery of 21 wells in the last three years, Repsol's reserves in Libya will increase an estimated 10% over the next five years. Repsol, currently the biggest foreign company in Libya handling 15% of its oil production, is investing about 5 billion dollars in the country.(Source: http://www.akhbar-libya.com/HYPERLINK "http://www.akhbar-libya.com/"www.akhbar-liby a.com, 6/21)

¶2. (SBU) The CEO of the Italian ERG Group said that his company is hoping to increase its share of service stations in Italy and is expecting Libya to reach a decision regarding the sale of Tamoil in Europe by the end of this year. According to current market evaluation, Tamoil is worth about 2 billion dollars. (Source: Al Quds Al Arabi, 6/24)

¶3. (SBU) Shukri Ghanem, chairman of the National Oil Corporation, met with the French minister of Industry and Energy to discuss ongoing oil and gas cooperation between the two countries. The French minister stressed his country's wish to import gas from Libya to satisfy its growing needs. The role of French companies in the field of manufacture of petrochemicals and fertilizers was also discussed. (Source: http://www.manara.org/HYPERLINK "http://www.manara.org/"www.manara.org, 6/27)

¶4. (SBU) The Libyan government has given permission to Sirt Oil Company to complete the execution of two gas pipelines leading from Tripoli to Khums and Tripoli to Milleta via international bidding. The Tripoli-Khums line will provide 106 million cubic meters of gas per day to South Tripoli Electricity Power Station and to the Suk Elkhamis Cement Factory, as well as supply households in Tripoli with natural gas. The second pipeline aims to provide some 200 million cubic feet of gas per day to the Zawiya Power Station. (Source: Al Quds Al Arabi, 7/13)

Construction and Infrastructure Development

¶5. (SBU) The Libyan government announced plans to allocate 765 million dollars to develop the iron and steel industry over the next three years. The GOL plans to raise production capacity of the state-owned Misurata Iron & Steel Company to 2 million tons annually. New leadership may bring increased resources to the company, which underwent a failed attempt at privatization two years ago. (Source: http://www.aljazeera.net/HYPERLINK "http://www.aljazeera.net/"www.Aljazeera.net, 6/8)

¶6. (SBU) According to Maal & Amaal newspaper [Money & Business], Libya imported about 100,000 tons of cement in June. A source from the National Company for Development and Real Estate and Tourism Investment said that the company is executing a contract to import 4 million more tons of cement to cover a shortage in the market. (Source: HYPERLINK "http://www.ljbc.net"www.ljbc.net, 6/18)

¶7. (SBU) Accompanied by a representative from the US based Valmont company, Libyan leader Moammar Qaddafi toured Qararat al-Qataf in Wadi Sawf Ajeen, one of the agricultural investment areas cultivated through water of the Great Man-Made River Project (GMMRP). Valmont demonstrated its own technology being implemented at the GMMRP, including the use of axel irrigation equipment. (Source: HYPERLINK "http://www.ljbc.net/"www.ljbc.net, 6/26)

¶8. (SBU) The Secretary of the People's Committee of the Railway Company signed a contract to construct 34 concrete bridges at a value of 40 million Libyan dinars to be built over 18 months from Tripoli to Misurata, covering 231 km. The contract was signed with the Turkish based Mitch Company. Libya is the only signed with the Turkish based Mitch Company. Libya is the only North African country without a railway system. The designated routes are part of a planned network to link Libya to the rest of Africa. (Source: HYPERLINK "http://www.akhbar-libya.com/"www.akhbar-liby a.com, 6/29).

¶9. (SBU) Several Libyan cabinet members visited the eastern region of the country and outlined plans to further develop its infrastructure. Highlights include the planned construction of a new port at Ras El-Hilal, additional pipe networks from desalinization plants, 10,000 new housing units, extending private loans worth up to 257 million Libyan dinars to start small businesses, construction of new bridges, and installation of a secondary runway at Tubrouk airport. (Source: http://www.manara.org/HYPERLINK "http://www.manara.org"www.manara.org, 7/02)

¶10. (SBU) The Assistant Secretary of the General People's Committee announced the planned construction of two new skyscrapers in Tripoli and Benghazi. The GPC created a committee to complete measures to incorporate the company that will execute the skyscrapers project, at an estimated cost of 500 million Libyan dinars. (Source: HYPERLINK "http://www..net"www.ljbc.net, 7/24)

Foreign and US Investment

¶11. (SBU) The Libya General Post & Telecommunications Company (GPTC) organized its Second Annual Exhibition for Telecommunications & Information Technology in mid-July. IBM, NCR, Microsoft, Hewlett Packard, Oracle and Motorola were represented at the conference. A conversation with a senior manager from GPTC revealed that it has reached an agreement with Oracle after more than a year of negotiation, mainly due to Oracle's readiness to provide training to Libyans in the field. The source from GPTC also stated that it is their policy to engage companies bidding for projects or tenders including training. "The model will be adopted with anyone wishing to do business with GPTC."

¶12. (SBU) Afriqiya Airlines signed a memorandum of understanding to buy up to 14 A-320 and six A-330 airplanes in a deal worth 1.7 billion USD. The head of the Libyan African investment fund, Bashir Saleh, said that the aim is "to have a partnership with Europe to develop Africa in all sectors: aviation, construction and tourism. Our goal is development in Africa." The chairman of Afirqiya, Sabri Shadi, said that the purchase "is a new beginning for aviation and transportation in Libya, and I think we will see more demand for new airplanes from Airbus or Boeing." Delivery of the planes is set to start in 2007. (Source: HYPERLINK "http://www.akhbar-libya.com"www.akhbar-libya .com, 7/18 -- See also Septel.)

¶13. (SBU) In an effort to increase foreign investment by streamlining the process for investors, the Secretary of Economy, Trade & Investment, Al-Tayeb Al-Safi, announced the creation of a "one window" policy where investors will be directed to the Foreign Investment Encouragement Board to finalize all of their paperwork. The Board will also serve as a "one-stop" source of information for those seeking to invest in Libya. Similar announcements have been made in the past on this issue. (Source: Libya Alyoum, 6/18)

Labor Market

14. (SBU) In a series of speeches broadcast on the official JANA news agency leading up to the commemoration of the 37th anniversary of the Al-Fatah Revolution, Qaddafi addressed professional organizations including economists, doctors, and engineers, announcing his objection to foreign employment in the private sector at the expense of the Libyan people. He underlined that the issue of employing Libyans is linked to the issues of social justice, freedom and dignity of Libyans. He specifically noted that future work on the Great Man-Made River Project, a $20 billion, 20-year-old venture to pump water from beneath the Sahara to northern cities, should be done almost exclusively by Libyans. "The new phase which starts as of today requires that nothing be built by foreigners, and whatever is built in Libya will be by Libyans, or else nothing would be built, because we do not want to deceive ourselves." It is important to watch for future GPC proclamations to study the true effect of the speech. In a speech this past January, Qaddafi called for the hiring foreign companies to build the country, allowing the opening of branches of foreign banks "because they have capital to invest" This speech also does not seem to coincide with recent government regulations to facilitate banking transactions and reduce foreign investors costs.

¶15. The GOL said it is taking steps to reorganize and reduce the number of employees in the public sector, which currently stands at 900,000. The government says it is planning to provide loans to public sector employees to set up private businesses as an incentive for early retirement. The government announced a re-distribution of the workforce within the public sector, with priority given to the tourism sector. (Source: HYPERLINK "http://www.ljbc.net"www.ljbc.net, 06/07)

¶16. The Secretary of Manpower, Training, and Employment, Matug Matug, officially announced the termination of Salary Law No.15, which placed strict salary caps on state employees in all sectors. The law, passed in early 1980s, has been gradually phased out over the passed several years in some institutions, such as Tripoli Medical Center, in an effort to keep qualified doctors in the country. Effective July 1, public companies can now officially set the wages of their employees. (Source: Tripoli Post, 6/24)

¶17. Libyan businessman in the tourism sector and officials from the GOL took part in a contentious meeting on foreign investment in tourism, led by the Secretary of the General People's Congress (Prime Minister), ElBaghdadi ElMahmoudi. Husni Bey, deputy chairman of the Libyan Businessmen Council, argued that government policies favored foreign investors, citing the fact that Libyan tour companies were barred from providing services to tourists during last March's eclipse event. The Secretary of Tourism, Ammar Eltayif, argued that Libyans should be given the same incentives as foreign companies such as tax and customs exemptions. He also emphasized the need for investment in the hotel sector, citing that only 2000 rooms in Tripoli are suitable for tourism lodging. He also pointed out that only 30% of the people working in the tourism industry are Libyan. (Source: Al Quds Al Arabi, 7/9)

Stock Market

¶18. The capital of the Libyan stock market has been set to 20 million Libyan dinars and 2 million shares. The value will be deducted from this year's annual budget. The Libyan government has made it mandatory for all public and private companies with a capital of more than 1 million dinars to offer their shares in the stock market. The Libyan stock market was established approximately two years ago through the Central Bank of Libya.

shares in a number of public companies were offered including the shares of the biggest cement company valued at 600 million dinars. (Source: Al Quds Al Arabi, 6/10)

SUBJECT: GOVERNMENT OF LIBYA ANNOUNCES EFFORTS TO SUPPORT LEBANON

REF: TRIPOLI 377

¶1. (SBU) Summary and Comment. The Government of Libya announced on Monday a three-step initiative to express its solidarity with the people of Lebanon and denounce Israeli attacks in the country. 1) The General People's Committee for Foreign Liaison and International Cooperation was instructed to hold a meeting with ambassadors from the P-5 countries Monday, calling for an immediate ceasefire and an investigation into alleged genocide against the people of Lebanon (reftel). 2) A Libyan-government sponsored daily cargo plane stocked with medical supplies and food will reportedly be sent to Lebanon via other Arab countries. 3) Local media are being asked to highlight the confrontation, and have been particularly praising leader Moammar Qaddafi's alleged prediction of the attacks during a speech ten years ago. Several relatively calm government-sanctioned demonstrations have taken place in Tripoli. Comment: The three-step initiative is clearly a low-cost attempt by the Libyan government to counter criticism it is facing on opposition websites and elsewhere, that it is not doing enough for the cause in Lebanon. End Summary and Comment.

¶2. (SBU) On Sunday, July 30, the General People's Committee (GPC - i.e. the Cabinet) held an emergency session to "support the steadfastness of the Lebanese brotherly people in facing the Israeli barbarous aggression taking place these days." After the meeting, the GPC ordered three steps to put these words into action, conveying to the Libyan public their commitment to supporting the Lebanese people. In carrying out the first step, the GPC for Foreign Liaison and International Co-operation (GPCFLIC, i.e. the MFA) called in the ambassadors from the P-5 countries to insist on an immediate stop to attacks in Lebanon (reftel). Television and newspapers highlighted the Charges d'affairs from the United States and China, along with ambassadors from Russia, Britain and France, meeting with GPCFLIC Secretary for European Affairs Obeidi, who in press accounts, called for an end to "state terrorism, unwarranted aggression, and war crime against the Lebanese people and genocide that require an international investigation." (See Reftel for a full report on the actual content of the meeting and Charge's response.)

3 (SBU) The second announced step is the commencement of an immediate "air bridge" between Libya and Lebanon to transport food and medical supplies via Jordan, Syria, and Cyprus. On Monday evening, local media reported that the first cargo plane of the air bridge, carrying 50 tons of medicine, medical equipment, food stuffs, and ambulances, took off from Mitiga International Airport. Daily relief flights are planned. The government also reported that Libyan medical teams are available to be deployed to Lebanon, and that injured Lebanese civilians are welcome for treatment in local hospitals. According to local media sources last week, the Qaddafi Foundation for Charity Societies, a quasi-NGO run by Qaddafi's son Seif Al-Islam, in conjunction with Libyan Red Crescent, announced separate plans to send air shipments of medical and health supplies to Lebanon.

¶4. (SBU) The GPC also announced that the state-run Libyan media has been called upon to "highlight the confrontation of the Lebanese people in face of the Israeli barbarous and brutal attacks and the war crimes committed against the people of Lebanon. " As in many newspapers in the region, the front page of all the daily newspapers report almost solely on the violence in Lebanon, many showing graphic photographs of dead Lebanese civilians, especially following the attacks in Qana. On the evening of the July 30 bombing in Qana, the state run news show highlighted leader Moammar Qaddafi "predicting" the attack in a May 1996 speech in which he said the April, 1996 "Grapes of Wrath" attack on Qana would not be the last. The station rebroadcast a clip of Qaddafi addressing an audience in Kano, Nigeria on May 9th, 1996, in which the leader encouraged people to wear t-shirts with pictures of children who had died in the attack Qana that year. "... look at this high training of the Israeli airmen to target and kill infants and children. Look at the disgrace and shame. The world must look at this little girl, this is a photo, and this is an example of the Israeli terrorism and barbarism". The media broadcaster commented that the world should have listened to Qaddafi at the time, who predicted this week's attack.

¶5. (SBU) Editorials in state run newspapers echoed highly critical statements against the government of Israel and the western powers that back it. In an article from "Azzahaf Al-Akhdar" from July 31, 2006 "The Zionist hegemony is beyond description and goes unpunished just because it enjoys the protection of Great Powers." In "Ashames" on the same day, in an editorial entitled "Qana Again!", the author condemned Arab countries' silence towards the attacks in Qana. He also referred to Qaddafi's speech in Kano, Nigeria in 1996 warning of an Israeli "death train." A great deal of coverage has been devoted to Saturday's "New York Times" article about the expedited delivery of US produced precision-guided bombs to Israel. As a result of this article, some here have started referring to Secretary Rice as "Hamalat al Khatab," or "carrier of fire", a Quranic reference to the wife of the uncle of prophet Muhammad, who was known to be an instigator or a fire starter.

6. (SBU) Several government sanctioned demonstrations have been held since the commencement of the violence in Lebanon and Israeli. This weekend, following Friday prayers, demonstrators gathered in Green Square, the traditional spot for protests, chanting anti-Israeli slogans. Friday's broadcast sermon on state-sponsored television mainly focused on criticizing Israel, Jews and other Arab leaders. The imam particularly criticized wealthy oil states, which "should have power, but also stand by and do nothing." A pointed criticism of the US was also made for blocking the UN Security Council's attempt at a cease fire. On Monday, July 31, a separate demonstration composed mostly of youth, organized by Aisha Qaddafi's Watasimo Charity Organization, also took place in Green Square. The demonstrators, many of whom were affiliated with the Libyan version of the Boy Scouts, marched to the UN headquarters in Tripoli and delivered a letter condemning the attacks in Qana and praising the foresight of Moammar Qaddafi in forecasting this event years ago while in Kano, Nigeria. "Where is the UN? Where are its role, mission and charter called human rights? Where are the Security Council, and its resolutions regarding this terrible massacre?" Media reported approximately two thousand people took part in this demonstration, which was also televised extensively.

¶1. (SBU) Charge, accompanied by DCM, delivered reftel points verbally August 6 to General People's Committee for Foreign Liaison and International Cooperation (MFA-equivalent) European Affairs Secretary/Qadhafi Advisor Abdelati Al-Obeidi. Obeidi has emerged as the GPCFLIC's lead official on the Lebanon crisis.

¶2. (C) Obeidi confirmed that GPCFLIC Secretary (FM-equivalent) Shalqam will be attending the August 7 Foreign Ministers meeting for Libya and that a detailed account of the U.S. presentation would be provided to him. Obeidi said Libya's goal is to give support to the Lebanese government. The Lebanese Government (including the Hizballah ministers) have agreed to a seven-point program, which the Libyan Government will support. Obeidi said the Lebanese Government is not supportive of the US-France draft UNSCR because it does not see the text as capable of stopping the destruction.

¶3. (C) While clearly implying that Libya shared Lebanon's lack of enthusiasm for the draft UNSCR, Obeidi went on to say that Libya strongly supported the Government of Lebanon and the extension of Lebanese Government control over all of the territory of Lebanon. "We don't agree with groups taking the authority of the state into their own hands," Obeidi said.

¶4. (C) Separately, on August 5 Obeidi contacted Charge to request U.S. assistance in setting up safe passage for Libyan humanitarian aid flights to Beirut International Airport. The flights were previously going into Latakia, but the aid can no longer be trans-shipped overland because of the destruction of the route. Charge explained that we are feeding the request into our Washington Task Force, but we need additional details. Obeidi assured him that the shipments are entirely humanitarian in nature, and that Libya understood that even after acting as a facilitator, the U.S. could not guarantee the safety of the shipments.

SUBJECT: THE VISA BLUES: TRIPOLI CONSULS SING IN UNISON

¶1.  (SBU) Consular officers from fifteen foreign embassies with representation in Libya gathered last week at the home of the Pakistani consul to discuss common challenges faced in obtaining visitor, business, and diplomatic visas to Libya. In addition to TDY Conoff/Econoff from Embassy Tripoli, consuls from the Philippines, Italy, Yemen, Poland, Russia, Korea, Bangladesh, Afghanistan, Malaysia, India, Pakistan, Serbia, and South Africa attended the meeting. The meeting's goal was to formulate a common approach to working with the GOL on ameliorating the problems that all non-Arab nationals are having obtaining tourist, business, and diplomatic visas to Libya.

COMMON CHALLENGES

¶2. (SBU)

-----Diplomatic visas: Obtaining diplomatic visas in a timely manner continues to be a challenge for most of the countries represented. In an extreme example, the consul from the Embassy of Russia expressed frustration over waiting seven months for his visa, apparently linked to the fact that the Russians had denied a Libyan traveling on an official passport a visa because he was on their restricted security list. A diplomat from the Philippines easily obtained a visa in her home country due to a personal connection with the Libyan Embassy in Manila, but because it wasn't processed through the normal official channels, faced great difficulty in converting it to a residency permit here.

----- Business visas: Obtaining business visas is not an easy feat for most western nationals, due to the long list of requirements necessary to receive a visa. Most agreed that this could be partially intentional on the part of the government, but may also be in part a matter of organization as pre-approvals must be faxed to their embassies abroad from Tripoli, which can easily be lost or misplaced. For all countries facing this challenge, there is a trend for businesspeople to enter on tourist visas, which are relatively easy to obtain via well connected travel agencies.

-----Third Country Nationals: Employing third country nationals at foreign embassies is a growing difficulty. The Korean consul linked this to the Manpower Minister's supposed mandate to drastically reduce the Libyan unemployment rate. He also noted that Korean companies are having trouble obtaining work visas for many of their nationals who are slated to work at Korean companies based in Libya, the implication being that Libyans must be employed instead. The Pakistani consul's son was offered a job at Schlumberger, but his visa has been stalled, possibly for the same reason. The Italian consul was informed that effective last month, all visas that go through the protocol office will also be vetted through the manpower office, presumably to ensure that Libyans are being employed as often as possible.

SIGNS OF IMPROVEMENT

¶3. (SBU)

-----Tourist visas: All nationalities, with the exception of the U.S., are having relative success obtaining tourist visas via travel agencies who set up package tours. Travel agencies with good connections in the government are said to have the highest success rate of obtaining tourist visas. Cruise ships stopping at Mediterranean destinations frequently disembark in Tripoli Harbor and unload several hundred tourists at a time. Short term visas upon generally granted upon arrival, though it takes one to two hours of processing.

-----Dip visas at the airport: Officials from the GOL told consuls from other Embassies that they are considering issuing visas to diplomats at the airport, though a pre-approval from the MFA would still be required.

FUTURE GOALS

¶4. (SBU) Consuls decided to hold monthly meetings to exchange information and share updates on visa issues. In addition, a steering committee composed of the Philippine, Pakistani, and Italian consuls was formed to draft a proposal to work on the following goals:

-----Visa Reciprocity: Engage with the Libyan authorities on dedicating themselves to enforcing visa reciprocity. Most countries represented at the meeting issue visas for Libyan nationals within seven to ten working days for all categories, but few were receiving similar treatment.

-----Ambassadorial Meeting: Discuss a possible effort to request some of our ambassadors collectively meet with GOL officials regularly on areas of common concern to foreign embassies regarding visa issues. While several in the group wanted the US to take an active leadership role in this initiative, Conoff explained that we might not be as persuasive a spokesman as other countries because we don't have visa issuing capability yet.

¶5. Comment. The GOL has told post repeatedly that until we establish full visa operations in Tripoli, they will reciprocate by limiting visa services to Americans. Once post begins issuing visas, we anticipate some relief to the additional challenges U.S. travelers face in obtaining Libyan visas. However, the experience of other foreign missions that have full visa issuance authority in Tripoli is far from perfect and indicates that visa difficulties are endemic to Libya's dealings with its foreign guests.

(S) This is in response to the request in reftel. Libya has traditionally had few contacts with Hizballah because of friction over the Imam Musa Sadr issue. While Qadhafi and the rest of the senior Libyan leadership would probably not be eager to add to that friction by taking on al-Manar, our best argument would be any examples of al-Manar broadcasts calling into question the validity of the Libyan Jamahiriya. The Libyans have no use for the idea of private militias operating outside government control, and they are concerned about radical religious movements that would create instability. If USG demarches could include specific examples of al-Manar reporting that denounced or threatened Libyan or other North African governments, our request to have the Libyans take action to remove the channel from Arabsat might have more traction. However, we do not believe that, even then, Libya would sign on to any such effort, given the broad popular support in Libya for Hizballah's supposed "victory" in its confrontation with Israel, as well as Nasrallah's popular appeal.

REASON: 1.4 (b), (d)

¶1. (C) MFA Under Secretary for European Affairs Abdelati Obeidi called in the UK and U.S. Charges separately on August 29 to deliver an urgent demarche about discussions in New York about a draft UNSC resolution on Darfur. Obeidi noted that African members of the Security Council, the Arab League and the Islamic Conference had all expressed serious reservations about the substance of the draft resolution under discussion in the UNSC. The Libyans believe that an Article 7 resolution imposed on Sudan without its consent would be "a gift to al-Qaeda." In that regard, Obeidi cited Zawahiri's comments about Sudan in a recent broadcast.

¶2. (C) If intervention in Sudan from the outside is essential, Obeidi said, then the forces involved should be exclusively African -- "maybe with blue hats." "Foreign" (i.e., non-African) forces would be a cause of deep concern to countries in the region -- could in fact lead to "catastrophe." The Sudanese government is not in control of the situation ("Sudan is not Bashir"), and the insertion of outsiders could lead to civil war.

¶3. (C) Despite the depth of concern about the resolution as drafted, there is a readiness on the part of African governments and Arab League members to work toward consensus, Obeidi said. He invoked the UNSC's experience on Lebanon, when an Arab League delegation went to New York for consultations with UNSC members. The same kind of process may work in the Sudan case. Obeidi strongly urged that the U.S. and UK as cosponsors of the resolution consult closely with African members of the Security Council and take their concerns fully into account.

¶4. (C) The Charge recalled the many bilateral discussions we have had on this topic. Obeidi acknowledged that U.S.-Libyan policy differences on this issue have been evident for some time, but repeated Libya's view that a resolution "to be of use needs to be practical and implementable" -- that is, must be the product of consultations leading to consensus.

¶1. (SBU) In a series of meetings with senior Libyan officials during his August 22-24 trip to Libya, Congressman Tom Lantos, ranking Democrat on the House Foreign Relations Committee, reviewed bilateral achievements since his first visit to the country in January, 2004 and set new goals for enhanced future cooperation. The Congressman, accompanied by Charge Berry, House International Relations Committee (HIRC) Senior Professional Staff Member Alan Makovsky, HIRC Professional Staff Member Mike Beard, and Poloff, met with the Libyan Leader Moammar Qadhafi, Director of the Qadhafi Development Foundation Seif Al-Islam Qadhafi, Libyan Director of Military Intelligence Abdullah Sanussi, Director of the External Security Organization Musa Kusa, Secretary of the General Peoples Committee for Foreign Liaison and International Cooperation (Foreign Minister equivalent) Abdurrahman Shalgam, Secretary of American Affairs Ahmed Fatouri and Secretary for European Affairs Abdelati Obeidi of the General Peoples Committee for Foreign Liaison and International Cooperation. The Congressman's trip partially overlapped with visit of Senator Arlen Specter (septel) and several official meetings were combined.

¶2. (SBU) In all meetings with GOL interlocutors, the Congressman stressed that the two major goals that he set in January, 2004 on his first trip to Libya had been achieved: the removal of Libya from the list of State Sponsors of Terrorism list and the reestablishment of full diplomatic relations. His next goal is to increase the number of Libyan students studying in America from 150, the present figure, to 6,000 over the next three years. He also emphasized the need of the GOL to enhance its image and presence in the United States by either opening additional consulates in cities like New York and Los Angeles, or establishing honorary consulates. He used the Saudi Embassy in Washington as an example of a country that has successfully enhanced its image in America by investing considerable financial resources in its Embassy.

THE LEADER, ONCE AGAIN, STRESSES WAHABI EXTREMISM

¶3.(C) On August 22 in his desert encampment on the outskirts of Sirte, the Leader of the Revolution Moammar Qadhafi greeted the entire delegation, but dedicated the majority of time to an hour-long tjte-`-tjte with Representative Lantos focusing on Wahabism in Saudi Arabia, which has become one of his standard topics. The leader emphasized his anxiety over the spread of religious fundamentalism in the Kingdom, citing a recent supposed statement of the Grand Mufti of Saudi Arabia that Saudi students should be barred from attending university in the United States. He also berated the spread of Wahabist thought in mosques and schools inside and outside of the Kingdom. The leader urged the US to call for "self determination" for tribal groups of Saudi Arabia, who would presumably chose a government other than the present monarchy. Qadhafi also lobbied for support of his plan to create "Isratine" as the best solution for lasting peace in the Middle East. He did not bring up any aspects of the GOL's bilateral relationship with the US during the meeting.

¶4. (C) Congressman Lantos and Senator Specter were scheduled for separate meetings with Qadhafi in Sirte. While Specter's delegation traveled by U.S. military aircraft to Sirte, Secretary of Foreign Affairs of the General People's Congress,

Suleiman Shihumi, chartered a Air Libya plane from Mitiga International Airport for the Lantos delegation. Shihumi greeted Lantos warmly, facilitated the Qadhafi meeting, and arranged for a official banquet with General Peoples Committee delegates from the Sirte region. During the one-hour flight, an Egyptian movie entitled "The Leader" starring screen favorite Adel Imam was shown to the delegation and Libyan protocol officers. Security personnel and a local translator confirmed that many of the jokes in the movie, that obviously make fun of a Middle Eastern dictator, could be aimed at Qadhafi or Mubarak, including a scene showing disregard for members of the cabinet. (Embassy Ccomment: It is unclear if this was to show that the leader does in fact have a sense of humor about his monopoly on political power, or that a certain degree of toleration exists in Libya, or that the Libyans love a movie that pokes fun at Egyptian politics -- if in fact the Libyans intended any message at all. End Comment.)

CONCERNS OVER SAUDI WAHABISM AS SOURCE OF EXTREMISM AND TERRORISM REITERATED

¶5. (S) Libyan Director of Military Intelligence Abdullah Sanussi held a joint meeting with Congressman Lantos and Senator Specter on August 23, calling for increased cooperation in all aspects of our relationship, specifically technology and knowledge transfer. In a theme similar to Representative Lantos' last meeting with Sanussi (ref A), he reiterated the leader's deep concern with Wahabism and the Saudi government's purported link to Al-Qaeda. Sanussi stated that after 9/11, the GOL was perplexed by US behavior as they expected a "judgment day" for Saudi Arabia, home to a majority of the highjackers, not an invasion of Afghanistan and Iraq. Sanussi also took credit for the GOL putting Osama bin Laden on an Interpol watch list in 1997, showing that they had an inkling of events to come far in advance of 9/11.

¶6. (S) When Senator Specter pressed Sanussi for solid proof linking Al-Qaeda and Osama bin Laden to the Saudi government, Sanussi orchestrated a subsequent meeting between Congressman Lantos and Mohamed Ismail, the Libyan national who was imprisoned in Saudi Arabia for 10 months and charged with a plot to assassinate then Crown Prince Abdallah. Ismail, who speaks fluent English, is the son of a former Libyan diplomat, and was educated abroad. For several years, he worked at Seif Al-Islam's Qadhafi Development Foundation, on various projects such as negotiating the release of western hostages in the Philippines. Ismail claimed that he worked closely with Saudi opposition groups in London who tried to "create a free radio station in Saudi Arabia" but was arrested on trumped up charges. Ismail talked at length about "specialized treatment" that Wahabi detainees receive in Saudi prisons, claiming that they receive cash, and are being recruited to fight in Iraq. (Embassy Comment: Embassy notes that testimony in a US court differs considerably from this Libyan version of events. End Comment.)

SENIOR OFFICIALS GIVE OPINIONS ON NEW EMBASSY COMPOUND

¶7. (C) In meetings with Faturi, Obeidi, and FM Shalgam on August 23, Representative Lantos continuously pressed on the theme of a need for a secure, efficient US Embassy chancery, calling the lack of an Embassy his "biggest disappointment" with the state lack of an Embassy his "biggest disappointment" with the state of our current relationship, especially because it impedes the issuance of visas. He stressed the need for "land with a clear title," adding his hopes for the Libyan Embassy in Washington to increase in size and scope. Shalgam expressed concern over proposed NEC sites because they are "such a long drive from downtown," instead arguing that a more proper place is the "Shaat Club" located in downtown. (The British, Italian, Turkish, and Egyptian Embassies are located in this area near the waterfront). In a separate meeting, ESO Chief Kusa echoed Shalgam's worries, asserting that the proposed NEC site in Farjan is "too open and vulnerable to attack. You should listen to my advice. Anyone could attack and run away". Kusa also argued for the idea of opening up a new Embassy in the Shaat Club area and was not keen on the idea of an entirely new Embassy compound. Per septel, Qadhafi expressed similar concerns over U.S. plans to build a large NEC.

REGIONAL EVENTS -- VIEWS EXCHANGED ON HIZBALLAH AND LEBANON

¶8. (C) Regional events in Lebanon and Israel accounted for much of the conversation in meetings with GOL interlocutors. Sanussi called Israel's "excessive reaction" to Hizballah attacks "the reason Nasrallah is a hero in the eyes of the people." Shalgam stressed that people in the region were "very impressed" with Hizballah's ability to withhold Israeli military might for 32 days. He also warned that in order for the cease fire to last, European nations must be willing to send more troops. Lantos stressed that Hizballah has the intent of destroying Israel and that the force employed by the Israeli army equaled the threat of Hizballah to the nation of Israel. Throughout his meetings, he repeatedly used the analogy that if a rebel force was operating out of Canada and threatened US security, we would clearly use heavy force in combating that threat.

IRAN MODEL VS LIBYA MODEL

¶9. (S) In an August 24 meeting with Director of External Security Musa Kusa, Lantos called the difference between Iran and Libya "monumental" and predicted that books will be written about the historic decision Qadhafi took in giving up its WMDs. While Kusa seemed to agree, he expressed worry over the imbalance that was created with the changes in Iraq, tipping the scales towards Iran. "Iran and Iraq used to balance each other out...now, there is no balance." He said the Libyans were "sure that the Iranians are enriching uranium and making a bomb," adding that events in Lebanon are really just an "Iranian-Syrian game". He also expressed a concern about the estimated 300 Libyans aiding the insurgency in Iraq: "We can't control our own children. We are doing our best, but we uncover a new cell everyday."

SOMALIA FALLING TO EXTREMISTS

¶10. (C) Both Sanussi and Shalgam expressed a growing concern with the deteriorating state of affairs in Somalia. Sanussi said that the Taliban is running Somalia and in a short while, it is bound to become another Afghanistan. Shalgam worried that Somalia is being hurled "back into the Middle Ages" by the current leadership and that the younger generation there is easily seduced by Muslim extremists: "We won't be able to convince younger generation that their leadership is wrong."

MUBARAK NOT PLEASED WITH YOUNG QADHAFI'S SPEECH

¶11. (C) Congressman Lantos began a meeting with Seif Al-Islam Qadhafi, director of the Qadhafi Development Foundation, by congratulating him on his speech earlier in the week that called for significant political and economic reform, including enhanced freedom of the press. "I am very proud of your speech,"

Lantos said of the two-hour monologue which was broadcast on every radio and television station in the country. Seif immediately noted that President Mubarak of Egypt called his father, the leader, to express his displeasure with the speech, saying it called for "too much change and too much freedom" and warning that the country should be more conservative in its approach to change. Seif claimed he does not know what his father's reply to Mubarak was. (Embassy Comment: Since the speech was broadcast widely on state-run media, it must have at least had the tacit blessing of the leader. End Comment). Seif added that the speech took about two or three years to develop and hinted that there may be another forthcoming speech, focusing more on politics and the creation of a constitution. He added that he intends to "close all pending human rights cases and start a new beginning for the country."

¶12. (S) Seif, who took a passive role during most of the meeting, then queried Lantos about Iran, stating that the Iranians are telling the GOL that "the Americans are playing a game with you" and will refuse allow replacement of Libya's SCUD missiles, instead stripping the GOL of its weaponry. "They have told us that the Americans will let us down." Representative Lantos countered that those assertions are untrue and that the USG truly appreciates what the GOL has done in abandoning its WMD program. Seif then asked about the disarmament of Hizballah, which Lantos replied is a "must" as all countries must be in control of their own borders: "Nasrallah has set the development of Lebanon back years." Lantos invited Seif to join him on his next trip to North Korea to share Libya's story of giving up WMDs, a "major gesture for peace globally."

US BUSINESS REPS TALK OIL AND VISAS

¶13. (SBU) Congressman Lantos and Senator Specter met with U.S. business leaders on August 23 representing Amerada Hess, Marathon Oil, Exxon-Mobil, Chevron-Texaco, Conoco-Philipps, and Occidental. The businessmen expressed optimism about increasing oil output in the coming years in Libya, but were frustrated by continued visa challenges. They cited the initial optimism that existed when bilateral relations were restored, but difficulties both in obtaining visas for Americans to come to Libya and in sending local and third country national employees to the United States have dampened that feeling to some degree. Still, on the big picture issues like personal security and government corruption, they see Libya as offering a relatively favorable operating environment compared to their counterparts working in Nigeria, Indonesia, Colombia and other oil-production states.

¶14. (SBU) Congressman Lantos and Senator Specter did not clear this cable before departing Tripoli.

¶1. (SBU) In a series of meetings with senior Libyan officials during his August 21-24 trip to Libya, Senator Arlen Spector, Chairman of the Senate Justice Committee, reviewed the bilateral relationship with senior Libyan officials and inquired about prospects for developing a "Libya model" that could be applied to North Korea or Iran. The Libyans continued to claim, almost reflexively, that they "gave up everything and got nothing in return." The Senator, accompanied by CDA, Legislative Assistant Christopher Bradish and P/E Chief, met with the Libyan Leader Moammar Qadhafi, Libyan Director of Military Intelligence Abdullah Sanussi, Secretary of Foreign Affairs of the General Peoples Congress Suleiman Shihumi, Secretary of the General Peoples Committee of Justice Ali Hasnawi, Deputy Secretary of the General Peoples Committee for Foreign Liaison and International Cooperation (MFA equivalent) Hafiana, and Secretary of the General Peoples Congress (Prime Minister equivalent) al-Baghdadi al-Mahmoudi. The Senator's trip partially overlapped with the visit of Congressman Tom Lantos (septel) and several official meetings were combined.

QADHAFI OPINES LIBYA IS THE ONLY COUNTRY THAT ENJOYS DIRECT DEMOCRACY

¶2. (C) Senator Specter and Congressman Lantos were scheduled for separate meetings with Qadhafi August 22, both at a desert encampment in the Sirte governorate. The Specter delegation traveled by U.S. military aircraft to Sirte after all-night negotiations to get additional flight clearances for the plane to re-enter Libyan airspace and make the Tripoli-Sirte roundtrip segment. The Libyan in charge of the CODEL schedules, Secretary of Foreign Affairs of the General People's Congress Suleiman Shihumi, chartered an Air Libya plane from Mitiga International Airport for the Lantos delegation.

¶4. (S) Specter expressed his hope that as democracy spread throughout the world, citing recent elections in Egypt and Afghanistan, that there would be democracy in Libya in the future. Qadhafi, seemingly somewhat taken aback by this comment, launched into an extensive explanation of the Jamahiriya system of government, telling Senator Specter, "we are the sole country that enjoys direct democracy, we hope the U.S. becomes like Libya, it is the ultimate level of democracy where Libyans rule themselves instead of electing officials to represent them." Qadhafi posited that the U.S. system did not reflect the will of the people, citing U.S. popular opinion against the war in Iraq as a reflection of what Libyans view as a disconnect between U.S. citizens and U.S. government policy. He continued, "there is no ill will between the Libyans and the Americans, the government imposed enmity during the time of Reagan...the personality of the President affects foreign policy but is not a reflection of the people's will. Reagan attacked my house; killed my daughter and killed scores of Libyan people, but this is not the will of the American people." Qadhafi told Senator Specter that he hoped basic peoples committees could be established in the U.S., as they had been in Libya. Senator Specter told Qadhafi that in his opinion President Reagan did not have any personal animus, but rather responded directly to the Berlin disco bombing. Qadhafi replied that he was turning a page and moving forward since international terrorism was now a common enemy, along with disease, environmental concerns, and other mutual interests.

QADHAFI -- NEW CHANCERY SHOULD NOT BE USED AS PLATFORM TO ENCOURAGE OPPOSITION

¶5. (S) Asked about the prospects for obtaining land to build an Embassy chancery, Qadhafi said, apparently half-seriously, "maybe the Libyans heard the Embassy will be a staging ground for opposition activities and counter-Libyan movements," and "maybe the Libyans don't want a big U.S. Embassy." He continued, "people know that chanceries are for cooperation between states and diplomats shouldn't interfere in internal affairs, but people see U.S. embassies all over the world from other angles." Charge challenged that view and highlighted that the Chancery was an important next step in the bilateral relationship. (As reported septel, in other meetings Libyan leaders told Congressman Lantos that they were looking at alternate properties for siting a new Chancery on lots in downtown Tripoli.) When the Senator enlisted Suleiman Shihumi's support for a new chancery so that U.S. citizens could visit Libya, help with job creation and re-energizing the Libyan economy, Shihumi replied, "we have survived for thirty years without U.S. money and had no problems."

LIBYA MODEL - WE GAVE UP EVERYTHING AND GOT NOTHING IN RETURN

¶6. (S) Senator Specter noted the dramatic shift in U.S.-Libyan relations from the 1980s to now and asked if there was a model that could be applied to the U.S.-Iran relationship. Qadhafi said that Libya urged both North Korea and Iran to give up their WMD programs, but that it had not convinced them because, "if you want Libya to be a model, Libya should get a reward." When the Senator pressed for more specifics, Qadhafi claimed "the U.S. promised the U.S. and Britain would provide peaceful nuclear energy and Libya would be the Japan of North Africa through technical transfers. But nothing happened. Supposedly the U.S., EU and China were going to build us nuclear power stations, this is the reward we were hoping for."

¶7. (S) In a thirty minute session with al-Baghdadi al-Mahmudi earlier in the day, Specter heard the continuing Libyan refrain that it could not serve as a model for continued engagement with North Korea and Iran to give up WMD programs. Al-Mahmudi claimed that the Iranians scorned the Libyans for "giving up everything and getting nothing in return." He called for more dialogue and cooperation, especially in terms of technology transfer. (Embassy Comment: This Libyan refrain has taken on aspects of a ritualistic incantation over the last two years and is usually a bid to put U.S. interlocutors at a disadvantage at the beginning of a conversation. End Comment.)

QADHAFI SEES WIDE RANGING TERRORIST THREAT

¶8. (S) Asked by Senator Specter about concerns regarding religious extremism, Qadhafi said that he was worried about terrorism worldwide -- from Somali religious courts, to Saudi-funded Wahabi movements spreading radicalism through the Horn of Africa all the way to Bali. When Senator Specter asked how we could deal effectively with terrorists, Qadhafi smiled and said, "On the contrary, you support them; you support the Saudi royal family that funds Wahabi fundamentalists." With regard to Somalia, Qadhafi referred to Libyan citizens who regard to Somalia, Qadhafi referred to Libyan citizens who traveled to Saudi Arabia and were radicalized by the Wahabis and provided funding to start the Islamic Union Movement in Mogadishu.

¶9. (S) Qadhafi asked Specter, "why did the U.S. attack Iraq, when the basis of terrorism is the Saudis?" He claimed that Iraq only became a haven for terrorists after the overthrow of Saddam Hussein, elaborating, "If Hussein were around then Zarqawi would not be able to operate." Continuing his recurrent theme of the Wahabi threat, Qadhafi argued that the Saudis had made a deal with al-Qaeda operatives "not to direct violence against their own country". He claimed that the Saudis offered support to al-Qaeda for its attacks on the U.S. and Israel if it would refrain from any further attacks in Saudi Arabia. As evidence, Qadhafi cited a recent prisoner escape in Yemen claiming that the Saudis must have arranged for the Yemenis to release the captives in a "staged escape" because the prisoners "could never have dug a tunnel that long". Qadhafi bolstered his claims by saying that the Saudis provided funding for the Bali bombings.

¶10. (S) Calling for the U.S. to stop engaging with the Saudi monarchy and to call for self-determination by the peoples of the Arabian Peninula, Qadhafi said, "don't go in militarily, but don't support the royal family." When Specter asked, "what if it becomes another Iran?", Qadhafi replied, "anything is better than the current regime." To follow up on this theme, Qadhafi's staff arranged for follow-on meetings for both Senator Spector and Congressman Lantos with Director of Military Intelligence Abdullah Sanussi the next morning.

COUNTER TERRORISM COOPERATION HIGHLIGHTED BY MILITARY INTELLIGENCE

¶11. (S) Libyan Director of Military Intelligence Abdullah Sanussi held a joint meeting with Congressman Lantos and Senator Specter on August 23, calling for increased cooperation in all aspects of our relationship, specifically technology and knowledge transfer. He reiterated Qadhafi's deep concern with Wahabism and the Saudi government's purported link to Al-Qaeda. Sanussi stated that after 9/11, the GOL was perplexed by US behavior as they expected a "judgment day" for Saudi Arabia, home to a majority of the highjackers, not an invasion of Afghanistan and Iraq. Sanussi also took credit for the GOL putting Osama bin Laden on an Interpol watch list in 1997, showing that they had an inkling of events to come far in advance of 9/11.

¶12. (S) When Senator Specter pressed Sanussi for solid proof linking Al-Qaeda and Osama bin Laden to the Saudi government, Sanussi orchestrated a subsequent meeting between Congressman Lantos and Mohamed Ismail, a Libyan national imprisoned in Saudi Arabia for 10 months, charged with a plot to assassinate then Crown Prince Abdullah. The Lantos-Ismail discussions are reported septel.

HASNAWI SAYS COURT CASES TO BE RESOLVED BY END OF YEAR

¶13. (C) Secretary Ali Hasnawi of the General Peoples Committee for Justice told Senator Specter that Libya hoped to resolve all outstanding court cases by the end of the year. He said that the lawyers were finalizing negotiations and he was optimistic about positive outcomes. Regarding Lockerbie and other cases, Hasnawi said, "if the courts are involved, we will abide by the courts' ruling." To the follow-up question, "how many will go to court and how many will settle," Hasnawi said that he hoped all the cases would be settled out of court. Regarding the Bulgarian medics case, Hasnawi highlighted the humanitarian needs of the HIV-infected Libyans as well as the judicial procedures. He speculated that it would take two or three months for a verdict to be reached in the current trial, depending on the defense requests to present additional witnesses or evidence. (Embassy Comment: That timetable seems to have accelerated with the court's August 29 hearing, since subsequent sessions are now scheduled at only one-week intervals, for September 5 and 12.) Hasnawi assured Specter that the high-profile case was receiving the greatest attention by his legal experts and the Libyan leadership. Charge noted our deep concern for the Benghazi children, that the USG offered medical assistance, and was involved in ongoing humanitarian efforts, including the Benghazi International Support Fund.

¶14. (C) Asked for his opinion on the effectiveness of sanctions regimes, Hasnawi said that Libya suffered from isolation as communications with the outside world were reduced and air traffic was cut off. He noted the financial impact of sanctions, especially through lost economic opportunities. In terms of industrial capacity, he emphasized that the energy industry was not able to upgrade any of its facilities and major infrastructure investments were needed at this time. Specter questioned what factors made Libya willing to reconsider its positions and renounce its WMD program. Hasnawi, as did Libyan officials in other meetings, said it was Libya's aspiration to give its people a better way of life, a more secure future living in peace with other countries, that motivated the policy shift. Secretary of International Cooperation of the General People's Committee for Foreign Liaison and International Cooperation Mohammed Siala, on the margins of another meeting, told Specter that Libya paid compensation for the Lockerbie bombing "as the price of ending UN sanctions and being able to re-engage with the rest of the world because the settlement cost as less than the revenue losses under sanctions."

SHIHUMI CALLS FOR EXPANDING COMMON INTERESTS - BUT NO MEDDLING

¶15. (C) Secretary of the Foreign Relations Committee of the General Peoples Congress Suleiman Shihumi was the Libyan's official host for the Specter delegation. Shihumi hosted a welcoming dinner at a restaurant next to the historic Marcus Aurelius Arch in the old city. In his introductory meeting with the Senator, Shihumi emphasized that the Jamahiriya was a unique system of government suitable for the Libyan people; "it is not an easy system, but we are evolving and people participate at all levels." Anticipating Qadhafi's later comments about terrorism, Shihumi called for an international conference to identify the root causes and clarify the difference between terrorism and the right of people to defend themselves. He said that Libya was interested in developing broad ties with the U.S. based on common interests, but without any meddling in internal affairs.

LIBYANS DO NOT SEE THE U.S. AS AN UNBIASED PLAYER IN MIDDLE EAST

¶16. (C) Shihumi, in response to the Senator's presentations on U.S. policies and priorities in the region, said that "the scales the U.S. uses in the Middle East are not balanced," continuing, "the U.S. ignored the recent killings at Qana while complaining about other strikes in Israel." Shihumi gave the Libyan perspective that it would take dramatic steps to resolve the current Lebanese-Israeli conflict; "it has given radicals every incentive to act and will only create more Usama Bin Ladens." He claimed that Israel was able to act with impunity since "it has the support and political cover of the U.S. -- it is not looking for compromise solutions." Shihumi claimed that "all Muslims and Arabs" feel the same way. Senator Specter reviewed the many successful U.S. efforts in the interests of peace in the region and said that the U.S. was prepared to talk and listen to concerns. While the U.S. was involved in a wide range of initiatives and peace negotiations, Specter also called for Qadhafi and others to play a constructive role.

ADVOCACY FOR BOEING AIRCRAFT IN EVERY MEETING

¶17. (SBU) Senator Specter advocated on behalf of Boeing in each of his sessions, stressing the firm's competitive advantages. Most Libyan officials welcomed the U.S. interest in commercial aircraft sales, but did not offer any substantive response. (Embassy Comment: Mohammed Siala had previously told Embassy that he thought Libya will most likely purchase equipment from both Boeing and Airbus. End Comment.)

¶18. (SBU) Congressman Lantos and Senator Specter did not clear this cable before departing Tripoli.

¶1. (C) SUMMARY. Ambassador Schulte conducted extensive discussions on non-proliferation with Libyan officials and the Jamahiriya press August 28-30. The Libyans agreed with our assessment that Iran was working on a weapons program and that it should comply with the IAEA, while stressing that confrontation and deadlines would set back negotiating efforts. Libya anticipates the Iran will use the NAM Summit in Havana to politicize the IAEA report due August 31. Libyans also vented their frustration that there wasn't a "Libya Model" for other countries to follow, based on Libyan perceptions that they have not received tangible rewards for deciding to comply with international norms. If pressed, interlocutors either acknowledge or dismiss our observations of the many advantages that have accrued to Libya since its December 2003 decision to end its WMD programs. Ambassador Schulte met with Secretary of the General People's Committee for Manpower, Training and Employment (GPCMET) Matouq Matouq and Secretary for European Affairs at the General People's Committee for Foreign Liaison and International Cooperation Abdulati Obeidi, and academics from Al-Fateh University. Ambassador Schulte also held a roundtable discussion with Libyan-based journalists that highlighted U.S. support for peaceful uses of nuclear energy and international concerns over Iran's lack of cooperation with the IAEA. END SUMMARY.

LIBYANS CLAIM LIBYA MODEL DOES NOT OFFER ANY REWARDS

¶2. (C) In a 75 minute meeting with Matouq Matouq and his science advisors -- Dr. Ali Gashut, Director of the National Bureau for Research and Development (NBRD) and Dr. Mohammed Enami of the NBRD -- Ambassador Schulte heard the Libyan's standard opening gambit, " the Libyan case is not a good model for the rest of the world because Libya received no benefits from its decision to give up WMD programs." Matouq oversaw the Libyan WMD program before heading the GPCMET, and in his current position he oversees the related scientific activities under his very broad "employment" mandate. Matouq said, "I know we tell all the Americans the same thing in every meeting, but it is a basic fact that affects everything else we are trying to do." He told Schulte the Iranians "scorned" Libya for giving up something for nothing, and that within Libya, and especially the scientific community, there was an "internal feeling of resentment." He also described Libyan opposition groups in the U.S. and the UK that criticized the Libyan government for its decision to give up the WMD without negotiating for any concrete rewards. Schulte reminded Matouq that Libya reaped major benefits as sanctions were lifted, trade and investment opportunities flowed to Libya, Libya was offered WTO accession, and world leaders began to consult with Libya on matters of mutual interest.

¶3. (C) Asked for his assessment of the U.S.-Libyan cooperative activities up until this point, including the conversion of the Tajoura facility, Matouq said that the conversion was complete and successful. He hoped it would be fully operational by the end of September with even better performance than before. He was generally pleased with the on-going scientific engagement program focused on biological life sciences, environmental issues, water management, and mechanical engineering, but he and his colleagues were frustrated that there weren't any "deliverables" to show the Libyan people. While admittedly the Libyan priorities are technology transfer and training, they hoped for some specific, large projects that they could show the Libyan public as the "reward." They wanted the U.S. to build Libya a nuclear powered plant to desalinate water or generate electricity, or they wanted the U.S. to build a radioactive isotope production facility at Tripoli Medical Center to support cancer research throughout Africa. Matouq's team has also asked for water management assistance, microsatellites for the Remote Sensing Center to work on environmental monitoring, solar energy technology for power generation or water desalination, and desertification prevention assistance.

¶4. (C) When Schulte reviewed the U.S. Global Energy Partnership framework, Matouq responded, "there can't be a double standard; technologies should be disseminated equally to all countries through the IAEA. The UNSC should engage in more outreach to identify and limit WMD capabilities of all countries, while at the same time encouraging more use of nuclear power as a clean and efficient fuel." Matouq, noting Libya's full compliance with IAEA inspections, called for universal, regular inspections by IAEA officials since human interaction was a critical component of building confidence and "cameras can be adjusted." Matouq said he would attend the IAEA General Conference and would press his views in that forum.

IRANIAN INTERNAL POLITICS AND PRESTIGE OF WMD PROGRAMS ARE MOTIVATION

¶5. (C) Matouq's primary concern regarding proliferation was the potential diversion of nuclear material rather than enrichment activities by Iran or other countries. He said, "political assurances are not enough given the regular changes in government leadership." In his view, Iran was determined to "use nuclear to its end," whatever that meant -- the end of its fuel cycle, the end of its destructive power? Matouq, while his science advisors nodded their concurrence, said that in Libya's opinion the Iranian actions added up to weapons program development. He believed that the Ayatollah originated the WMD program in the 1980s, following on whatever research programs might have been underway while the Shah ruled Iran. The WMD program was initially deemed critically important to counter Iraq, but now had taken on even greater significance.

¶6. (C) Ambassador Schulte pressed for Libya to make the point forcefully to Iran that moving forward with its WMD program would only lead to isolation and a lack of prestige. Matouq replied that Iranian internal politics were driving its decisions. Iranian dignity is now invested in its nuclear capability. He broadened the discussion to argue that the conflict in Gaza and the war between Israel and Lebanon only encouraged Iranian fanatics, made it easier for the Muslim Brotherhood to recruit members, and fostered the spread of Wahabi radicalism. Matouq said, "continued Israeli killings inflame public opinion; you must not underestimate how this enrages Muslims." Using graphic language, he continued, "Libyans see Israelis hunting human meat using high-tech U.S. weapons and we can not accept this." Ambassador Schulte replied that the leadership in Tehran was encouraging violence. He also recounted the striking coincidence that the Hezbollah kidnapping of Israeli soldiers and missile attacks on Israel happened directly after Iran rebuffed Solana and the negotiating proposals on non-proliferation. When Matouq countered that "if the Israel and Palestinian problems were resolved, Iran would have less room to maneuver," Schulte agreed and added, " we also need to reframe the issue beyond a U.S-Iran debate and reflect the concern of the entire international community.

¶7. (C) In a subsequent session with Libya's IAEA Governor and Secretary for European Affairs at the General People's Committee for Foreign Liaison and International Cooperation Abdulati Obeidi, Secretary for American Affairs at the General People's Committee for Foreign Liaison and International Cooperation Ahmed Fatouri, Acting Americas Director Mohammed Hassan Ayaab of Ahmed Taboul, Acting Americas Director Mohammed Hassan Ayyad of the General People's Committee for Foreign Liaison and International Cooperation and five academics from Al-Fateh University. As Libya's representative to the IAEA, Obeidi highlighted that Libya took the initiative to end its WMD program and had worked closely with the U.S. and UK since December 2003 to resolve any outstanding concerns.

HOW TO ENGAGE WITH IRAN - DEADLINES AND CONFRONTATION WON'T WORK

¶8. (C) Obeidi's message was that Libya is in full agreement that the international community must prevent the spread of WMD. It wants to show that differences can be solved through peaceful negotiation. However, Obeidi advised, UNSC resolutions would not lead Iran to give up its program. Pressure, confrontation and challenge only make the Iranians more likely to take a defiant stand in Obeidi's assessment. He believed that Iran would try to avert straightforward compliance requests by converting issues into a political debate about national rights in the NAM and other public fora. "Political groups like the NAM will support the Iranians' position without fully comprehending the technical aspects of the case," Obeidi continued.

¶9. (C) "We agree the Iranians are playing for time," Obeidi said, "but you are helping them; why can there be no discussions on enrichment?" Obeidi said that more realistic positions with specific next steps could gain support, whereas setting a date for sanctions implementation would only strengthen the Iranian defiance. He said Libya was ready to work closely with the U.S. and others at the General Conference and at the NAM to keep Iran moving in the right direction, but that deadlines would not help.

¶10. (C) Ambassador Schulte emphasized to Obeidi and the other participants that Iran was trying to shift the debate from substantive points to a "denial of rights" whereas nuclear power encompassed not only rights but also obligations. Anticipating that Iran would try to highjack the NAM summit in Havana, it was important for other countries to convince them that security, respect and prestige are assured through international cooperation. The U.S. looked to Libya and others to make that point, especially since Iran continued to delay access by IAEA inspectors. Obeidi said that he looked forward to working with Ambassador Schulte in Vienna.

LIBYANS FRUSTRATED AT DIFFICULTY OBTAINING U.S. VISAS

¶11. (C) Although the Libyans did not grant the Embassy permission to conduct public diplomacy at Al-Fateh University, the Americas Desk did arrange for five chemistry and engineering professors to sit in on the Obeidi meeting and then host Ambassador Schulte for lunch. The professors were not interested in discussing policy, but did make clear their desire for U.S. funded projects in the fields of science and technology. All but one of the professors studied in the U.S. during the 1960s and hoped that they would be able to visit there again and send more students for graduate work. They noted the extreme difficulty to obtain U.S. visas since most Libyans are unwilling to travel to Tunisia for interviews at the consulate. The academics also acknowledged that most younger Libyans had limited English language skills and might not pass the TOEFL requirements to enter a graduate program. Schulte's carefully crafted presentation resonated with the Libyan interlocutors, even the Al-Fateh University science professors who professed to have no interest in policy.

PRESS QUESTIONS U.S. MIDDLE EAST POLICY

¶12. (C) Twenty Libya-based journalists and photographers attended a press roundtable with Ambassador Schulte for an hour-long session on nonproliferation issues. There were also many questions about U.S. policy in the Middle East and the U.S. role in the recent violence in Israel and Lebanon. One reporter queried, "why would Libya give up its relatively good relationship with Iran to align with the U.S. on this issue?" and Ambassador Schulte pointed out that it was not a U.S.-Iran issue, but a matter of grave concern to the international community. The IAEA had a clear position that reflected over three years of review. Several questions focused on the Israeli WMD program and questioned why the U.S. was not emphasizing the need for action against Israel -- with the response that the U.S. would support a Middle East free of nuclear weapons and that progress on the Middle East peace process was an important next step, along with the U.S. vision of two states living side by side in peace. As long as the leadership in Tehran opposes that vision and actively works against peace by trying to spark violence, it is deflecting attention from its lack of compliance with international obligations. Members of the Libyan press contacted Embassy staff after the roundtable to express their appreciation for the Ambassador's outreach efforts, commenting on his effective and thoughtful commentary.

(C) September 6, Charge and P/E Chief delivered reftel points to Ambassador Abdulati Obeidi, Secretary of European Affairs at the General People's Committee for Foreign Liaison and International Cooperation (MFA equivalent). Obeidi is also a primary interlocutor in the U.S.-Libyan bilateral relationship, Libya's representative to the IAEA Board of Governorsand and lead official on WMD issues. Obeidi said that Libya shared the concern of the international community and therefore was no longer engaged with North Korea. In response to our detailed list of actions that would stop North Korea from accessing material and financing for missile programs Obeidi replied, "speak with the Russians and the Chinese; we have no dealings with North Korea; we will cooperate with everyone to implement the resolution."

SUBJECT: LIBYAN SCIENTISTS DETAIL PRIORITIES FOR COOPERATIVE EFFORTS

REF: A) TRIPOLI 459 B) TRIPOLI 454 C) TRIPOLI 201

CLASSIFIED BY: Elizabeth Fritschle, Pol/Econ Chief, U.S. Liaison Office, Department of State.
REASON: 1.4 (b), (d)

¶1. (C) Scientists working at the National Bureau for Research and Development, linked to the General People's Committee for Manpower, Training and Employment (GPCMET) headed by Matouq Matouq have used a number of recent meetings to detail the types of projects that they hoped would result from Libya's decision to give up its WMD program. They are focused on developing peaceful uses of nuclear energy and preparing Libya for the challenges it faces from an expanding population and dwindling water supply. During the recent visit of Ambassador Schulte, reported reftel (a), Matouq and his team asked for specific projects in the nuclear field as well as a cooperative agreement to provide an overarching framework. Qadhafi told Senator Specter during a meeting August 23, reported reftel (b), that he believed the U.S. had offered to build him nuclear powered facilities and help with technology transfer to "make Libya the Japan of North Africa." During a NASA cooperative effort on solar physics in March, Libyan scientists also conveyed their wish list of cooperative efforts, reported reftel (c). A recent meeting of the TSCC Nuclear Subcommittee also focused on the scope of scientific cooperation desired by Matouq's team (reported septel).

WHAT LIBYANS WOULD CONSIDER THE "REWARD" FOR GIVING UP WMD?

¶2. (C) Matouq Matouq and his science advisors, Dr. Ali Gashut, Director of the National Bureau for Research and Development (NBRD) and Dr. Mohammed Enami of the NBRD , regularly harangue U.S. delegations that "the Libyan case is not a good model for the rest of the world because it received no benefits from its decision to give up WMD programs." If pressed, many interlocutors will acknowledge that Libya reaped significant benefits as sanctions were lifted: trade and investment opportunities flowed to Libya, Libya was offered WTO accession, and world leaders began to consult with Libya on matters of mutual interest. However, other interlocutors, including Qadhafi and officials at the General People's Committee for Foreign Liaison and International Cooperation fixate on the "rewards" to open almost any conversation about bilateral relations. It seems that the Libyan leadership has determined they need some "deliverables" to show the Libyan people, especially to counter criticism of the Jamahiriya regime by Libyan opposition groups, other Arab countries and Iran. While the Libyan priorities are still primarily technology transfer and training, they hoped for some specific, large projects that they could show the Libyan public as the "reward."

¶3. (C) During the last few months, the Libyans have highlighted the following activities that they would consider "reward" for giving up WMD. In their view, if they had these tangible projects to show the rest of the world, they could then argue for a "Libya Model" that might apply to other countries. During a recent meeting with Senator Specter reported septel, Qadhafi said that he had been told the U.S. and other countries would build nuclear power plants in Libya and that his country would become the, "Japan of North Africa."

¶4. (C) The Libyans would like to see the following projects supported by the U.S. At times, different Libyan interlocutors have insisted that the U.S.G. should fund the activities as compensation of the value of the WMD equipment that we took back to U.S. In the August 29 meeting between Matouq and Ambassador Schulte reported reftel (a), Matouq said that Libya had the funding needed for any of the projects, but it sought technical assistance and training.

THE LIST OF REWARDS

¶5. (C). As a first step, Matouq would like to see feasiblity studies conducted by U.S. firms for nuclear power generation in Libya. The list of project priorities also includes the following:

* nuclear power generation for Libya - possibly for exporting power to other countries

* nuclear powered water desalination plants

* a nuclear medicine center at the Tripoli Medical Center with the ability to develop radioactive isotopes.

* solar energy technology for power generation

* solar energy technology for water processing - both desalination and waste water management

* microsatellites for the Libyan Remote Sensing Center to use in urban planning and environmental monitoring. They also request licensing for high-resolution images received by U.S. satellites to further work in desertification studies and water resource management.

* technical and scientific training related to desertification prevention, sandstorm research, desert geology, disaster monitoring and meterorite studies

* water management projects

* an international project or bilateral project to build a new telescope in the Libyan desert.

¶6. (C) Matouq and his team are generally pleased with the ongoing scientific cooperation projects that are currently underway on biological life sciences, mechanical engineering, water management and nuclear medicine, but they are looking for "big-ticket" items that they can use to expand scientific research, generate employment, and counter criticism. Training activities and visitor programs to exchange information may be what the Libyans need, but it doesn't help them with their public perception problems. Although the U.S. is expending significant time and energy assisting with Libya's chemical weapons destruction program, Libyans do not consider that assistance as a "reward". On their balance sheet, the U.S. does not get credit for activities that we intitiate or fund - - paying for the removal of their dangerous materials, or helping convert their Tajoura facility from HEU to LEU, or offering a million dollar grant for Avian flu prevention, or any of our many other bilateral programs.

¶7. (C) The Libyan scientists are reaching out to the G8 countries, especially France, Japan, and Russia, to request assistance with the same list of projects. Both the French and Japanese have signed cooperative agreements that are non-specific but pledge future collaboration in these areas. When the Japanese Ambassador to Libya was describing his strategy, he acknowledged that some of the Libyan objectives are unrealistic. He said," we know that a radioactive isotope facility may not be cost effective for the Libyans or a good business model, but if they want it and are willing to pay for it, we will help them move forward. The cooperative effort between our two countries is more important than the final outcome; we will gain significant benefits from the process of working together even if the results are not a guaranteed success."

¶8. (C) While post looks to the TSCC nuclear subcommittee (proceedings reported septel) to determine the appropriate scope of nuclear cooperation, as export license restrictions are being revised, hopefully some of the Libyan priorities will be able to move forward in the short term, particularly on solar energy applications. We appreciate NEA/RA and ISN efforts to continue the scientific engagement activities already underway. If OES organizes a delegation to visit Libya, U.S. officials should be prepared to address the Libyan priorities, along with clear guidance on whether or not an activity is feasible, and if so, what timelines are possible. If delegation members can provide ballpark cost estimates, Matouq and others in the Libyan leadership can begin working through their convoluted system to set aside funds for the activities. Post is also following up on the cooperation efforts explored with the General Peoples Committees during the Dobriansky delegation visit. Given the lack of coordination in the Libyan Jamahiriya (translate: state of the masses) government, we will attempt to ascertain the additional priority opportunities in health, agriculture and environment fields that are not reflected in the list presented by Matouq's group of scientists.

TO US FOR FIRST TIME IN 20 YEARS

¶1. (SBU) SUMMARY. The Chairman & General Manager of Libya's largest investment company, the Libyan Foreign Investment Company (LFICO), recently met with Econoff to discuss the company's history and future prospects for investment. LFICO, government owned and established in 1981, is moving away from its previous focus on investments in Africa and turning more towards the Middle East, Europe, and even the US. The company's portfolio, while diverse, has an emphasis on the hotel and agriculture industries, especially in neighboring Egypt. This month, LFICO, part owner of the Maltese-based Corinthia Hotel Group, formally announced its first major post-sanctions deal with a US company, Dallas based Wyndham Hotel Group, and is also investing in bio-diesel plants in Houston. END SUMMARY.

COMPANY BACKGROUND

¶2. (SBU) Econoff reviewed LFICO's current activities and future plans with General Manager and Chairman Abdulfatah Sharif on August 16th. Established in 1981 under the name Libyan Arab Foreign Investment Company (LAFICO), the company is wholly owned by the General People's committee that serves as the equivalent of a Ministry of Trade and Economy and managed by a board of directors. The Libyan Arab Foreign Bank (LAFB), the parent of the LFICO, is controlled by Libya's central bank. Approximately 200 LFICO employees work in the company's headquarters in Gharyan, a desert town 80 miles south of Tripoli, while approximately 100 operate in overseas offices located in Cairo, Valletta, Rome and other capitals. LFICO operates in some ways like other Jamahiriya entities, with Libya based employees receiving a relatively modest government salary, while those posted abroad are compensated with higher wages in dollars or euros. Sharif, an economist by training, started with the company in the late 1980's and worked his way up to his present position. Sharif said the company, with a present capital of US 2 billion, is moving away from the trend of investing in African companies, a portfolio now being managed by its subsidiary, the Libyan African Investment Company.

EMPHASIS ON HOTEL AND AGRICULTURE INDUSTRIES

¶3.(SBU) Sharif described LFICO's investment portfolio as diverse, but primarily centered around the hotel and agriculture industries. In neighboring Egypt, where LFICO maintains 22 full time employees, the company as a heavy stake in the hotel industry, owning 15% of the Conrad, 20% of the Ramses Hilton, as well as shares in the Sheraton and JW Marriott. It recently purchased 100% of the high end Four Seasons Hotel in Sharm Al-Sheikh. Sharif characterizes the hotel industry as "less risky than manufacturing," a motivating factor in their investment strategy. The company also own approximately 30,000 acres of agricultural land in Egypt, mainly utilized for agricultural investment projects and cultivating fruits and vegetables. LFICO boasts an assortment of other investments throughout Europe, North Africa, and China, where it has invested in the textile and electronics industries. In Europe, much of its capital is focused on Italy, its former colonizer, where it purchased 2% of Fiat. In 2001, LFICO bought 7.5% of Italian soccer club Juventus, and Qadhafi's soccer aficionado son Al-Saadi sits on the board. LFICO also owns 15% of Tamoil Europe and has over 500 million USD worth of real estate investments in the UK.

US INVESTMENTS

¶4. (SBU) With the lifting of US sanctions on Libya, LFICO has started to reenter the US market, where its assets were frozen in 1986. In what Sharif characterizes as LFICO's most significant post-sanctions investment in the US, on August 10, the Maltese based Corinthia Group of Companies, 47% owned by LFICO, announced an agreement with the Wyndham Hotel Group to jointly manage 15 existing Corinthia hotels under the Wyndham and Ramada brands in the Europe, Middle East, and Africa regions. According to the manager of the Corinthia in Tripoli, the location of the US Embassy, the details of the agreement have yet to be finalized, but many four-star Corithia Hotels in Europe and the Middle East will take on the Ramada name, while some five star hotels will take on the Wyndham logo. The companies will also start to merge hotel management services, sales and marketing teams. LFICO also recently purchased 50% of a bio-diesel plant from the Geogreen company operating out of Houston, Texas. According to Sharif, Geogreen and LFICO plan to open several new bio-diesel plants in Texas over the next two years. LFICO is also actively investing in the NYSE, NASDAQ, and Chicago Exchange Market.

¶5. (SBU) COMMENT. Prior to the ending of sanctions, company management had been elusive with western media about sharing information on its investment portfolio. Econoff provided Sharif with the contact information for appropriate interlocutors at the Department of Commerce, and encouraged him to get in touch with them regarding any inquiries they might have on investment in the US . END COMMENT.

SUBJECT: LIBYA SUBMITS GRANT APPLICATION FOR HHS ASSISTANCE IN PANDEMIC/AVIAN INFLUENZA

¶1. SUMMARY: On August 29-31, 2006 Dr. Mustafa Mansour of Navy Medical Research Unit -3 of Cairo, and ESTH officer met with Dr. Abduhafid Abudher of the Libyan National (African) Center for Infectious Disease Control to finalize a grant application for U.S. assistance to the Libyan Government in public health issues associated with influenza preparedness. The Libyans finalized a $1 Million grant application/request, as offered by the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services (HHS) to the Libyan General People's Committee for Health and Environment (GPCHE) as a non-competitive grant award. The application was then locally approved and signed by Mr. Habeb Tamer, the Undersecretary of the GPCHE. Pending HHS approval, the application will fully obligate the funds in FY06 monies for use by the GPCHE in FY07. END SUMMARY.

HHS Grant Fulfills Cooperative Agreement Signed in July:

¶2. During HHS Deputy Secretary Alex Azar's July visit to Tripoli, Dr. Tamer and Mr. Azar signed an agreement to participate in a cooperative initiative for the development of public health and security, with particular reference to public health incidents related to influenza. Attached to this agreement was an offer by HHS to provide the GPCHE a non-competitive grant in the amount of USD$1 Million to foster this cooperation through continued partnerships in disease surveillance, preparedness and response capabilities. The grant application signed by Mr. Tamer and Dr. Mansour on August 31, 2006 aimed to fully obligate these funds to set up sentinel site staff and capabilities that integrated with Libya's existing disease surveillance infrastructure.

Libyan Application Structured to Address Three Pillars of Preparedness:

¶3. HHS provided Dr. Mansour with an outline of a desired format for the proposal with some suggested benchmarks and areas of consideration that would be included in such an application. Dr. Abudher reviewed this outline, and presented it to the combined Libyan Committee for Public Health which consists of representatives from the GPCHE and the General People's Committee for Agriculture (GPCA). The GPCA has dominion over the veterinary portion of disease surveillance and reporting. The group modified and completed the outline. The combined committee was concerned that the document would not reflect Libya's existing disease surveillance and reporting capabilities, and ensured that the language in the proposal stated the grant money would be used to strengthen existing institutions, not establish new ones. This was a very important point to both the GPCHE and GPCA leadership, and was reiterated several times to Dr. Mansour and ESTH Officer.

¶4. The application was titled: Surveillance and Response to Highly Pathogenic Avian and Pandemic Influenza in the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya, submitted in response to the RFP issued by the HHS Office of the Secretary, Office of Public Health and Science, Office of Global Health Affairs. The application includes measures to address the three pillars of pandemic preparedness: a) Preparedness and Communication, b) Surveillance and Detection, c) Response and Containment. Using these three pillars, a schedule of proposed activities through FY07 was established and agreed upon by the Libyans and Dr. Mansour. The schedule outlined specific activities and the associated funding requested for each activity, as well as a separate section to allow for supplemental payments to sentinel and management staff that will be involved with the program.

Libyan Committed to Accountability and Achieving Benchmarks:

¶5. Dr. Abudher was very concerned about meeting the U.S. expectations for the application, and paid strict attention to how the monies were allocated. He asked how the grant would be dispensed, managed and accounted. He and Mr. Tamer recommended establishing an account with two to three guardians with access to the funds. They were open to suggestions from HHS, and welcomed any input in this matter. They were also concerned about how the program would be benchmarked or evaluated, and sought input on a means of accountability to the timeline and scheduled activities. They understood that the program was intended as a starting point for cooperation between U.S. and Libyan health communities, and were very excited about the opportunities for interaction that this program offered. They will be seeking increased U.S. participation in Libyan health issues beyond the initial influenza program, and believe the HHS initiative will foster the working level relationships necessary to broaden the scope of cooperation.

Next Steps:

¶6. HHS and the GPCHE will continue work on the specifics of the funds transfer, as well as the accountability to the schedule. Activities are planned in each of the three pillars that include either Libyan participation in regional workshops and programs, or visits to Libya by topical specialists. These activities will continue working level contact and develop further cooperation between the U.S. and Libya. Mr. Tamer and Dr. Abudher understand that this initial agreement is a framework for evaluating opportunities for further cooperation and establishing new programs. Pending approval from HHS of the grant application, the Libyans are ready to move on the planned schedule of activities. The only caveat to their eagerness is that the Ramadan season begins September 23, and this will certainly slow the initial progress of activities, but there is every opportunity to have the program fully functioning by the end of November.

¶7. U.S. travelers proposing grant-related travel to Libya should allow a minimum of eight weeks for visa approvals to be processed. Similarly, Libyans must travel to Embassy Tunis to apply for visas and interagency proposals. Follow-on activities should factor a minimum of eight weeks lead time if training in the U.S. is offered. Any planned workshops that can be arranged in Cairo at the NAMRU-3 facility, pending facility availability, should be considered to minimize issues related to visa restrictions for travelers.

¶1. (C) During a September 10 meeting with General People's Committee for Foreign Liaison and International Cooperation (MFA) Under Secretary for the Americas Ahmed Al-Fitouri, Charge discussed Ref A points urging Libyan support for the full implementation of UNSCR 1701, and Ref B points urging that Libya oppose development of a common NAM position in support of Iran's nuclear program. Per Refs C and D, Charge also ensured that GPCFLIC (MFA) was aware that Libyan national Abu Faraj Al-Libi was among the fourteen senior Al-Qaeda members transferred to DOD custody in Guantanomo and would receive the same standard of treatment as all other detainees in Guantanomo.

¶2. (C) On Lebanon, Fitouri replied that Libya was providing humanitarian contributions of food, medicine and housing construction in the south. Libya intends to channel its assistance to Lebanon through the Arab League, Fitouri said. Fitouri asked that the U.S. also look at how UNESCO World Heritage sights in Lebanon could be better protected from damage during hostilities.

¶3. (C) On Iran at the NAM, Fitouri noted that the GOL had taken note of similar points made by visiting UNVIE Ambassador Schulte during his August 28-30 visit here (Ref E).

¶4. (C) On Abu Faraj Al-Libi, Fitouri thanked us for the information and said he would ensure relevant authorities were aware of it.

SUBJECT: PROPOSED COOPERATION WITH LIBYAN BOARD OF MEDICAL SPECIALTIES IN TRAINING AND BOARD CERTIFICATION PROCEDURES

¶1. SUMMARY: On August 30, 2006, ESTH officer and Dr. Mustafa Mansour of the Navy Medical Research Unit 3 (NAMRU 3) in Cairo, visited the Libyan Board of Medical Specialties to follow up on the July visit of U.S. Department of Health and Human Services Deputy Secretary Alex Azar. DepSec Azar and the Board agreed to collaborate, expand and improve Libya's medical board certification process with particular attention to creating recognized certifications in sub-specialties. The Libyans were challenged by ESTH officer to determine what sort of cooperation or workshop programs would benefit the board, and they responded with two reasonable proposals. The first was a basic discussion on the benefits, feasibility and technology associated with a telemedicine program. The second proposal was for the Libyans to fully fund a series of workshop visits by U.S. physicians, capable of conducting sub-specialty focused workshops in a continuing education capacity, with a secondary goal of discussing and evaluating the board certification criteria in the relevant sub-specialty during the visit. END SUMMARY.

Medical Board Hopes for Sustained Mutual Cooperation

¶2. DepSec Azar met in July with President of the Libyan Board of Medical Specialties Dr. Mustafa M. Zaidi. Dr. Zaidi was not able to attend the August 30 Embassy coordination session, but his priorities were presented by the three following board members:

--Dr. Elhadi Hussein, Consultant of Urology and Andrology to Libyan Board of Medical Specialties
--Dr. Abdulhalim Shebani, Specialist Surgeon (ENT), Director of International Cooperation for Libyan Board
--Dr. Gasem Amar Baruni, Chairman of Examination Committee, Libyan Medical Board

The Board had retained a great deal of excitement from Mr. Azar's visit, and was adamant about not "letting the fire grow cold" on U.S. cooperation with the Libyan medical community. The group's proposals are focused and reasonable, but they are concerned that their practical efforts will be fruitless if they do not lead to institutional cooperation between the Libyan government and the U.S. government. They expressed their understanding of the importance of personal relationships in such cooperation, but showed an insightful knowledge of how sustained institutional / federal cooperation could enhance the board's capabilities and international standing.

Libyans Propose Enhancing Medical Board Certification Process

¶3. The board members proposed "concrete" programs to enhance Libya's medical board certification process, first, expanding Libya's ability to certify (with credibility) physicians in sub-specialties. Visiting U.S. physicians would be asked to conduct workshops with a secondary focus on examining and enhancing the Libyan Board's certification process for the relevant sub-specialty. The Libyans offered to fully fund the travel, lodging and expenses of the visiting physicians. A workshop on laparoscopic techniques is the boards first priority. ESTH officer asked if there were particular techniques or procedures in which they were interested, or if they were interested in a more general endoscopic workshop. The board restated that a general workshop on laparoscopic techniques was ideal, and that they preferred a U.S. physician capable of evaluating/improving their related sub-specialty board certification process. They were also open to any technological aspects that could be added to such a presentation such as partnering with equipment manufacturers to demonstrate or provide equipment familiar to the visiting surgeon.

¶4. As a sample visit itinerary, the Libyan Board suggested the following:

--A one week visit to Tripoli fully funded (Travel, Lodging and Per Diem)
--Conduct workshop lectures in the Libyan Medical Board conference auditorium.
--Perform Rounds in a local hospital with the aim of discussing management practice and bedside manner
--Lead or observe a series of surgical procedures (at Physicians discretion)
--(ESTH Officer also recommended cadaver labs or animal labs if the surgeon so desired)
--Evaluate and discuss board certification procedures and examinations. Provide feedback and recommend areas for improvement.

Libyans Seek Assistance in Developing Telemedicine Program

¶5. In addition, the board members were interested in discussing medical information technology issues, with regard to developing a comprehensive telemedicine program for Libya. ESTH Officer is working with local medical IT providers and the Embassy Family Nurse Practitioner, a former telemedicine unit manager, to arrange a presentation to the board detailing hardware, software and hospital infrastructure requirements necessary for such a program.

¶6. The board mentioned several long term proposals that were in line with DepSec Azar's July discussions, including a visit for 4-6 of the board members to the U.S. to work toward strengthening their board evaluation and examination procedures. ESTH Officer agreed to pass the request to HHS and OES. Please advise department interest in pursuing such a program.

Next Steps:

¶7. ESTH Officer will meet with the Libyan Board again on the week of September 17-21 (before the beginning of Ramadan) to discuss the proposed cooperative programs. The Libyan Board made clear their desire to maintain the momentum generated by Mr. Azar's visit, and showed their good faith by offering to fund the travel of U.S. physicians/surgeons to conduct the workshops. Their proposed visit to the U.S. would provide an excellent opportunity for the board members to discuss their processes and procedures and observe, first-hand, U.S. evaluation and examination procedures. The trip would also engender a great deal of good-will within the Libyan health community. If OES, HHS or NAMRU 3 have additional insights or particular interest in participation in such programs, please notify Embassy Tripoli.

¶8. Although the Libyan Board has agreed to support visa issuance for travel related to their proposals, any U.S. travelers planning travel to Libya should allow a minimum of eight weeks for visa approvals to be processed. Similarly, Libyans must travel to Embassy Tunis to apply for visas, and any proposals for activities including Libyan travel to the U.S. should factor a minimum of eight weeks lead time for visa issuance.

¶1. (SBU) Charge' convened an EAC to discuss Embassy Tripoli's current security stance in light of the September 12 attack on Embassy Damascus, and last week's attack near Embassy Kabul. Present at the EAC were CDA(A), MGT, MED, DAO, RMAS, POL/ECON, Consular and the Acting RSO.

¶2. (S/NF) RMAS and RSO advised the EAC on the information that they received from open sources regarding the attack in Damascus. RMAS reported that they did not have any credible threats directed towards Libya.

¶3. (S/NF) The RSO discussed the current security posture at post. He briefed on a meeting he and Charge' held earlier in the day with RSO's security contact (Libyan External Security Organization (ESO) Col. Nuri Mokhtar) to discuss post's unresolved security issues. (Note: Since ESO has responsibilities for diplomatic security in Libya, RSO is compelled to interface with them rather than Libyan law enforcement entities on phsyical security matters. End Note.)

¶4. (S/NF) Below is the detailed list of the issues discussed at the EAC, in the earlier meeting on the 12th and over the past 24 months. (Several of the issues were raised again with ESO Director Musa Kusa in a September 13 meeting, see para. 5.)

(a) The Embassy's villa annex (housing RMAS, IRM classified commo, and DAO classified commo.) is 8 kilometers from the Embassy and is housed in a villa at the end of a street terminating in a cul-de-sac. Five months ago, the Embassy installed a drop-arm device that would restrict access and afford 30 meters of set-back. The drop-arm was initially installed with an agreement from the ESO that it could be used and manned by Embassy staff. Once installed however, the ESO stated that neither Embassy staff, nor existing ESO guards at the site would be permitted to operate the drop bar. This vehicle barrier is currently in the "up" position leaving the annex vulnerable to a VBIED attack. Post and visiting delegations have repeatedly raised this problem since the drop arm's installation.

(b) Additional ESO/law enforcement support was requested for the annex and the Embassy (housed in the Corinthia Bab Africa Hotel). The hotel and annex currently have one ESO vehicle each allotted for protection. The RSO has pointed out that the vehicle at the Embassy is over 100 yards away and practically useless in the event of an attack, particularly a building over-run. More often than not, this vehicle has unarmed guards without radios. Note: RSO does not consider the ESO to be adequate in the counterattack realm. The organization lacks doctrine, training and equipment with regards to countering an attack. The vehicle placed at the annex is a small Toyota Corolla and, often but not always, has been used as a blocking vehicle directly underneath the open drop bar. We pointed out that the vehicle is a blocking vehicle is a poor alternative to the purpose-built drop-arm.

(c) The closure of two driveways in front of the hotel (to afford additional setback for the embassy) was requested. Based on commercial concerns, the hotel management has been hesitant to agree to initiate security measures in the hotel. The hotel currently has three driveways in front of the property. The first allows vehicles to park directly in front of the hotel while the second and third driveways are approximately 20 and 40 meters away from the hotel. Last year, the hotel was willing to close the entrance (but not the exit) end of the first driveway. Therefore, all three driveways remain open to vehicles and VBIED attack. We reminded ESO that within 100 feet of the glass-fronted lobby (well within the first and second drive-way) a small amount of TNT, or equivalent, would cause devastating damage to the lobby portion of the hotel damage to the lobby portion of the hotel.

(d) The Embassy is currently located on floors 5-8 in tower one of the hotel. An individual departing the common elevators can enter the Embassy with minimal restriction because for insurance reasons, the hotel requires that doors be kept open between the corridors and the elevator area. The Libyan government (GOL) had prohibited the Embassy from providing its guards with self-defense tools. Also, the ESO does little to restrict pedestrian entrance to the elevators. The RSO requested that all embassy doors be shut and a service elevator be blocked from reaching embassy floors. During a recent incident, a female EDP attempted to enter the embassy floors and speak with the Charge' and it took over twenty mintues to convince ESO to remove her. We explained to the ESO (and to the hotel management repeatedly over the past two years) that if the hallway doors were shut and locked, the embassy would have some security and access control. The RSO has also raised concerns that the hotel may be under surveillance.

(e) The ESO liaison officer's response to these requests were that they would "respond soon." This has been a common, oft heard response.

¶5. (S/NF) Charge' used a pre-existing September 14 meeting between visiting OBO Real Estate Director and External Security Organization Director Musa Kusa to raise the aforementioned security issues at a higher level. RMAS Chief and RSOwee alo pesen. Kusa stated that he would review our requests. After expressing confidence that the Libyan authorities would never allow an attack to reach implementation, Kusa questioned the utility of the drop arm noting that while it would force a detonation further out toward the street, people would still die . He eventually allowed that if Libyans living behind the drop bar do not object, he will allow its operation. He asked ESO BG Muhammad Ajaj, to report back to him on our hotel-related requests.

¶6. (C) Charge also flagged our security concerns for MFA North America Director Mohammed Al-Ayyaib in a September 13 meeting. The Embassy will continue to work with the Libyan authorities to address these security issues.

¶7. (S/NF) The EAC also discussed the on-going development of post's Emergency Action Plan along with our current personal security, especially driving practices. The need to vary routes and times of embassy vehicles including school buses was discussed. The EAC also reviewed its motor vehicle policy regarding transporting EFM's during emergency situations.

¶8. (S/NF) Without more specific and credible information, the EAC agreed, that the embassy would remain operational and would not curtail any of its upcoming events. The EAC proposed that a meeting with the director of the ESO be requested.

¶9. (SBU) Post will re-convene the EAC should new information arise.

¶1. (C) Summary: On September 1, 2006, an unknown group of individuals threw stones at buses holding transporting the diplomatic corps to Libyan National Day celebrations in Beida, (eastern) Libya.

¶2. (C) September 1 is celebrated as National Day or Revolution Day. It commemorates Colonel Moamar Qadhafi and the Free Officers Movement's overthrow of King Idris in a 1969 military coup. The government generally picks a different town each year to hold large celebrations. This year, the celebration occurred in Beida, Libya, approximately 200 miles to the southeast of Benghazi. Note: The government of Libya faces more internal opposition in the eastern part of the country than it does elsewhere. Benghazi was the site of the February 2006 "Danish Cartoon" riots where reportedly over twelve people were killed and hundreds were injured in a clash with the local security forces.

¶3. (C) As part of the formal events hosted by the Libyan government in Beida, a group of Tripoli-based diplomats boarded two fifty-passenger buses to travel from an exhibition ground to a tented reception area on the other side of town. Approximately 12 blocks from the exhibition ground, away from the troops that protected the ceremonial area, several young men on the roadside threw stones at the the vehicles, creating dramatic noise and causing the diplomats to crouch down protectively in case the windows broke. None of the bus windows shattered, but the rocks left visible dents in windows and the side of the vehicle. The U.S. diplomat attendeding the event counted about 50 indentations in each bus. Libyan police did not escort the two buses transporting the diplomats. There were no injuries sustained nor were there any arrests made. The Libyan Protocol officer coordinating the diplomatic participation in the festivities tried to dismiss the incident as "two groups of boys playing roughly and the buses just got in the way." To the diplomats on board the bus, it appeared the young men were targeting the bus with clear intent.

¶4. (C) The RSO was informed of the incident on September 4. RSO will emphasize the importance of police protection for U.S. diplomats during these events.

¶5. (C) COMMENT. This appears to be another example of simmering resentment beneath the surface of the Libyan Jamahiriya or "state of the masses". As with the Benghazi riots in February, government-organized events, even those with security in place have the potential to become uncontrolled protests. In this case, police, security and military troops were extensively deployed around the ceremonial exhibition area to provide crowd control. Most of the attendees were young men bused in from around the country to represent their student groups or General People's Committees. Buses and mini-vans were packed closely all around the main exhibition ground to transport the visitors home at the end of the celebration. Away from the festivities, the town of Beida reflected the low level of economic development evident throughout Libya. The sense of celebration did not extend beyond the fairground. The rest of Beida consisted of drab apartment blocks with unemployed or underemployed residents going about their daily routine. The Beida rock throwers may have been acting out against the "outside" young men bused into their community, or acting out against buses carrying Libyan government dignitaries, or targeting diplomats in Libyan government buses. While we can't determine the exact motivation, it was clear from their angry determine the exact motivation, it was clear from their angry faces and forceful stone throwing that they were trying to leave an impression. They succeeded. END COMMENT.

¶1. (U) Summary. The TSCC Biological Subcommittee met in Tripoli August 8-10, 2006. The two and one half day meeting included: a general discussion of progress made to date in implementing the "Roadmap for the Way Forward in Cooperative Engagement in the Life Sciences;" an update of the Roadmap; presentations on, and discussion of, BWC national implementation and pathogen security legislation; a visit to a military facility in Tajura; a visit to the Disease Surveillance Center based in Zliten City; a meeting with the Libyan delegation planning to visit London in September 2006; and a presentation by NAMRU-3 Director Dr. Bruce Boynton. The Libyans provided, under instructions, a copy of the inventory of the GHL equipment that has been moved and stored at the BTRC. U.S. and UK Reps expressed the hope that delays encountered to date in implementing the roadmap were of the past. The oft-postponed Disease Surveillance Workshop was tentatively scheduled for January 21, 2007 in conjuntion with a meeting of the SubCommittee, with venue and participation still to be determined. U.S. and UK members found the meeting productive and their Libyan counterparts enthusiastic and cooperative. End Summary.

August 8 / Opening of SubCommittee Meeting/Agreement on Agenda:

¶2. (U) After initial pleasantries, Dr. Mohamed M. Sharif, head of the Libyan National Committee on Bioetchics and Biosafety (LNCBB), provided, under instructions, a copy of the inventory of the GHL equipment that has been moved and stored at the BTRC, which had originally been requested during the January 2006 TSCC Bio Subcommittee meeting. U.S. and UK teams welcomed receipt of the long-delayed list. The U.S. side also expressed the hope that recent problems encountered, such as the Libyan's postponement of the London visit, were now behind us. UK expressed its satisfaction with arrangements for the meeting, and plans for the now-upcoming visit to London rescheduled for September 2006.

Review of Progress to Date:

¶3. (U) The SubCommittee reviewed progress in implementing the Roadmap and updated it (see para 12). Libya also reported on establishing institutional review boards (IRBs) at three Universities (Al Fatah, Garyounis, and Sabha), noting that they may wish to consult U.S. and UK experts on their implementation; U.S. and UK indicated their availability and interest. Collaborative progress to date has included the following:

--Two workshops in October 2004 and January 2005 (bioethics and biosafety);

--Submission by Libya of BWC CBMs in 2005 and again in 2006 (comment: although we understand Libya did provide CBMs to the UN for 2006 (the Libyans and UN contacts confirm this), we were unable to obtain a copy. Libyan counterparts said they would provide to us via the Embassy);

--Development and updating a draft roadmap for cooperative engagement in the life sciences;

--NAMRU-3 initiated (and is expanding) engagement with Libya, together with the World Health Organization;

--Participation by Libyan experts in two Conferences held in Cairo in February 2006 (one by FAO-ICARDA Conference on biotechnology and genetic engineering and one on HIV/AIDs);

--Participation by Libyan experts in a biosecurity workshop in Amman, Jordan in April 2006, coupled with a trip to the Field Epidemiology Training Program in Amman;

--An invitation from the American Biological Safety Association (ABSA) for six Libyan experts to participate in their annual meeting in Boston in October 2006 was forwarded to Dr. Sharif for the invitees in June 2006;

--A renewed invitation by the UK for Libyan experts to visit London for a visit focusing on cooperation in the life sciences in September 2006.

¶4. (U) August 9: Discussion of BWC National Implementation and Pathogen Security Legislation: The U.S. initiated discussion on legislation with a presentation on pathogen security covering definitions, the need to build a pathogen security program, how to develop risk assessment and management processes, and types of information that are required for implementation. A second U.S. presentation focused on national implementation of the Biological Weapons Convention (BWC) and related pathogen security legislation. U.S.-developed model legislation was used to discuss the differences between the U.S. approach and two draft Libyan laws provided earlier to U.S. experts on "Concerning the Manifestation and Handling of Extremely Dangerous Live Organisms in the Libyan Jamahiriyya and "Establishment of a Mechanism to Provide Early Warning Against the Spread of Diseases in the Libyan Jamahiriyya." A professor of international law from Al-Fatah University joined the Libyan side, which already included a lawyer from the Ministry of Justice, to participate in these discsussions. The UK commented that each national legislation differed slightly with respect to their respective national legal frameworks. The UK also highlighted and handed over information on the UK-based NGO Verficiation, Research, training, and Information Center (VERTIC) study that was examining national implementation and legislation related to the BWC and various nuclear treaties. U.S. agreed to provide an Arabic translation of the model legislation at the request of Libyan experts, who expressed the hope that it could be drawn upon it in their legislative drafting.

August 9: Visit to Military Facility in Tajura:

¶5. (S) SubCommittee members visited General El-Ghadi's defensive training facility in Tajura. (Comment. U.S. and UK experts visited El-Ghadi's facility and toured an NBC Defense School run by Col. Othmann, El-Gahdi's deputy, on February 16, 2004. This appears to be the same facility. See Ref: LTAG 014-2004, 031446Z MAR 04, DTRA-OSE 031446Z, para 4. End Comment.) They were met by Col. Othmann, the Head of the Libyan Nuclear and Chemical Defense School. After providing a tour of some of the facilities on the compound and answering questions, Othmann stated that the school trained military personnel only on nuclear and chemical defense and explained that they have no provision for training for biological defense, nor do they have plans to do so in the future at this facility. Rather, the military will rely on the Libyan public health service to provide medical aid if there was a disease outbreak. He also took the SubCommittee to a CW a disease outbreak. He also took the SubCommittee to a CW defensive lab under construction, which he explained may take another year to complete. Equipment has been purchased for the lab and was on site. The classrooms and laboratory facility appear to comprise a fairly small portion of the military compound, and the U.S. and UK did not have the opportunity to view any buildings on the remainder of the compound. Of note, this occasion was the first time Libyan NCBB members had visited this facility.

¶6. (S) Comment. In his September 2005 meeting with the SubCommittee General El-Ghadi focused more on the chemical vice the biological defensive activities planned for his facility; however, he certainly implied that biological weapons defense would be a part of its mission. UK team notes, however, that Col. Othmann's comments were fully consistent with what they had heard before and that they had always understood the facility to focus on chemical and radiological defense. U.S. and UK experts were both told that a lab under construction at the facility wold be for chemical weapons defensive purposes; U.S. and UK explained that Libya might have to declare it to the OPCW. The lab U.S. and UK experts were taken to on August 9 is still under construction (old classroom section being refitted), includes an air handling system, an almost fully tiled "preparation room," and what appeared to be a "cold storage" room, all of which are consistent with a lab that could be used for work with chemical and/or biological agents. Although the lab could easily be completed in a short time, Col Othmann and his staff estimated that it could take up to a year to finish construction. SubCommittee members did not ask to see the on-site equipment, but suggests that a future visit by CW experts might be useful to help determine the capabilities and purpose of the completed laboratory. End Comment.)

August 10: Visit to Disease Surveillance Center in Zliten City:

¶7. (U) SubCommittee members visited the National Center for Infectious Disease Prevention and Control (NCIDC). Dr. Smeo, the hospitable and talkative head of the Center, provided a presentation on the activities of the Center and a tour of the Center. Visitors were taken to one small lab space capable of biosafety level 2 work, and to a number of stations where computers were being used to enter data. The Center seemed to be well equipped and efficiently functioning. This occasion was the first visit to the Center by the Libyan NCBB members; in a private aside, Dr. Sharif mentioned to a U.S. colleague that he had expected "more" from the Center.

August 10: Meeting with Libyan Delegation to London Meeting:

¶8. (U) The UK provided an outline agenda for the visit, scheduled for September 7-15, 2006. They also provided suitable web sites for the delegation to obtain further information about each of the facilities they would be visiting.

August 10: Presentation by NAMRU-3 Director on Cooperation with Libya
---

¶9. (U) Dr. Bruce Boynton, Director of NAMRU-3, outlined the NAMRU-3 Mission and its relationship with the World Health Organization. He described recently initiated collaborative scientific exchanges with Libyan experts. The question and answer session proved to be useful in obtaining more information on endemic disease in Libya, which will be helpful to NAMRU-3 in tailoring its collaborative efforts with Libya.

¶1. (C) SUMMARY. The GOL is beginning to work with international partners such as UNHCR and IOM on facing their migration challenges, but there is still ample room for strengthening cooperation. A staggering 750,000 to one million migrant workers currently live within Libya's borders in addition to its local population of 5.5 million. Migrant workers from Africa and Egypt contribute to the economy and fill jobs that traditionally Libyans have not been willing to perform, especially menial and semi-skilled labor. Libya is trying to maintain a balance in stemming the tide of illegal migration from Africa, while still maintain its leading role in the continent. An upcoming UN conference on migration might be a platform to engage with the international community on combating illegal migration. While trying to secure its land borders, it also must grapple with the growing issue of foreign nationals using its coastline as a launching point for the dangerous boat journey to Europe. The Secretary of Labor, while recognizing the need for foreign labor sources, is under pressure to bring down the high unemployment rate for the country's young population. Clearly, the GOL is willing to work with international partners to a certain degree on its migrant worker challenges, but there is no clear timetable for doing so. END SUMMARY.

MIGRATION BY THE NUMBERS

¶2. (SBU) International organizations estimate there are 750,000 to one million migrants within Libyan borders, working mainly in the construction, oil, hotel and restaurant industries. In a country with a local population of only 5.5 million, their presence is highly apparent. Of these migrant workers, UNHCR believes that approximately 5% fall within their mandate, especially those from the Horn of Africa region. While migrants from most Arab countries can enter without a visa and stay for a period of up to six months, Africans have a difficult time obtaining visitor visas and many enter illegally through the almost 4500 km of desert land borders that Libya shares with its neighbors. Migrant workers without the proper documentation are subject to frequent deportations. According to a GOL contact at the General Peoples Committee for Foreign Liaison and International Cooperation (Ministry of Foreign Affairs equivalent), 50,000 illegal migrants were identified by the local law enforcement during just one month this summer, many of whom were sent to local detention centers and deported.

LOCAL UNHCR AND IOM OFFICES SAY COOPERATION STALLED, BUT POTENTIAL EXISTS

¶3. (C) The Chief of Mission at UNHCR in Tripoli, Mohamed Hantosh Alwash characterized his office's relationship with the GOL as "stalled", primarily on the issue of finalizing an official MOU with the government (ref A). In addition, the GOL still does not officially recognize the existence of refugees within their borders. "Migrant workers are seen as African brothers or Arab brothers, never people in need of help" says Alwash. Still, there are some encouraging signs of cooperation. Last month, the World Islamic Call Society, an adjunct organization funded by GOL to promote moderate Islamic thought, hosted World Refugee Day in conjunction with UNHCR. Alwash calls this a "step in the right direction" and hopes to follow up with a migration and asylum conference this November or December, with the blessing of the GOL. UNHCR is given informal access to Libyan detention centers to screen for refugees, and in some instances, migrants identified as refugees are given over to UNHCR custody. Alwash also is pleased with the recent formation a committee at the General People's Committee for Justice to draft a law on asylum.

¶4. (C) Laurence Hart, Chief of Mission at the International Organization For Migration, granted full status in August, 2005, listed the organization's priorities in Libya as "capacity building, assistance to migrants, research and border management." IOM hopes in the near future to conduct field research to get a better sense for migration patterns and numbers. Clearly, the GOL has to work with them to achieve this goal, but they too have seen positive developments recently, especially in the creation of an inter-ministerial committee on migration. Hart says that this committee may be able to give some consistency to immigration laws, which he characterizes as "vague and without clear implementation."

AFRICAN MIGRANTS IN LIBYA: A BIT LESS THAN WELCOME

¶5. (C) When strolling through crowded Abu Saleem market, located in Tripoli's suburbs, one steps out of the Middle East enters the heart of an African city--and a diverse one at that. Ethiopian run hair salons sit adjacent to Camerooni, Malian, and Sudanese restaurants in this basic market. The African community here is poor, but well established. Ten years ago, as part of an overall strategy to achieve of pan-African unity, Leader Moammar Qadhafi implemented an 'open door policy' for Africans interested in seeking jobs in Libya. More African migrants came than expected, however, and now most are required to obtain visitor visas to enter the country, a difficult task. Many Africans living in Libya entered illegally across a land border. The African community is subject to suspicion from locals. African migrants are often blamed for increasing crime in metropolitan areas. Five years ago, riots broke out in the African community when a Libyan family charged an African migrant with rape and retaliated against the man. The GOL deals with the community cautiously.

¶6. (C) While the Leader still sees himself as the father of the continent, the government has clearly reconsidered its open door policy and is making attempts to 'regularize' illegal migrants. Because African migrants are more easily recognizable compared to Arab migrants, they are subject to more frequent deportations. The GOL fully recognizes that, even if they wanted to, they do not have the means to deport all illegal migrants. "It is too expensive to deport all of them, to feed them and keep them in centers" said Ibrahim Dabbashi, a representative from the General People's Committee (GPC) for Foreign Liaison and International Cooperation (MFA equivalent) office of International Organizations. In addition to some sporadic deportations, the GOL's long-term strategy to stem the tide of African migrants is tied in with its pan-African ideology. According to Dabbashi, the GOL hopes to "stop the reason that people want to leave their countries by developing African nations from within" using various infrastructure and investment projects (ref B). If they receive U.S. visas in time to travel, the GOL hopes to send 25 representatives to the upcoming UN High Level Dialogue on Migration, and is looking to use the conference as a platform to engage with the international community on problem of illegal migrants. According to Dabbashi, it is difficult for the GOL to engage regionally with Africa on the issue of illegal migration because of a "conflict of interest"--Libya is a supplier of jobs that do to a certain degree help support African economies.

EGYPTIANS AND NORTH AFRICANS: ARAB BROTHERS HAVE MORE LEEWAY

¶7.(C) Egyptians, Tunisians, and Moroccans constitute a large percentage of migrant labor force in Libya, especially in the hotel and restaurant industries. Unlike African migrant laborers, they can enter legally without a visa and stay for up to 6 months. Many of them are able to find work within that period, but often work without an official contract. The Egyptian consul in Tripoli spends a lot of his time negotiating Egyptian consul in Tripoli spends a lot of his time negotiating disputes between Libyan employers and Egyptian workers. He is frequently summoned to Rasheed Street, located near the Corinthia Hotel where the U.S. Embassy is working out of temporary space, when Libyan police arrest Egyptians who are perceived to be involved in the smuggling trade, which notoriously operates out of the low end hotels in the area. The GOL is making gestures to regularize the status of their "Arab brothers" as well. On July 18, the GPC for Manpower, Training, and Employment announced a law forbidding the hiring or employing any foreign worker without a contract between both parties. The law also called for the extradition of non-national manpower that has not been regularized. It is unclear exactly what steps are being taken to enforce this new regulation. According to the Egyptian consul, even those Egyptians who are deported for working illegally can easily reenter Libya along the 1100 km desert border that exists between the two nations, generally aided by the Awlad Ali tribe, notorious smugglers of people, weapons, and drugs.

DESTINATION: EUROPE

¶8.(C) While some migrants enter the country merely seeking to earn a living in Libya, others use it as base to get to far more attractive destinations in Europe. The 2000 km stretch of Libyan coastline is an ideal launching point for human smugglers, and the western cities of Zuwara and Misrauta are the most notorious points for embarkation. In July of this year, IOM statistics show that 3000 migrants landed in Lampedusa, a small island off the coast of Italy, from Libya. A majority of those landing are from Morocco, Tunisia, and Egypt, with the remainder from western and central African countries. According to the Italian Consul, Italian authorities detained 14,000 migrants from Libya since January, 2006, representing just a fraction of those who have made the journey. International and local sources say smugglers charge between 1500 to 2500 USD for the dangerous trip, and those willing to pay the price are often carried in crowded boats containing upwards of 100 passengers and an uncertain future if they make it to Europe.

¶9.(C) The GOL has a large stake in breaking up smuggling rings and stemming the tide of illegal migration to Europe. Besides the negative PR aspect when would be migrants perish at sea, often reported in the international press, the GOL also has to expend a lot of resources to identify, shelter, and deport migrants caught trying to get to Europe. EU member nations, especially Italy, are working with Libya by providing additional border patrol equipment and constructing shelters for deportees. Endemic challenges exist, however. According to UNHCR, human smugglers can easily bribe local border police. The GOL is still defining just how much cooperation it is willing to have with the EU on border patrol. This week, the Libyan Ambassador in Malta announced the GOL's rejection of the idea of a joint naval patrol with Italy and Malta because it is "against international law", saying that the government prefers financial and technical aid to Libya and assistance with a long-term solution to the eradication of poverty in Africa.

EMPLOYMENT CRUNCH

¶10. (C) For years, migrant workers have filled jobs that Libyans refused to perform. While the mentality of Libyans is changing a bit on this front, there is clearly still a need for migrant laborers to fill menial and semi-skilled jobs. At the same time, the GOL is struggling to balance its need for migrant workers with a mandate from Secretary of the General People's Committee for Manpower, Training, and Employment, to drastically reduce unemployment. Official figures pin unemployment at 13% out of local population of 5.5 million, almost half of whom are under 20 years old. The strategy to grapple with the challenge is a mixed bag, ranging from maintaining a bloated bureaucracy, providing small loans to private citizens to open private businesses, as well as assorted attempts at job creation. There is also a large focus on ensuring that newly opened foreign businesses remain partially "Libyanized." Foreign companies and embassies operating in Libya must comply with government quotas to employee local workers. The government oftentimes will not issue residency visas to third country nationals looking to work at foreign companies. This poses a challenge to international institutions must draw from a fairly limited pool of English speaking Libyans and would often prefer to hire third country nationals who possess essential skills.

¶11. (C) According to the local IOM representative, the GOL must define exactly what needs exist in the labor market and set up agreements with source countries to recruit people with those skills. Post is aware of only one such pending agreement. According to the Filipino consul, during President Arroyo's visit last month to Libya, the two nations began negotiating long term contracts for Filipino nurses to fill staffing gaps in hospitals and train local staff on proper nursing practices.

HUMAN TRAFFICKING-POTENTIAL FOR COOPERATION WITH INTERNATIONAL ORGANIZATIONS

¶12.(C) In an encouraging sign of cooperation with the international community, the GOL recently approached IOM officials in country and asked for assistance on what they see as a growing problem of international human trafficking. According to the IOM representative in country, the GOL wants assistance in dealing with the problem of Nigerian women who are trafficked for sex into Tripoli. While prostitution is not immediately apparent in this conservative country, clearly the government has detected, perhaps through raids in migrant neighborhoods, women who presumably brought here to service the almost all male migratory work force in the city. When Post has asked Libyan officials if there are opportunities for bilateral cooperation on trafficking issues, they have unanimously said that Libya would only work through international organizations.

¶13.(C) COMMENT. The GOL seems to be making serious efforts to control their border security as best as possible. Like the US, they face the challenge of a long and porous border, coupled with a true need in the economy for cheap migrant labor, especially in the construction industry. They have indicated a willingness to work with the international community on their migrant labor challenges. But, Qadhafi's ideology of pan-African unity will clearly influence how they address this issue. Libya will continue to shy away from projects that bring "outsiders to Libya" or are perceived to infringe on Libyan sovereignty, for example, the proposed joint Libyan-Maltese naval patrols to interdict illegal migrants. There are some promising signs that they are willing to engage on migration issues, but as in most subjects, it will be on their own, slow and convoluted, timeline. END COMMENT.

SUBJECT: LIBYAN ENVIRONMENT AUTHORITY: HAZARDOUS WASTE DISPOSAL PLANNING

¶1. Summary: On September 13, 2006 ESTH Officer met with Dr. Abul-Hakim Al-Waer, Secretary of the Libyan Environment Authority (LEA), or as he joked with, "The EPA without the protection." The meeting took place on the margins of the ongoing NDF Chemical Weapons Destruction Assistance Program. Dr. Waer mentioned specifically that the LEA had been charged with destroying/incinerating/neutralizing several caustic and hazardous agents/wastes in accordance with various environmental agreements to which they had either signed, or aspire to sign. These items for destruction included PCB's, transformer oil, pesticides left from Italian residents in the 1930's, and hazardous medical wastes. He inquired as to the utility of the CWD incinerator and neutralization equipment in such an operation. The incinerator and neutralization equipment being installed for the chemical weapon and precursor destruction activities is not technically sufficient to provide this sort of service. In addition, its proposed remote location in the Libyan desert would not lend itself as a practical solution to the LEA's responsibilities. Dr. Waer desires to establish a solution to the immediate problem of existing waste stockpiles, with additional consideration of disposing of future waste. Dr. Waer said he had a budget of LD 57 Million in 2007 funds to address this disposal problem, (including PCB's, Medical Waste and other hazardous wastes) and would be seeking solutions in 2007/2008. End Summary.

PCB's Deemed Toughest to Destroy

¶2. According to the NDF team's chemical experts attending the meeting, the PCB's are the toughest to destroy of the materials he listed. Dr. Waer mentioned the Government of Libya (GOL) might subcontract PCB disposal to a country with existing expertise. He cited that Libya routinely provided transit rights through its territorial waters to South Korean vessels carrying PCB's enroute to France for destruction. Considering South Korea's technical prowess, and the fact that they subcontract this work, Dr. Waer believed it would be fruitless to pursue such technologies internally.

Medical Waste First Priority

¶3. The medical waste, however, Libya intends to process locally. Dr. Waer discussed creating mobile station operations or establishing collection routes for a central disposal facility, but did not have a concrete idea as to how the LEA might establish such a program. Embassy requests any expression of interest in cooperating with the LEA on this issue. Dr. Waer indicated that Liquid Clinical Waste from medical facilities was the primary concern as the existing stores were a burden to contain and that this category of waste is continually generated.

Future Steps:

¶4. ESTH Officer requested a meeting with Dr. Waer to further discuss where the U.S. may be able to offer guidance either through assisting in establishing legislation on waste disposal (whether medical or industrial) or offering technical expertise in planning and/or funding. Pending HHS and OES interest in such a dialogue, Embassy will engage as appropriate.

SUBJECT: LIBYA: UN RESREP ASSESSES OPPORTUNITIES FOR BILATERAL COOPERATION

¶1. (U) SUMMARY: United Nations Development Program (UNDP) Resident Representative Julio Grieco told poloff September 17 that there were opportunities for the Middle East Partnership Initiative (MEPI) to expand on activities already underway in Libya that focus on education, financial sector reform, and gender. He urged, however, that MEPI consider expanding its focus to include healthcare, explaining that the public health system in Libya is in very poor condition and urgently needs assistance. Grieco, who concurrently serves as United Nations Resident Coordinator in Libya, also discussed UNDP's role in human rights promotion, including women's empowerment; UNDP's mandate and programs; and other UN agencies in Libya. END SUMMARY.

PLEA TO SUPPORT HEALTHCARE REFORM IN LIBYA

¶2. (U) Grieco explained that the USG can make an immediate impact in Libya by focusing on public health. While explaining that Libya needs better medical resources, professional training, and patient care, he noted a special need for improving the management of the health care system. UNDP's health-related programs, Grieco said, include an HIV-AIDS prevention program; upgrading of the orthopedic workshop and rehabilitation center for the disabled in Benghazi; drug abuse control and treatment; and eradication of the screw-worm.

UNDP HUMAN RIGHTS PROMOTION AND WOMEN'S EMPOWERMENT PROJECTS

¶3. (U) Grieco stressed that UNDP does not address human rights abuses through reporting or lobbying. The UN has an office in Geneva that addresses the human rights situation in Libya, Grieco said, adding that the UN does not take a "negative approach" in Libya, but rather seeks a constructive form of engagement. By cooperatively working with the Government of Libya (GOL) to develop awareness about human rights, Grieco asserted, UNDP balances the alienating impact on the GOL of reports of abuse of those rights. He explained that UNDP contributes to the promotion of respect for human rights through several of its development programs: (1) training judges, prosecutors and academics; (2) women's empowerment training; (3) training government and law enforcement officials to reduce demand for and supply of illicit drugs. Grieco noted that experts believe drug abuse to be the leading cause of the spread of HIV/AIDS in Libya.

¶4. (U) Grieco provided a formal, written report on UNDP's programs in Libya that included a description of its women's empowerment work. According to the report, UNDP has launched a project for "Advocacy and Capacity Building on Women's Empowerment" in Libya. The program draws on the UN's global effort to "mainstream gender into development activities." As part of the program, UNDP held a capacity-building seminar this year aimed at national and local authorities. UNDP organized the seminar in conjunction with the government-run organization Wa'atessemo and the United Nations Development Fund for Women (UNIFEM). UNDP has proposed to the GOL the development of four new projects that will, respectively: (1) support women entrepreneurs; (b) compile gender disaggregated statistics; (c) examine the impact on women of Libya's legal framework, and enhance women's participation in the development process; and (d) address the gender dimension of the HIV/AIDS pandemic.

UNDP'S MANDATE AND PROGRAMS

¶5. (U) UNDP has been in Libya since 1950, has a staff of 17, and receives its funding from the Libyan government, according to Grieco. It focuses on technical assistance to achieve national development goals. In addition to the programs listed above, UNDP has projects that address the following issues: agriculture, education, vocational training, meteorological services, millennium development goals, decentralization and local government, veterinary services, and water resources management. In the near future, UNDP will focus on information and communications technologies, and environmental capacity and strategies.

UN AGENCIES IN LIBYA

¶6. (U) Since Libya is a net contributing country to the UN, Grieco explained, it funds the UN's work in Libya. The UN agencies, however, Grieco claimed, operate by UN rules and make their own hiring and policy decisions. The following agencies currently operate in Libya (staff size in parentheses): Food and Agriculture Organization (FAO) (1); United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR) (12); United Nations Information Centers (UNICs) (4); World Health Organization (WHO) (4); United Nations Office on Drugs and Crime (UNODC) (2). The United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO) does not have a permanent presence in Libya, Grieco said, but UNESCO officials have visited Libya on several occasions to provide children with vaccinations. UNDP also receives funding from New York, Grieco said, without specifying the percentage of the budget that comes from New York. UNHCR receives all of its funding from Geneva, Grieco said, since it does not serve Libyan citizens.

SUBJECT: LIBYA TELLS EXIM - TRUST US, OUR CREDIT'S GOOD

CLASSIFIED BY: Elizabeth Fritschle, Pol/Econ Chief, Embassy Tripoli, Department of State.
REASON: 1.4 (b), (d)

¶1. (C) EXIM Bank conducted its first visit in over thirty years to Tripoli September 5-9. After an introductory session with Mohamed Siala, Secretary of International Cooperation, the rest of the week was marked by mixed success pursuing additional meetings with key GOL entities. EXIM's Vice President for International Business Development C. Michael Forgione and Africa Region Director John Richter ultimately met with a range of private, state-owned and multinational companies that all expressed a strong interest in developing U.S.-Libyan relations. However, apart from the Siala meeting, these contacts did not share specific GOL investment plans for the future, highlighting both the opportunities and frustrations of investing and operating in Libya. In addition, the EXIM team heard from both Siala and Foreign Investment Board Director Rajab Shiglabu that Libya would not sign an OPIC agreement, or any other proposed U.S. trade and investment agreements, unless they offered reciprocal opportunity.

EXIM Pitches Projects Backed by Sovereign Guarantee

¶2. (U) The EXIM team made a consistent pitch to its interlocutors during its week of meetings, stressing a desire to build a dialogue to educate both sides and increase comfort levels after a long hiatus of investment and business activity. VP Forgione emphasized that at this juncture, EXIM can only offer financing assistance to US business projects with government-owned entities in three areas: the aviation sector, project finance (requiring predictability and hard revenue streams) and projects backed by a GOL "sovereign guarantee" of loan repayment. The delegation stressed that US-Libyan relations are entering a new phase, that US interest in Libya is serious and long-term, and that the USG and private business community had the endurance to weather minor difficulties and frictions during the normalization process.

Familiar Frustrations - Libya Needs Economic Diversification

¶3. (U) Given that EXIM is currently restricted to supporting US export contracts with government-owned entities, the bulk of requested meetings were with the GOL. However, these appointments proved impossible to schedule in the end, and many of the EXIM team's top priority meetings therefore went unfilled during its stay in Tripoli. Appointments with the Foreign Investment Encouragement Board, the Libyan Foreign Bank, Afriqiyah Airways, Real Estate Investment Company and Chevron produced a reasonably broad range of discussions on the Libyan investment and business environment. Furthermore, the team's visit was welcomed by the local business community as a sign that relations were normalizing, albeit at a slow and measured pace.

¶4. (C) Secretary of International Cooperation Mohammed Siala, from the General People's Committee for Foreign Liaison and International Cooperation officially greeted the EXIM team and provided the most detailed briefing on the GOLs perspectives. Siala argued the EXIM and other lending organizations should not take account of international rating systems that according to him, "are affected by political considerations, or in the case of Italy, ongoing disputes over old debts." He said that Libya sought to use oil revenues to fund sustainable development outside the energy sector. He also highlighted that Libya was still "looking for the rewards" from its decision to give up the WMD program, particularly any economic benefits to be gained WMD program, particularly any economic benefits to be gained from increased international trade and investment. Siala acknowledged the tension in Libya between those "who think the pace of reform is too fast and those who think it is too slow," but emphasized that the Jamahiriya system is adjusting quicker than anyone could have anticipated.

¶5. (C) In terms of economic diversification, Siala said he and other Libyan offficials were frustrated by international consultancies that focused on tourism for future growth. "Where is the added value from building hotels if the furniture is imported, the construction crews are foreign, the housekeeping staff and other laborers are foreign?" Siala continued. Libya would benefit more from manufacturing, agriculture and other areas that would create employment for Libyans. He mentioned the special tourism zone established under the direction of Saadi Qadhafi in the Zwara-Abukammash area, but without explaining more details, also said that the tourism zone would include a U.S. operated refinery. Despite Siala's point that Libya needed to expand beyond tourism and energy, the only other project he mentioned for prospective cooperation was a 5 billion power plant at Sirte. Siala said the Koreans won the tender with a proposal that used 80% Japanese equipment. He said that the Libyan's were not happy with that mix and might re-issue the tender. If so, he hoped Bechtel would give a turn-key offer that would include the plant and also the management of five or six other facilities.

Sovereign Guarantee? Trust Us, Our Credit's Good

¶6. (C) Asked what government entity was authorized to issue a sovereign guarantee, Siala demurred and said that the GOL tried to avoid that type of commitment. He claimed that Libya had never defaulted on any loans, "even paying all outstanding debts in advance when we became aware that our accounts would be frozen under the sanctions regime." He later qualified his statement and said that there were some private debts that couldn't be resolved due to a lack of documentation, but even in those cases the GOL was negotiating settlements to "split the difference" when amounts were in dispute. "Look at our history," Siala urged, "any lender should be anxious to do business here, especially since our foreign currency cash flow is encouraging." In the example of an entity like the General Electric Company of Libya (GECOL), Siala claimed that the national budget was a guarantee. Any Libyan project that was in the budget had been voted on by the General People's Congress and the "cabinet" would have issued authority for a tender and for contract signing, therefore a defacto sovereign guarantee existed. When pressed, Siala also said that both the General People's Committee for Finance and the Central Bank could issue sovereign guarantees. But, "EXIM should have full confidence in any Libyan project that has government funding," Siala concluded.

Reciprocity Deemed More Important Than Meeting Libya's Immediate Investment Needs

¶7. (C) In Siala's opinion, the U.S. is not competitive in its trade and commercial activities, especially since the proposed OPIC agreement is not acceptable to the Libyan negotiators. He pointed out that Libya had already signed "agreements for the encouragement of investment" with many countries, as well as an agreement on double taxation with France. Libya expects reciprocity in trade agreements, and expects that since Libya is active in the U.S. stock market, that it should receive more encouragement in bilateral trade. In comparison, Siala cited his impression that Europeans and Asians are willing to invest in small, private ventures, exploring the Libyan free zones at Misurata and elsewhere, and taking advantage of the potential to access African consumers through Libya. Similarly, Rajab Shiglabu, Director of the Libyan Foreign Investment Board, told the EXIM team in a separate meeting that Libya would not consider the pending OPIC agreement because it did not offer reciprocal treatment. Shiglabu said Libya would consider signing a broad bilateral investment treaty with reciprocal terms, and then addendums such as an OPIC agreement could be discussed later. When asked why Libya doesn't consider the OPIC agreement as a "seal of approval" or signal that "Libya is open for business" Shiglabu consistently argues that intrepid businesspeople will gain great rewards engaging with Libya under its own protections; they do not need or desire any additional assurances. (Embassy Note: the proposed Libyan agreement is with OPIC for further review. End Note.) Elaborating on European cooperation, Siala noted that disputed Libyan debt to Italy was being resolved as part of a "political package of compensation". He said that Italy was being asked to build a coastal road as compensation for its occupation of Libya, and that the Libyan debt to Italy would be subsumed within the joint cooperation.

Oil Companies' Concerns over Visa Issuances

¶8. (U) Chevron's local representative briefed the EXIM team on the difficulties of working in Libya, particularly due to visa issuance problems, both for getting Amcits into Libya and getting Libyans into the U.S. Oil companies are relatively better positioned, both for obtaining Libyan visas (thanks to NOC facilitation) and attracting qualified Libyans for employment, than other entities. Service providers to the oil companies and other firms face a far more difficult time obtaining Libyan visas, which in turn hinders business growth and personnel development. The Chevron representative also explained that U.S. companies suffer from a "generation gap" (due to the sanctions period) because Libyan employees did not have U.S. training in the 80s and 90s. Now, the companies face ongoing obstacles sending Libyans to the States for training.

Snapshots from the Visit

¶9. (SBU) During the EXIM team's meetings several tantalizing new developments emerged:

-- The Real Estate Investment Company (REIC) - a Libyan-owned company owned by the Central Bank and its five subsidiary banks - seeks to form a joint company with the Tennessee Development Corporation (TDC). This joint company would undertake a number of high-value construction projects around Tripoli totaling an estimated $700 million. EXIM may be approached to provide financing for some of these projects, although it is not clear that support would be forthcoming, absent a sovereign guarantee by the GOL. Also, the well-connected REIC is also working to import one million metric tons of cement via a Miami-based US company to fuel its construction and road-maintenance projects.

-- US company Delta Aluminum is apparently engaged in discussions to build an aluminum smelter, partnering with GECOL or a Libyan natural gas supplier. Libya is an attractive location for the smelter given low local fuel costs (energy needs constitute roughly 40% of the cost of aluminum production); raw materials would be imported from Latin American or Guinea. The estimated value of the project is 2-3 billion USD.

-- Dow Chemicals is in negotiations with the National Oil Company (NOC) to take-over an existing GOL petrochemical plant and double or triple its capacity.

-- The EXIM team urged the Financial Director of Afriqiyah

Airlines to consider the purchase of Boeing aircraft, but was informed that Afriqiyah intended to honor its July 2006 MOU with Airbus to purchase up to $1.9 billion USD worth of aircraft.

-- Up to three free trade zones are being planned for Misurata.

¶10. (U) The EXIM delegation did not clear on this cable before departing post.

SUBJECT: PROJECT LIBYA: EXHIBITION TO PROMOTE INFRASTRUCTURE AND ENERGY DEVELOPMENT

¶1. The 4-7 December Project Libya exhibition is underway following a well-attended press launch on September 17. Organizers Montgomery Libya and Sahara Expo Libya presided over a packed house of reporters, businessmen and local embassy staff at the Corinthia Hotel. Jeremy Sale, Montgomery Libya's Project Director for Libya, took the lead at the press conference, and reviewed both the expected participants in the project, and its politically-connected GOL backing. Hotel arrangements and visa support for attendees will be coordinated by Mr. Saleh Ben-Saleh of the Libya Businessman's Council. The Wa'atassemo Charity Society's Abdul Nasser Nageh, Chairman of the Conferences Committee also offered his assistance in addressing whatever issues arise. He told P/E Chief that Ali Aujali of the Libyan People's Bureau (Embassy) in Washington agreed to expedite visa requests, although there would be a 100 Libyan dinar surcharge for any "airport" visas stamped in passports at Tripoli International Airport. He described a multi-step process, whereby exhibition participants would send an application via a designated U.S. travel agent to the Libyan Businessmen's Council. Then the Business Council will coordinate with the Wa'atessemo Society to issue letters of support to the General People's Committee for Foreign Liaison and International Relations Consular Department and Americas Department, as well as the Immigration Department. After the Immigration Department clears all the applications and issues approval numbers, the Libyan Businessmen's Council will convey that information to the designated U.S. travel agent, who will in turn contact the exhibition participant and coordinate submission of all the required paperwork to the Libyan People's Bureau. He acknowledged that there were many potential areas for a breakdown in communication and visa delays.

Lineup of GOL Committees Sponsoring the Exhibition

¶2. Project Libya will be hosted under the patronage of Dr. Aisha Muammar al-Qaddafi and her Wa'atassemo Foundation, and consist of two distinct exhibitions: Infrastructure Libya and Energy Libya (or the International Exhibition and Forum for Libya's Infrastructure and Economic Development and the Libyan International Oil, Gas, Power and Renewable Energy Exhibition and Forum), both to be held at the Tripoli International Fairground. The exhibition will be paired with a running series of parallel seminars covering a broad range of infrastructure and energy issues, and the organizers are still soliciting presenters for an anticipated forty-eight separate fora. The exhibitions boast a panoply of cooperating GOL entities, including the General People's Committee for Planning, General Board of Infrastructure and Urban Development, Inspector General of Housing and Utilities, General People's Committee for Industry, Electricity and Mines, National Oil Corporation (NOC) and General Electric Company of Libya (along with a dozens of supporting organizations). A representative for the NOC provided words of support at the event, noting Libya's plans to increase oil production and the massive foreign investment that endeavor will require.

~and Great Expectations For The International Crowd

¶3. Montgomery Libya highlighted the anticipated establishment of pavilions by the US, UK, Germany, Italy, Russia, Spain, Singapore, Canada, France, Malta, Turkey and South Korea. Pol/Econ Chief addressed the audience to emphasize the Commerce Department's certification of Project Libya and and U.S.

interest in expanding the bilateral economic and commercial relationship. Major corporations Chevron, Baker Hughes, Booz Allen Hamilton, Conoco Phillips, Halliburton, Marathon and Occidental were highlighted as key exhibitors and sponsors of the event.

¶4. The exhibition organizers request that the U.S. government consider providing speakers for the program, although at this time they do not have a list of planned seminars or topics. At this point, they are trying to encourage people to attend the event, and will plan workshops or speakers later. Nageh said that "networking" was the primary motivation for the event and that his goal was to get "buzz" by adding high-profile names to the promotional materials.

¶5. Looking ahead, next year's Project Libya has been booked at the Tripoli International Fairground from 3-6 December 2007.

Foreign Banks Question Libyan Market Conditions

¶3. (SBU) The McKinsey team assesses that the Libyan Central Bank's top priority is to draw in foreign banks to Libya, and there is moderate interest from abroad. However, prospective foreign entrants are immediately confronted by obstacles, including a dearth of data on the Libyan banking sector, uncertain terms and conditions for market entry, unclear regulatory standards and a highly politicized Central Bank with a history of policy reversals. Some foreign banks are starting to establish start-up offices in Tripoli (most recently Qatar National Bank). However, Wilson estimates that it will be at least 12-18 months before there is a significant foreign bank presence in Libya (i.e., movement beyond start-up offices). This timeframe could easily slip if the long-expected roll-out of a reformed Central Bank national payments program (now four years in the making) continues to languish. A number of foreign banks are reportedly awaiting this development before moving forward in Libya. The McKinsey team's assessment is that the current system is irretrievably broken. As an example of the "broke beyond repair" assessment, some bank managers are not facilitating a McKinsey audit ordered by the Central Bank senior leadership.

Property Rights and Other Laws Require Updating to Underpin Economic Reform

¶4. (SBU) The McKinsey team has been careful to conduct multiple rounds of syndications with GOL officials to solicit inputs and proposals for his study, and in order to avoid roadblocks down the road. Thus far, there have been no major obstacles thrown in the way of his findings. However, the McKinsey study will almost certainly recommend a major overhaul of the Central Bank's operations as one of its key recommendations, and the team is deeply skeptical that there is GOL appetite to implement real reform. Furthermore, Wilson estimates that at least fifty percent of the changes necessary for success lie well beyond the purview of the Central Bank. The greatest of these is the question of clear property rights. The lack of clear title for Libyan properties (due in part to the GOL's destruction of private title records in the late 1980s) greatly complicates work in the real estate, construction and tourism sectors, as well as all investment therein.

Training is the Essential Element of Any Proposed Reform

¶5. (SBU) Enhanced training will be at the heart of any successful reform effort. Training is direly needed in the whole range of relevant skills, as most employees lack basic competency in financial analysis, international accounting standards, utilization of balance sheets, and basic information technology skills. Even the small team of the Central Bank's "best and brightest" seconded to assist the McKinsey effort required additional language and technical training. Overall, regional training locations may emerge as the best options for Libyan banks, and the Central Bank is leaning towards a partnership with the Bahraini Monetary Agency toward this end. [Comment: Funding Libyan financial sector training in the GCC and elsewhere, if allowable, could be an effective use of MEPI Economic Reform pillar funds. End Comment]

State-Run Bank Ownership Shifted From Central Bank to Development Fund

¶6. (SBU) Both interlocutors conveyed their genuine surprise and unease at a recent GOL move to transfer the Central Bank's five state-run banks under the auspices of the state-run Economic and Social Development Fund. This change was, in their view, an attempt by the GOL to give the impression that these banks enjoy some measure of independence from the Central Bank. However, the team assesses that this was a "paper move" only, and its greatest practical effect will be to sow confusion among foreign banks interested in entering the Libyan market.

Aman Bank Judged Most Efficient

¶7. (SBU) One institution that has stood out during McKinsey's assessment work has been Aman Bank for Commerce and Investment (HYPERLINK "BLOCKED::http://bk.abci-ly.com/en/index.aspx "http://bk.abci-ly.com/en/index.aspx). Succinctly described as having "the look and feel of a real bank," privately-owned Aman Bank is far ahead of the competition in its provision of modern banking services. Its entire operation is computerized, and it has placed ATMs across Tripoli and into major cities countrywide. Aman bank also provides its staff with proper training, including English language training for all employees.

SUBJECT: LIBYA: COMMERCIAL ROUND UP, AUGUST-SEPTEMBER 2006

Oil and Gas Sector

¶1. Sources indicate that the National Oil Corporation (NOC) plans to introduce measures to require foreign companies operating in Libya to offer Libyans salaries equal to those paid to non-Libyans. (Source: NOC, 8/21)

¶2. Libya and Japan signed a memorandum of understanding on cooperation between the two countries in the fields of oil and gas, as well as nuclear and solar energy. The memo also calls for cooperation between the two countries in transportation, communications, tourism, environment and human resources. The two sides also discussed the possibility of financing an oil pipeline to link the south of Libya with the entrance to the Red Sea. (Source: Akhbar-Libya.com (quoting the Emirates News Agency), 8/20)

¶3. NOC has announced a third round for exploration and production of oil in Libya (EPSA-IV Round). The new round includes 14 areas and 41 sections, for a total area of approximately 100,000 square kilometers. NOC will announce the results on December 20, 2006. (Source: Almanara.org (quoting aljazeera.net), 8/15)

¶4. An official Libyan source announced August 14 that the executive manager of Chevron expressed his company's readiness to transfer oil technology to Libya through its oil projects in the country. He also stated that his company will work to make use of and to train the Libyan workforce. (Source: Almanara.org (quoting Alquds Alarabi Newspaper), 8/15)

Construction and Infrastructure Development

¶5. Ranhill Bhd secured a deal worth $2 billion to construct a new township in Tajura, near Tripoli. Sources familiar with the company said that the engineering group is also aggressively pursuing a similar contract in Libya worth $1.5 billion, in addition to exploring oil and gas opportunities and a railway contract. Under the Tajura township contract, Ranhill will build some 40,000 homes for a Libyan government housing agency. "It is a straightforward housing project, but one that would open further opportunities for Ranhill," one source reported. "The company is taking a holistic approach in bidding for jobs that all of its units can take part in." Sources also said that Ranhill expects to receive a start-up fund from the Libyan government of between 15% and 20% of the contract value. "Ranhill is making itself a preferred builder for the Libyan government," the source said, "and has the first right of refusal for several of the projects that the authorities have in the pipeline." One source explained that the American decision to lift sanctions on Libya has created opportunities for construction companies. (Source: The Edge Daily, 8/23)

¶6. Libyana Mobile Phone Service provider signed an agreement with the German D.T. Khun [transliteration] to develop services and management. The contract will last for two years. Libyana currently provides its services to more than a million subscribers. (Source: Khaleej Newspaper, 8/14)

Foreign and US Investment

¶7. The General People's Committee decided August 22 to establish a financial investment corporation. The establishment will have a capital of 250 million dollars and will report directly to the General People's Committee. The corporation is intended to diversify income resources and increase revenues to the Libyan treasury. (Source: LJBC.net, 8/23)

¶8. Libyan Secretary of Economy, Investment And Trade Tayyib Safi Tayyib confirmed his country's willingness to learn from the example of the United Arab Emirates in the management of ports and free zones. In a speech before the second conference on economic activities, Safi said that Libya must abandon the foreign investor complex and learn from the experiences of foreign companies and investors in transferring technology, especially in management and banking. He stressed the importance of exploiting Libya's high present level of oil income, and of finding alternative income sources for the progress of the country. (Source: Albayan Newspaper, 8/9)

¶9. Tameer Holding Co. announced August 9 a $20 billion project in Libya. The project represents the biggest investment in the Maghreb from the Gulf region. The contract was signed by Omar Ayesh from Tameer and Hamed Alarabi Alhudeiri from the Economic and Social Development Fund. (NOTE: Tameer and the Economic and Social Development Fund have formed a joint company, called Tadweer, or the Libya Real Estate Development Company. END NOTE.) The project will be located in the Wadi Sharki area on the outskirts of Tripoli. It covers a beachfront area of more than 40 square kilometers. It will consist of a complete city with commercial centers and tourist attractions, as well as schools and hospitals. Some of the buildings are designed to accommodate the most advanced technologies available. The city will serve a population of about half a million inhabitants. (Source: Libya-Alyoum.com, 8/10)

Tourism

¶10. Secretary of the General People's Committee Dr. Elbaghdadi Elmahmoudi and the General Manager of the Swiss holding company Piroco [transliteration] announced that they will begin building the Andalus Tourist Center in Tripoli. Libyan Tourism Secretary Ammar Iltayyif attended the ceremony, along with the Swiss Ambassador to Libya. The project is a joint venture between the Economic and Social Development Fund in Libya (30%) and the Swiss company (70%). The tourist resort will cover an area of four hectares and include a 600-bed, five-star hotel. The project will start in December, 2006 and is expected to require four years to finish. It will also include a harbor big enough for 250 yachts. The project, whose total value is 200 million euros, is expected to provide 1000 job opportunities to Libyan employees. The Swiss company's investment period will last 70 years. (Source: Almanara, 8/31)

Banking

¶11. Qatar National Bank announced August 29 that it has received official permission to open a representative office in Libya. (Source: Libya-Alyoum.com, 8/30)

SUBJECT: BIS TEAM "CHECKS OUT" LIBYA

¶1. (U) Summary: The Commerce Department's Bureau of Industry and Security (BIS) completed a largely successful series of export license compliance checks September 9-19. BIS agents Scot Gonzales and Perry Davis completed dozens of checks during the BIS's first-ever visit to Libya. Levels of compliance were mixed, but the team set a baseline for future Commerce license checks and educated the GOL and local businesses about recent export rules changes germane to Libya. End summary.

First BIS visit to Libya Reviews End-Use Compliance

¶2. (U) Scot Gonzales and Perry Davis from the Commerce Department's Bureau of Industry and Security (BIS) conducted the first-ever series of export license checks in Libya, September 9-19. They visited numerous sites in both Tripoli and Benghazi to review compliance with U.S. export regulations. The licensed commodities under review were "dual use" items which can have both civilian and military uses. The team ensured that the controlled items had been shipped to the proper end user and were utilized for the purpose stated on license applications. They took pains to explain the purpose of their visit to their interlocutors, emphasizing that BIS conducts end-use checks worldwide, and that a successful review of an entity's record can speed future license approvals.

¶3. (U) The BIS team's visit came on the heels of the August 31 amendment to the Export Administration Regulations (EAR) that apply to Libya. This change removed the requirement for a license to export or re-export items controlled for anti-terrorism (AT) reasons. With the change, items such as most computers, software, telecommunications equipment and vehicles can be exported to Libya without a Commerce export license. The BIS team addressed questions about the EAR change, which put Libya on a par with most US export destinations, noting that many of the commodities being checked would no longer require licenses for export and re-export to Libya.

Installed Base Responsibilities Briefed to Interlocutors

¶4. (U) During their visit, the BIS team reminded interlocutors about their responsibilities in dealing with "installed base" items. Installed base refers to U.S. goods brought into the country during the sanctions period without appropriate licenses. U.S. citizens are prohibited from "ordering, buying, removing, concealing, storing, using, selling, loaning, disposing of, transferring, financing, forwarding, or otherwise servicing, in whole or part, any items that may have been originally illegally exported or reexported to Libya by third parties." Furthermore, US citizens are required by law to report such items to the Bureau of Industry and Security within 90 days of coming into contact with them. This includes commodities that no longer require a Commerce license following the August 31 amendment of the EAR as it relates to Libya. Installed base items are undoubtedly present in every sector of the Libyan economy, particularly in agriculture.

¶5. (SBU) The BIS team's license checks focused primarily on companies working in the petroleum sector, including Conoco Philips, Marathon, Schlumberger, Hess, and WesternGeco, among others. Two large Libyan government entities, the Arabian Gulf Oil Company and the Great Man-Made River Authority, were also visited. The quality of the license checks ranged widely. At the high end were impressive displays of corporate compliance, complete with PowerPoint slide shows, tidy binders of complete with PowerPoint slide shows, tidy binders of appropriate paperwork and export compliance specialists flown in from abroad. In a few instances, equipment was pulled from the field (e.g., GPS units used by petroleum exploration crews operating deep in the Libyan desert) to be presented to the BIS team for inspection. Other checks were conducted without the benefit of a visual inspection of the licensed items, owing to their reported ongoing use in remote areas of the country.

Appointment Requests Encounter Stunning Bureaucratic Evasion

¶6. (SBU) One failed license check spoke volumes about the frustrations of operating in Libya. The BIS team, accompanied by Econoff and Econ Specialist, had flown to Benghazi to conduct several checks at GOL owned/operated facilities. Appointments set before departure dissolved by 9AM the following day, and the team was forced into a holding pattern. As required, a request for these USG-GOL meetings had been made in advance via diplomatic note, and approval had been granted by the Protocol Office of the General People's Committee for Foreign Liaison and International Cooperation. However, this fact had not reached the Libyan entities, and it took more than a day of continuous phone calls to clarify the situation and commence office visits. However, the quasi-private Bank of Commerce and Development engaged in a stunning display of bureaucratic evasion tactics, and avoided a visit entirely. After much effort to contact him, our bank point of contact confirmed receipt of protocol's approval for the meeting, as well as his superior's approval of the meeting in principle. However, he staunchly and repeatedly refused a meeting, on the grounds that he had not personally received his supervisor's personal permission to hold the meeting. Alas, neither reason nor his supervisor could be reached, and the team's trip passed without a visit to the Bank of Commerce and Development. It is noteworthy that in Libya, even a visit to a "private" bank can require expediting by the Libyan Government Protocol Office, and the extra level of coordination does not guarantee success.

Check You Later

¶7. (U) The BIS team departed Libya having conducted dozens of end-use license checks, almost all of which produced solid evidence that end items were being utilized and controlled properly. With the amendment of the EAR, return of U.S. oil companies and the expansion of bilateral trade and investment ties, future Commerce license checks are likely to focus on a narrower, more sensitive range of commodities. Agents Gonzales and Davis did not clear this cable.

REASON: 1.4 (b), (d)

¶1. (C) Ali Treki, Under Secretary of African Affairs at the General People's Committee for Foreign Liaison and International Cooperation (de facto MFA), called in Charge on October 1 for a discussion of regional African issues. Treki said that Foreign Minister Shalgam instructed him to reach out to the U.S., U.K. and France to learn more about their perspectives. Charge noted the Africa-related discussions between Secretary Rice and Shalgam at UNGA, and shared a copy of the Secretary's 9/27 speech at the Africa Society. Charge urged Treki to consider that a peacekeeping force under UN aegis could be comprised in a way that would not catalyze terrorist activity in central Africa. The Libyans continue to emphasize their belief that "rehatting" the AU troops could spark a terrorist threat against "non-Africans" involved in peacekeeping operations.

¶2. (C) Treki said that Libya continued to encourage strengthening of the AU forces and that the AU Peace and Security Council agreed to send a few thousand more troops, perhaps from Tanzania and Botswana. He also said Libya might give 70 million dollars in additional support, and that the UAE and Algeria had been approached for additional funding. "Don't apply too much pressure, the U.S.-Sudanese relationship must be carefully managed," Treki continued. The U.S. is in too much of a hurry to apply Chapter 7 and "we don't like that at all," Treki exclaimed, arguing that Chapter 6 could be used to persuade the Sudanese to take gradual steps.

¶3. (C) Noting the divisions within almost all groups and negotiating parties, Treki said that when delegations traveled to Tripoli, the Libyans encouraged them to implement the CPA. He said that the Libyans were trying to organize another round of Tripoli-based negotiations and mentioned receiving a letter from Mini Minawi the last week of September. Treki said that past Libyan engagement had significantly reduced cross-border tension between Chad and Sudan.

¶4. (C) Asked about recent developments in Somalia, Treki said that Sheikh Ibrahim visited Libya for the African Union Anniversary on 9/9 and stayed for 2-3 days. He characterized the Islamic Courts as controlling most of Somalia and "they are not fanatics, not linked to radical elements, they only want to end the crime and chaos brought about by the warlords." Treki believed that Ibrahim and his associates would continue dialogue with the TFIs and hold elections. According to Treki, Ibrahim and other Somalis strongly oppose Ethiopian troop presence, particularly given past history. He said he told PM Malas it would not be helpful to send troops.

¶5. (C) Referencing talks in Eastern Sudan, Treki said that Libya encouraged those negotiations. While Libya didn't have a representative participating, he believed "it shouldn't be difficult to reach agreement on how the government can development infrastructure and share power in Eastern Sudan." Acknowledging ongoing divisions among the negotiating parties, he didn't feel that the talks in Eastern Sudan would exacerbate longstanding rivalries and was hopeful that it might help move forward other tracks.

¶6. (C) Treki asked Charge to relay a request to Washington that the U.S. government refrain from engaging with "subgroups" of the African continent. Citing a proposed November China-Africa Summit, Treki said the Libyans oppose this type of engagement as inappropriate and "humiliating". He said Libya was also against any proposed India-Africa, France-Africa activities since it was off balance to have one country in discussions with one continent. It would only be appropriate for summits to be held between the EU and the AU or similar regional organizations. He said Libya submitted a resolution to the AU calling for broad cooperation, noting that an AU summit with Latin American countries was in the planning stages. (COMMENT: Treki's comments are a variant on Libya's continuing rhetoric calling for Africans to reject outside influence and assistance programs. END COMMENT.)

¶7. (C) Similarly, Treki said diplomats at the Libyan People's Bureau (Embassy) in Washington appreciated a recent State Department briefing on U.S. regional objectives in Africa. However, he urged reconsideration of geographical divisions; "Libya takes issue with subdividing Africa, we don't like the terminology North Africa or Sub-Saharan Africa." He said Libya would also present resolutions at international organizations to eliminate these distinctions. (NOTE: The Libyans have told senior-level Department visitors that they believe Libya, along with the rest of north Africa, should be included in an Africa-wide bureau instead of NEA. They feel the present arrangement treats them as separate from their African colleagues. END NOTE.)

REASON: 1.4 (b), (d)

¶1. (U) South Korean Prime Minister Her Excellency Han Myeong-sook visited Tripoli the week of September 17-21 in association with the "Korean Libyan Business Partnership Conference 2006." The conference was organized by the Korean International Trade Union and the Libyan General Union of Chambers of Commerce and Industry. At a lunch hosted by the conference organizers, PM Han addressed a crowd of 200 Libyan and Korean businessman, calling for "an acceleration of bilateral relations through business partnerships." She praised the Libyan Great Man Made River project as an example of successful cooperation between the two nations, and called for greater cooperation with particular emphasis on IT and communications equipment. She ended by expressing that "current cooperation confirms the potential for future cooperation," and that she hoped "future relations would be as smooth as the Korean cars she saw on the roads of Tripoli."

Content with Current Progress, but Still More Potential

¶2. (U) According to press accounts, PM Han recounted that she and Libyan leader Mu'anmar Qadhafi considered the Great Man Made River (GMMR) project to be the "eighth wonder of the world," and with continued cooperation she hoped Libya and Korea could eventually produce the ninth wonder of the world. The Koreans have a string of work encampments throughout Libya to support their construction projects and other contracts. Korean employees are typically supervising engineers who oversee the work of third country laborers. The Koreans tend to stay in Libya for six months, then return home for a one month leave period with their families. Many of these engineers have lived in Libya for ten years or longer, since their salaries of approximately double what they could earn at home.

¶3. (C) PM Han told the press that Korea would invite 1000 North Africans to Korea in the next three years to accelerate industry and infrastructure cooperation, and stated that Libya would be included in this program, and a part of any future North African initiatives. Korean Embassy Counselor for Political Affairs, Sang Jin Kim told P/E Chief that the Korean delegation of 121 people included 65 business representatives. He said that during the visit two agreements and four MOUs were signed. A training and information technology agreement was signed by Secretary of the General People's Committee (GPC) for Manpower, Training and Employment Matouq Matouq and the Korean Deputy FM. Kim said that the Koreans will send trainers to educate the Libyans in information technology (in English) after the Libyans provide a building for the training center. He said that the Libyans had asked for an agreement on technology transfer, with an emphasis on water desalination and power generation, and that the Koreans agreed to form a joint commission to conduct feasibility studies. (COMMENT: The Libyan's request tracks with their request made to the French, German, British and others - they are using the gambit, "show us the rewards for giving up our WMD" with all their interlocutors.

END COMMENT.) The Libyans broached peaceful uses of nuclear energy with the Koreans, but at this point there are no plans for nuclear cooperation.

¶4. (C) The other agreement was signed by the Under Secretary of the General People's Committee for Economy, Trade and Investment, Taher Sarkez, for the promotion, guarantee and protection of investment. The MOUs focused on construction, export promotion, communications, and infrastructure development. Kim said that the Libyans complained that on the GMMR Project and other activities, the Koreans had imported too many foreign laborers "building and leaving." He said the Libyans, in every discussion, asked for more training and technology transfer. Matouq broached his proposal that in the future, Korean contractors maintain 50 percent Libyan laborers on their payrolls, with 50 percent from third countries like Bangladesh or other Islamic countries. Kim said that over the last year, Matouq's GPC staffers had presented Korean contractors with lists of employees "to be hired." He said that almost none of the proposed employement candidates were qualified, but that the Koreans hired them and "the people get a salary but they make no contributions, sometimes they don't even show up for work." During the bilateral meetings with the PM, the Koreans told Matouq that they would continue making a good faith effort to hire Libyans, but that the GPC had to allow time for Libyans to be trained and educated for specialized work before insisting on "Libyanization" of the work force.

Grand Plans, Without Any Planning To Support the Concept

¶5. (C) Kim also described Qadhafi's proposal to the PM that Koreans invest in a oil pipeline project routed from the Jamahiriya to Eritrea and Bab al-Medab so that Asian countries could access energy supplies from the Eastern coast of Africa. He said Qadhafi had a huge map in his Bab al- Azizia meeting room and traced off a proposed routing for the PM, but that the Koreans were totally unprepared to address the concept, especially since Qadhafi talked in generalities and did not offer any details, beyond his speculation that the Chinese and Indians would also offer up funding to build the pipeline.

¶6. (C) The protocol aspects of the visit were particularly challenging, according to Kim, who described trip planning with the Libyans as a "nightmare." He said that the Libyans refused to confirm any meetings in advance of the PM's arrival and that they only had a few minutes notice before the bilateral with Qadhafi. Since the Koreans were transported to their official meetings in Libyan-provided Protocol Office Mercedes convoy (as are all visiting delegations), they had no control over the schedule or motorcade movements. Despite telling their liaison contacts in advance of the visit that the PM would not visit any memorial sites, Kim said that at the conclusion of the Qadhafi bilateral, the PM was escorted to the memorial of the U.S. bombing on the Bab al-Azizia compound and asked to sign the guestbook. He said that she would not have agreed if asked to visit, but presented with the inevitable, she wrote an innocous statement at the memorial. He said that, reviewing other recent signatures, it appeared many African leaders had visited the memorial, as well as delegations from Pakistan and the Philippines.

¶7. (C) Embassy Comment: The logistical and protocolary problems which the Koreans faced are routine in Libya, and have bedeviled the French, British, Germans and many others. The Libyans are both unwilling and incapable of scheduling meetings in advance or performing other protocol functions considered standard operating procedure elsewhere. The Libyan requests to the Koreans for assistance with water desalination, power generation and peaceful uses of nuclear energy track with requests to the G8 countries and their other interlocutors. End comment.

States Embassy, DOS.
REASON: 1.4 (b), (d)

¶1. (U) Six months after a deadly riot at the Italian consulate that left more than a dozen killed, Econoff made a quick swing through Libya's downtrodden second city on September 13-14, accompanying a two-person team from the Commerce Department's Bureau of Industry and Security (BIS).

¶2. (C) Upon arrival from Tripoli, one is immediately struck by Benghazi's slower pace. Benghazi doesn't appear to have the constant crush of cars common to Tripoli's streets, lending a relative quiet to the city. The disparity of wealth compared with Tripoli is obvious, and most clearly marked by the cars on the road. New black and white cabs are nearly impossible to find, and other vehicles are severely dilapidated and sand-blasted. State-funded infrastructure appears on a par with the Tripoli, and the streets are not as choked with rubbish. On the other hand, signs of new housing construction are deceiving. Contacts reported that work on several large apartment block developments has been on hiatus for many months; their cinderblock and rebar husks loom forlorn and half-finished. A major bridge connecting the city has been closed for years, with rumors of imminent repairs stretching to fill the time.

¶3. (C) A quick inspection of the Italian consulate, epicenter of the mid-February riots, made plain that it would not be opening for business anytime soon. Anti-Italian and anti-Danish graffiti remain on the walls, which are smoke-blackened and pock-marked. Most of the structure's windows remain broken, and the interior of the building is charred and filled with debris. The streets in the immediate vicinity of the consulate appear unblemished, with no signs of damage. The ravaged building was guarded by three uniformed military police officers (the only uniformed security presence visible on the streets during the two-day stay).

¶4. (U) Visits to both high-end (Dubai Street) and working-class (Eshreen Street) shopping districts highlighted the penchant for business commonly ascribed to the port city. Unlike Tripoli, billboard ads are plentiful, and smaller postings dot every major street. Many of the Dubai Street shops could be transplanted into Western European commercial districts and fit right in. Foot traffic on Eshreen Street was heavy, and the shops appeared well-stocked and orderly. A favorite of Econoff's, among the myriad clothiers featuring bridal gowns, was a second-floor shop's display window, in which the half-dozen lace-wrapped mannequins had their backs turned to the street for modesty.

¶5. (U) Econoff paid a visit to the "Small and Medium Projects Fair" being held in a small industrial park close to the city center. The exhibition was in its final day, but the full selection of eighty-odd vendors was still up and running. Intended to highlight Libyan private companies, the fair showcased about sixty Libyan private and public entities, with Egyptian companies making up the bulk of the remainder. Most booths hawked construction services and materials, oil industry support services and agricultural products. Agents for a handful of large foreign companies (Sanyo, LC, Bobcat) had displays, but the most eye-catching displays belonged to several Libyan manufacturers of Technicolor living room furniture molded out of open-cell foam.

¶6. (U) Exhibition organizers "International Jerma Expo for Exhibitions and Conferences" arranged for display booths in a long run of air conditioned storage containers, spruced up with carpeting, ceiling adornments and additional lighting. The event was well-organized, but sparsely attended - there were easily more booth attendants than visitors. Jerma Expo is also the organizer for a number of other exhibitions to be held in Tripoli over the coming months: an Agricultural Fair (11/27-30), Water and Sewage Equipment Fair (1/29/07-2/1/07), Small and Medium Project Fair (6/1-5), and Safety and Security Fair & Electronics Technical Fair (6/11/07).

¶7. (C) Embassy Comment: Benghazi has reportedly been calm and quiet since the Danish cartoon riots and killings in February 2006. As noted by Econoff, there are not signs of a security presence in the city that would indicate any lingering tension after the unrest of last winter. Benghazi natives resident in Tripoli frequently complain that Benghazi has second class status. While the Jamahiriya government does take care to maintain an appearance of equity in the distribution of government funds and projects, the city lacks vitality or hopefulness. While the General People's Congress (GPC) recently announced plans for a major commercial development in Benghazi, three major free zones are planned for the Misrata area that could potentially overshadow any revitalization in Benghazi. And the GPC also announced the creation of a large "special zone" under the direction of the Leader's son, Saadi Qadhafi, in the area of BuKammash west of Tripoli and Zwara. This special zone is rumored to be a new major tourism project, although (in classic Libyan contradiction) there are also rumors that it will include manufacturing and some aspects of energy production since it may have its own airport, customs officials and security force. Italian Embassy Political Counselor told P/C Chief on September 28 that the Italian consulate would not be reconstructed in the near future. They are concentrating their efforts on a major reconstruction of their Tripoli Embassy building. End comment.

¶1. (C) Charge met with Ahmed Fitouri, Secretary of American Affairs at the General People's Committee for Foreign Liaison and International Cooperation (MFA equivalent) on October 12 and conveyed reftel talking points, stressing the need for swift and stern measures in response to the North Korean announcement. Fitouri questioned whether or not the nuclear test had actually taken place and asked if the U.S. had independently confirmed the North Korean's announcement.

¶2. (C) In response to the request for support of an UNSC Chapter VII resolution , Fitouri said, "Libya acknowledged how dangerous nuclear weapons can be; the Leader's initiative set a positive example for the entire world." He added that, while it was unclear what repercussions would be appropriate if the testing took place, "Libya will work to prevent any dangers to the world." He did not offer any response to the request that countries take firm actions, including financial measures, to freeze assets and transactions related to proliferation activities.

[Libya]
SUBJECT: THE LIBYAN NATIONAL CENTRE FOR STANDARDIZATION AND METROLOGY - AN OVERVIEW

¶1. SUMMARY: The Libyan National Centre for Standardization and Metrology (LNCSM) was established with the goal of bringing Libya into conformance with international trade standards, focusing on eventual accession of Libya to the World Trade Organization (WTO.) The current focus within the LNCSM is protecting the health and safety of Libya's citizens and environment by creating a valid national testing and conformity assessment system. The LNCSM monitors the trade climate within Libya to avoid creating unnecessary barriers to trade, harmonize the rules of competition, and avoid or remove non-tariff trade barriers. In addition, they maintain a focus on avoidance of putting measures in place that would be contrary to Libya's eventual obligations, if and when they can achieve membership in the WTO. The director general of the LNCSM, Dr. Ahmed Shembesh, in addition to seeking international acceptance of testing and reports generated within Libya, also seeks to create domestic confidence in Libya's testing procedures, as well as the bodies charged with undertaking those procedures. END SUMMARY.

The Current Program

¶2. Currently the market surveillance portion of the LNCSM charter is limited by poor communication resources, lack of established procedures and norms, lack of historical record keeping, and a nebulous market place that suffers from porous borders and IPR violations on every scale. The LNCSM recognizes these issues and focuses their current limited program of market surveillance and national conformity on the following areas:

--Protection of consumers from hazards posed by unsafe imported materials
--Facilitating the exchange of goods between local industries and enterprises
--Facilitating the export of local goods by ensuring that they bring a fair price
--Taking a special focus on export assistance to small and medium sized businesses

The Direction of the LNCSM

¶3. The LNCSM intends to be the driving force behind upgrading and establishing a functioning conformity assessment and consumer protection system in Libya's near future. They envision a system afforded appropriate laws, and protected by standards, measures and a quality infrastructure that will be in line with international guidelines. They are currently seeking assistance to achieve these goals in the following key areas:

--Awareness raising campaigns
--Personnel and institutional capacity building
--Analysis of training needs
--Seminars and Workshops
--Practical on-the-job training of specialists
--International study tours

Future Actions

¶4. During her proposed November 11-13, 2006 visit, Assistant Secretary McMurray of the Bureau of Oceans and International

SIPDIS

Environmental and Scientific Affairs and Dr. Hratch Smerjian of the National Institute for Standards and Technology are tentatively scheduled to meet with Dr. Shembesh of the LNCSM and discuss potential areas for U.S. cooperation with Libya in the fields of standardization and metrology.

(C) Charge met with Mohammed al-Ayaab, Americas Desk Director at the General People's Committee for Foreign Liaison and International Cooperation on October 18. Al-Ayaab conveyed a verbal response from Secretary Shalgam to Reftel invitation to Exercise Leading Edge that had been conveyed as a diplomatic note to the Libyan government. "Shalgam thanks the U.S. for the invitation and acknowledges that this cooperation reflects the improvement in our relations," Ayaab said, "but, unfortunately the time is too short for planning our participation because of difficulties during the Ramadan period." He explained that the Libyans were trying to determine if there was anyone from the government they could send as an observer to Exercise Leading Edge, but he did not know if they could coordinate a response before the October 29 designated arrival date in Bahrain. He hoped that Libya could participate in future PSI exercises.

SUBJECT: LIBYAN NOC CHAIRMAN GHANEM'S VIEWS ON PETROLEUM ISSUES

CLASSIFIED BY: Ethan Goldrich, CDA, Embassy Tripoli, State.

REASON: 1.4 (b), (d)

¶1. (C) Summary: Charge met with National Oil Corporation (NOC) Chairman (and former Prime Minister) Shukri Ghanem on October 15 to discuss US-Libyan energy sector cooperation. Ghanem expressed confidence in Libyan efforts to boost oil production and defended the establishment of the Cabinet-level National Energy Committee over the NOC. End Summary.

¶2. (C) Charge congratulated National Oil Company Chairman Shukri Ghanem on receiving the "Petroleum Executive of the Year" award at the 27th annual Oil and Money conference in London on September 18-19. Responding to the Charge's comments on his acceptance speech, "The End of Cheap Oil," Ghanem wryly noted that although oil prices have rebounded recently, he did not expect that trend to continue for long. In the near term, prices should dip following the announcement of a one million bbl/day OPEC production cut, the expected result from OPEC's October 19 meeting in Doha. Ghanem lamented the difficulty of accurately predicting fluctuations in world oil prices, and estimated that roughly $10-15 of the cost of a barrel of oil stems solely from market apprehension about war and political instability in the Middle East region.

Meeting Libyan Production Goals

¶3. (C) When asked for an update on Libya's efforts to boost petroleum production to three million bbl/day by 2010, Ghanem expressed optimism that this figure could be met on this timeline through the continued implementation of the NOC's two-prong plan. The first is the recent opening of Libya to exploration by foreign oil companies. Although the most recent concession awards will take 6-8 years to produce oil in quantity (if a sizable find is made), other new areas are due to come on-line in the next three years. The second, and likely more important factor for production increases in the short-term, will be the enhanced and improved oil recovery (EOR, IOR) operations being undertaken at Libya's mature fields. Ghanem stressed that the return of U.S. companies and expertise will be vital to this effort.

¶4. (C) Ghanem expressed satisfaction at the progress of the latest round of Exploration and Production Sharing Agreements (EPSA). The NOC's review of 70 applying companies produced a list of 47 qualified bidders who will have the opportunity to bid on concession rights in 12 offshore blocks and 29 onshore areas. Multiple bids are expected from most of the qualified companies, so the total number of bids should number well over ¶100. Ghanem noted that oil company interest in Libya remains high, owing to its vast proven and potential reserves, past production history and advantageous geographic location. He confirmed recent meetings with top U.S. oil company executives from Occidental, Chevron, Exxon-Mobil, Conoco-Philips and Marathon, describing them as positive and routine.

The National Energy Council(NEC): "Not a bottleneck"

¶5. (C) Ghanem attempted to clarify the role of the recently-formed "National Energy Council" (NEC). (Note: This new government entity is composed of the Ministers of Industry, Planning, Economy, Finance, and Labor, as well as Ghanem and GPC Secretary or "Prime Minister" Al-Mahmoudi. Its formation has raised concerns among largely professional, technocratic operation would be become more politicized, or at the very least add an unnecessary bureaucratic layer over the GOL energy add an unnecessary bureaucratic layer over the GOL energy sector. End Note). According to Ghanem, the new body will "not be as people think; it will be strictly consultative, not a bottleneck." Ghanem stressed this point several times, emphasizing that the NEC will produce efficiencies, rather than more bureaucracy. The NEC will be tasked by the full Cabinet to make energy sector decisions from time to time, and its select membership will help ensure that government laws and operations do not negatively impact the energy sector.

Trade Shows and Conferences

¶6. (C) Noting active USG and US company interest in, and support for, the upcoming Project Libya conference (December 4-7) Charge requested that Ghanem meet with visiting representatives of U.S. companies during that period. Ghanem was non-committal, but agreed to see what was possible if he was not traveling abroad. Charge noted the great proliferation of conferences in Libya, particularly those concerning the energy sector, and many of which made claims to sponsorship by GOL entities. In this vein, Charge inquired whether the NOC was supporting the November 21-22 "Libya Oil and Gas Show" (as indicated in the exhibition's promotional materials). In response, Ghanem conveyed measured exasperation at the number of exhibitions and conferences being staged across Libya, and his view that they detracted from "real work." He opined that many of them were primarily money-making operations staged by individuals with varying levels of government connections. Regarding the 21-22 November event, Ghanem recalled agreeing to authorize a NOC statement of support, but stated that the NOC did not plan to play an active role in the exhibition.

MOURNING

In commemoration of the Libyan Day of Mourning, the GOL has informed post that on Thursday, October 26, both internet, international phone calls and international air travel will be cut off nationwide from 6AM to 6 PM.   In practice, over the past several years, communications outages have been limited to several hours during the afternoon.  Post can be reached by inmarsat: 881-676-31-5208.  The Day of Mourning commemorates an outrage committed by Italy against Libya in 1911 during which thousands of Libyans were deported from their country and never seen again.  In addition to the cutoff from the outside world, flags will be flown at half staff, television will be broadcast in black and white and posters evoking the memory of the event will appear in major cities.

¶1. (SBU) SUMMARY: Charge discussed Reftel points (concerning U.S. Chemical Weapons Destruction Assistance to Libya) with senior Qadhafi advisor and General People's Committee for Foreign Liaison and International Cooperation (GPCFLIC) Secretary Abdulati al-Obeidi October 31. Their discussion followed Embassy ESTH officer's delivery of the points in non-paper form to Colonel Ahmed AbulHuda and the new GPCFLIC POC for OPCW matters, Adem Talah. Obeidi said the Libyans are examining the Embassy's revised Arabic translation of the contract, and planned to provide feedback before the OPCW meeting in the Hague. He reviewed ongoing Libyan objections to the termination notice section, as well as appropriations and foreign assistance-related restrictions on the program. The previous day Colonel AbulHuda stayed only for a moment, and left Talah and ESTH officer to continue discussions. (ESTH officer spoke with Colonel Huda on the phone earlier in the week and discussed the general issues outlined in reftel) Talah provided no official response, but received the points, and stated that he understood the contractual/financial issues associated with the November deadline for conclusion of the contract discussions. END SUMMARY.

Obeidi Reviews Concerns

¶2. (C) Following ESTH officer's delivery of the Arabic translation of the contract and Reftel points, (see below), Charge reiterated to Obeidi the need for an expeditious reply (preferably before the November 6-10 OPCW meeting at the Hague) and highlighted the November 25 contract bid expiration date. Obeidi responded that he would discuss our response with General Ahmed Mahmoud Ali Al-Zwayy November 1 and the Libyans would try to get back to us on our draft before the November 6 OPCW meeting, but reiterated that the Libyans have been unhappy since the early September discussions in Tripoli about three issues:

- Their perception that the U.S. committed to a 45 million dollar effort, but can only sign for $24,600,000. "This hampers our ability to budget and to provide proper assurance to the OPCW," Obeidi said. (Note: As in previous discussions Obeidi was not receptive to an explanation of the US appropriations process. End Note.)

- The removal of the equipment from Libya after conclusion of the contract; and

- The 30-day cancellation clause.

Upcoming Executive Council Meeting in The Hague

¶3. (U) ESTH officer discussed the U.S. desire to conclude contract negotiations, if possible, during the upcoming executive council session of the OPCW in The Hague. Talah and Colonel AbulHuda agreed that this would be a good opportunity as Talah and Dr. Ahmed Hesnawi would both be in attendance. (Background: Dr. Hesnawi is the Libyan lead technical representative in the discussions, and due to his proficiency in English, Arabic and the technical aspects of the munitions and precursors involved, is the de facto lead negotiator when General al-Azwaay is not in the room.) Although they understood this to be an opportunity to conclude negotiations, neither provided a solid commitment or deadline for completion provided a solid commitment or deadline for completion.

COMMENT

¶4. (S) While the GOL is certainly committed to fulfilling their obligations with respect to the OPCW, there is still some resistance to complete the contractual negotiations. They understand what items/deliverables they need to provide to satisfy the U.S. government, but continue to drag their feet. Talah said plainly that the pace of the negotiations was moving along as fast as the Libyans "desired." Interestingly, the GOL sent Talah to Rome the week of October 22-28 to attend a conference on OPCW obligations to give him an insight into the organization's precepts, showing a continued desire to understand and adhere to their obligations. While the delay in part reflects the specific three concerns outlined by Obeidi, it also reflects the Libyans ongoing calls for a signficant "reward" that the government can show as the benefit of having renounced its WMD programs. They often complain that they gave up hundreds of millions of dollars to the U.S., and in return they expect that the U.S. will reward them with projects and equipment.

Next Steps:

¶5. (SBU) OES A/S Claudia McMurray plans to visit Tripoli on November 11-13 2006, and will have a chance to meet with Dr. El-Waer of the LEA. This will provide an opportunity to ask El-Waer for a definitive answer to Libyan interest in hazardous waste disposal, and what interest remains, if any, in retaining the incinerator/neutralization equipment after the destruction process. If the GOL does not provide its suggested language changes before the upcoming meeting in The Hague, the U.S. delegation will have an additional opportunity to press for the requested items, and/or the issues slowing negotiations.

SUBJECT: SCENESETTER FOR ASSISTANT SECRETARY MCMURRAY VISIT AND STATUS REPORT ON SCIENTIFIC COOPERATION WITH LIBYA

REF: STATE 184185, TRIPOLI 476

¶1. Post warmly welcomes the visit of Assistant Secretary of State for the Bureau of Oceans and International Environmental and Scientific Affairs McMurray. The following background information is provided in anticipation of your visit to Tripoli on November 11-13, 2006. Our scientific engagement program is the most active segment of bilateral cooperation, with ongoing work in biological life sciences, mechanical engineering, water management, nuclear medicine, radioactive waste management and other areas. As with all other delegations, the meeting schedule has not been confirmed at this time. Typically, schedule changes take place up until minutes before a meeting commences. Post anticipates that you will have meetings the evening of Saturday, November 11 with physicians at the Libyan Board of Medical Specialities to discuss telemedicine and sub-speciality training . The morning of Sunday, November 12, we are trying to confirm a meeting with Ahmed Fitouri, the Secretary of American Affairs at the General People's Committee for Foreign Liaison and International Cooperation (MFA equivalent) . In addition, you tentatively have meetings scheduled with Matouq Matouq, the Secretary of the General People's Committee for Manpower, Training, and Employment and Ahmed Shembesh, the Director of the Libyan National Center for Standardization and Metrology. The afternoon of November 12, there may be meetings at the Libyan General Water Authority, the Libyan Environment Authority and the Libyan Renewable Energy Center. Since the actual order of the schedule will vary considerably, and as a follow up to the July 2006 agreement signed by the U.S. and Libya concerning science and technology cooperation, this cable follows the format of the signed agreement, and the two should be read in tandem. You will be briefed upon arrival with the latest version of the schedule.

SIPDIS

HEALTH

See sub topics of Avian Influenza, African Center for Infectious Disease Control, NAMRU-3, Bio-Ethics, and Libyan Board of Medical Specialities.

2. During the July 11-13 2006 visit of U.S. Department of Health and Human Services (HHS) Deputy Secretary Alex Azar, an agreement was signed with the General People's Committee for Health and Environment (GPCHE) to participate in a cooperative initiative for the development of public health and security, with particular reference to public health incidents related to influenza. Attached to this agreement was an offer by HHS to provide the GPCHE a non-competitive grant in the amount of USD$1 Million to foster this cooperation through continued partnerships in disease surveillance, preparedness and response capabilities. The grant was authorized on August 29th 2006, and filed with Health and Human Services. Jane Coury of HHS is finalizing the contract and delivering the monies to the Libyans, and will be returning to Libya on November 11-13 to continue discussions with Dr. AbduHafid Abudher of the Libyan (African) Center for Infectious Disease Control (ACIDC.) For further details, please reference TRIPOLI 476 , dated September 07, 2006. Key staff of the GPCHE: Secretary Dr. Mohamed Rashed, Under Secretary Mr. Habeb Tamer.

AFRICAN CENTER FOR INFECTIOUS DISEASE CONTROL:

3. The scientific engagement program has facilitated continuing contact with the African Center for Infectious Disease Control (ACIDC) and its various offices and personnel. The ACIDC is also the technical point of contact in implementing the HHS Pandemic Influenza Assistance (USD 1 Million.) The main point of contact within the ACIDC is Dr. Abduhafid Abudher. Dr. Abudher also oversees the Tripoli tuberculosis screening center, and Tripoli regional ACIDC center.

4. The Navy Medical Research Unit number 3 (NAMRU-3) based in Cairo, Egypt has been instrumental in engaging the Libyan Biological Life Sciences community. NAMRU-3 invited several Libyan biological scientists to study pathogen handling techniques, sampling techniques disease surveillance workshops and other valuable technical and scientific training programs. They are now routinely hosting teams of 2-5 Libyan scientists at their Cairo based facility for courses runing ne-furweek. In dition, the staff of NAMRU-3 have made themselves available to assist in other medical / bio programs within Libya. Dr. Bruce Boynton visited Tripoli as part of the Trilateral Steering Committee Biological Subcommittee, and Dr. Mustafa Mansour, a dual Egyptian/U.S. citizen has made himself available in the proposal submission for the HHS Pandemic Influenza program. In addition, Dr. Marie Ricciardone, a former NAMRU-3 scientist, and current NP/PTR officer provides continuity and follow up for the Libyan biological science community through the scientist engagement program.

BIO-ETHICS, BIO-SAFETY:

5. The Trilateral Steering Committee Biological Subcommittee, under the direction of Chair Catharine T. Crittenberger has been the chief engine for engagement of the Libyan biological science community. She routinely meets with the Libyan Permanent Committee on Bioethics and Biosafety (LPCBB) and is currently overseeing the Libyan establishment of a comprehensive Bioethics / Biosafety legislation. Her chief interlocutors are Dr. Mohamed Sharif, Manager of the LPCBB, and Dr. Abdurrahman Tawil, LPCBB board member.

LIBYAN BOARD OF MEDICAL SPECIALTIES / TELEMEDICINE:

6. On August 30, 2006, ESTH officer and Dr. Mustafa Mansour of the Navy Medical Research Unit 3 (NAMRU 3) in Cairo, visited the Libyan Board of Medical Specialties to follow up on the July visit of U.S. Department of Health and Human Services Deputy Secretary Alex Azar. DepSec Azar and the Board agreed to collaborate, expand and improve Libya's medical board certification process with particular attention to creating recognized certifications in sub-specialties. The Libyans were challenged by ESTH officer to determine what sort of cooperation or workshop programs would benefit the board, and they responded with two reasonable proposals. The first was a basic discussion on the benefits, feasibility and technology associated with a telemedicine program. The second proposal was for the Libyans to fully fund a series of workshop visits by U.S. physicians, capable of conducting sub-specialty focused workshops in a continuing education capacity, with a secondary goal of discussing and evaluating the board certification criteria in the relevant sub-specialty during the visit. The Libyans have offered to provide funding for visiting physicians from the U.S. to both teach the local physician population, as well as evaluate the board process and certification criteria of medical sub-specialists. Meetings will be scheduled with Jane Coury and/or A/S McMurray as appropriate during their November 11-13 visit to Tripoli.

ENVIRONMENT / WATER

See subtopics of Libyan Environment Authority, Desalination Research, Nuclear Powered Desalination, Quality Monitoring and Education.

LIBYAN ENVIRONMENT AUTHORITY:

8. During the July 2006 visit of Under Secretary of State for Democracy and Global Affairs Paula Dobriansky, she and her delegation met with Dr. Abul-Hakim Al-Waer, Secretary of the Libyan Environment Authority (LEA). They discussed issues of water, general environment, fisheries and standards and metrology. In September 2006, Dr. Al-Waer approached the NDF chemical weapons destruction assistance team and indicated an interest/need for a program to destroy / incinerate / neutralize several caustic and hazardous agents/wastes in accordance with various environmental agreements to which they had either signed, or aspire to sign. These items for destruction included PCB's, transformer oil, pesticides left from Italian residents in the 1930's, and hazardous medical wastes. Dr. Waer desires to establish a solution to the immediate problem of existing waste stockpiles, with additional consideration of disposing of future waste. Dr. Waer said he had a budget of LD 57 Million in 2007 funds to address this disposal problem, (including PCB's, Medical Waste and other hazardous wastes) and would be seeking solutions in 2007/2008.

WATER: DESALINATION RESEARCH:

9. The National Bureau for Research and Development (NBRD), headed by Dr. Ali Gashut oversees the Renewable Energy and Water Desalination Research Center (REWDRC.) The REWDRC oversees research into various desalination technologies including filtration technologies membranes and reverse osmosis technologies and staging various thermal and filtering technologies. The center is currently focusing on the production of 1200 m3/day desalination units for use in Libya's rural communities not currently serviced by the Great Man Made River Authority, with the goal of eventually making these technologies the preferred method of water production/delivery.

WATER: NUCLEAR POWERED DESAL UNITS:

10. The means of powering desalination systems in Libya remains an interesting debate within and out of Libya. Engineer Matug Mohammed Matug, Secretary of the General People's Committee for Manpower, Employment and Training, as well as supervisor of the NBRD and REWDRC continues to request a nuclear powered water desalination unit as a long term solution for powered water desalination unit as a long term solution for Libya's water requirements. Even though traditional combustion and turbomachinery techniques for powering desalination technologies are well within the grasp of the Libyans, and fuel supplies are virtually unlimited, they continue to raise this point as an area for potential cooperation with high-ranking U.S. delegations. Internally there is some debate about this method as well, in that the Libyan leadership does not want Libya to be the pioneer of this technology. Libya wants to see another country prove the concept's feasibility before it invests in the technology.

WATER: QUALITY MONITORING:

11. U.S. Specialists in water quality have been engaging the Libyans via the Libyan General Water Authority (GWA) and the NBRD water quality laboratories. These two entities oversee water quality testing at central laboratories with sampling sites spread throughout Libya. The current lab for the GWA is not well equipped, and one of the lead researchers recently deceased. Experts from Lawrence Livermore Laboratories and Sandia National Labs recently visited both lab facilities and are engaging in cooperation projects. The NBRD is building a new water quality laboratory, and the LLNL and Sandia Labs representatives are providing assistance in planning and construction of the facility.

WATER: EDUCATION:

12. Post is developing a "Water Capacity Building Study Tour" through the voluntary visitor program in cooperation with Dr. Ricciardone at Embassy Cairo and NEA/RA. The program is tentatively scheduled for February 2007. There are both environmental science and geology programs available at Al-Fateh University, and graduate programs in environment and water science available through the Academy for Graduate Studies (AGS). Dr. Saad Al-Ghariani, a former UC Davis student, and Staff Member of the AGS is a cooperative interlocutor concerning the state of Environmental and Water education, and is frequently available to discuss water and water policy with visiting delegations.

13. The many fact finding and technical delegations that have visited Libya have understandably been involved in programs focused primarily on enhanced engagement with Libyan scientists from nuclear, chemical and biological backgrounds. Other entities within Libya that have a focus on water and water legislation have not been as actively engaged such as the General People's Committee for Agriculture, Animals and Water Resources (GPCA), and the Great Man Made River Authority (GMMRA). Programming is not currently underway with the GMMRA, primarily as it is a well-funded and fairly self-sufficient entity. The GMMRA positions and input will become increasingly important, however, as Libya creeps toward a unified water policy. The GMMRA is naturally less interested in desalination technology than pumping from existing aquifers, but should be brought to the table to discuss Libya's larger strategy. The GPCA has not been engaged primarily because they are viewed as a customer or consumer. Again, as a unified policy on water management becomes a reality, the largest users/consumers are going to need to provide input.

COMMERCIAL/TRADE and TRANSPORTATION:

See subtopics of updated trade export restrictions, Boeing Commercial Advocacy, Civil Aviation, and Conferences.

UPDATED TRADE EXPORT RESTRICTIONS:

14. The U.S. Department of Commerce published an amendment to the Export Administration Regulations (EAR) that apply to Libya. This change removed the requirement for a license to export or re-export items controlled for anti-terrorism (AT) reasons. With the change, items such as most computers, software, telecommunications equipment and vehicles can be exported to Libya without a Commerce export license. The BIS team addressed questions about the EAR change, which put Libya on a par with most US export destinations, noting that many of the commodities being checked would no longer require licenses for export and re-export to Libya.

BOEING COMMERCIAL ADVOCACY

15. Dr. David Sampson, Deputy Secretary for U.S. Department of Commerce visited the Libyan General People's Committee for Economy Trade and Investment (GPCETI) and discussed economic policy and trade issues. Among the issues discussed were the September 2006 restructuring of export restrictions to Libya, and the acquisition of Boeing passenger aircraft by Baraq Airlines in Libya. Boeing Advocacy also took place during a recent EXIM Bank and BIS visits.

¶16. Buraq received its first new Boeing aircraft, a medium-range airplane 737-800 dubbed "Tripoli" on October 30. This delivery marked the first brand new commercial aircraft purchased by any Libyan airline since 1979. A ceremony on the occasion of its arrival at Tripoli International Airport was held the evening of October 30, attended by the Charge and representatives from Boeing, Secretary of Cooperation Affairs at GPC for Foreign Liaison and International Cooperation, Secretary of People's Committee for Civil Aviation Department, the Director of Tripoli International Airport, the Director of Air Transport Department and members of the press. A second 737-800 ("Benghazi") is due to be delivered on November 15, and a third is expected in early 2007. Buraq has options to purchase three more 737-800's, but is considering exchanging the options for one to purchase a wide body plane.

CIVIL AVIATION:

¶17. In addition to the GPCETI, DepSec Sampson met with Dr. Mohamed Schlebik, the Director General of the Libyan Civil Aviation Authority, under the General People's Committee for Post Transport and Telecommunications (GPCPTT). They discussed cooperation in air traffic control equipment, runway refinishing and unification of weather database and tracking systems. In September 2006, the regional manager for Raytheon in North Africa visited Dr. Schlebik and is engaging in ongoing discussions concerning civil aviation product sales to Libya. The door to the civil aviation market remains open to other U.S. manufacturers.

CONFERENCES PROMOTING COMMERCIAL OPPORTUNITIES IN LIBYA 2006:

¶18. The second annual Libyan Aviation Exposition 2006 (LAVEX), scheduled for December 04-07 2006 in Tripoli's Ma'atiqa Airfield will provide opportunities for U.S. aerospace manufacturers to demonstrate U.S. equipment as well as broker introductions between U.S. manufacturers and Libyan decision makers. More between U.S. manufacturers and Libyan decision makers. More than 35 Libyan and foreign companies are expected to participate, including U.S. firms Augusta, Africair and Raytheon. European defense firms are expected to make a strong showing at the exhibition, including Airbus, Eurocopter, Dassault Aviation, Thales, Warner Lewis, Safran, MBDA and sevaral Russian companies.

In addition, during the same dates, two simultaneous civilian / commercial expositions will take place in Tripoli:

--Project Libya Energy Exposition: An International Oil, Gas, Power and Renewable Energy Exhibition Forum sponsored by the GPC for Industry, Electricity and Mines, National Oil Corporation and the General Electric Company of Libya (GECOL).

--Project Libya Infrastructure Exhibition: An International Exhibition and Forum for Libya's Infrastructure sponsored by the GPC for Planning, the General Board of Infrastructure and Urban Development, and the Inspector General of Housing and Utilities.

The Project Libya exhibitions are sponsored by Dr. Aisha Muammar Al-Qadhafi through her Wa'atassemo Foundation (Aisha is the Daughter of the Libyan Leader Mu'anmmar al-Qadhafi.)

¶1. (C) Ibrahim Dridi, Director of the Americas Office at the General People's Committee for Foreign Liaison and International Cooperation (MFA equivalent) requested a meeting on November 7 to convey a demarche regarding Libyan views on the China Summit with African nations. "I was instructed to raise our concern over China," said Dridi. Reiterating points made by Secretary for African Affairs Ali Treki reported reftel (b), Dridi said that Libya believed it was inappropriate for a single country, even one as large as China, to hold a summit with all African countries. As a reflection of the Libyan view, the GPCFLIC decided to send the relatively low-level Secretary for Asian Affairs, rather than considering participation by Qadhafi or the General Secretary of the GPCFLIC (Foreign Minister equivalent), AbdulRahman Shalgam.

¶2. (C) Dridi explained that Libya suspected China of ulterior motives in its economic assistance programs to African countries, saying, "Chinese hegemony over the continent may be behind all of the financial offers." He asked Charge for our views on the Chinese Summit. Dridi also said, "Libya wants to coordinate on Africa policy and asks what joint projects you suggest for development cooperation." He asked that we convey the message quietly since Libya didn't want its fears to be reported openly.

¶3. (C) Charge detailed for Dridi our continuing demarches on the need for international peacekeeping troops in Darfur and on facilitating international assistance. We also reminded Dridi that we had offered to set up a bilateral meeting between a senior U.S. trade representative and a Libyan official on the margins of a planned AU trade meeting (cancelled due to a schedule conflict with the Beijing event). Charge also noted the value of dialogue between the U.S. and Libya on African issues and our understanding that Libya was interested in a visit by Special Sudan Representative Andrew Natsios to Tripoli. Charge and Dridi recapped many of the points raised during Assistant Secretary Frazer's visit (reftel a). Dridi said that Libya was ready to receive Natsios or Assistant Secretary Frazer to discuss Africa policy at any time.

¶4. (U) We subsequently provided Dridi with public statements about Undersecretary Burn's recent travel to China, as well as Assistant Secretary Frazer's public remarks on African cooperation and background material on the AGOA program.

¶5. (C) Comment. Libyan interlocutors have continually pushed back on our demarches asking for their help convincing the Sudanese to allow international peacekeepers in the Darfur region, claiming that any outside influence would only act as a catalyst for terrorist activity in the region. Libya's stance is that Africa should take care of its own, with of course, Libya in a primary leadership role. Qadhafi promotes himself as the "Father" of the African Union, and sees the continent as his backyard. Now he must add China to the UN and the historical colonizers of Africa as potential rivals and interlopers. (Interestingly, the British Embassy here was not called in for demarche we received.) We find it fascinating that the Libyans have identified a fear of Chinese hegemony as a potential source of common interest with us. Inviting Secretary of African Affairs Ali Treki for consultations in Washington with Assistant Secretary Frazer and/or including Tripoli in future travel by Ambassador Natsios' might present an opportunity to exchange views on Libyan concerns over Chinese influence, and more importantly to press for a more helpful Libyan stance on Sudan.. End Comment.

¶1. (C) Summary: The GOL sent mixed signals in recent months on wage and pension reform, raising expectations for a thaw in a long-standing freeze on government salaries and a substantial augmentation to state-provided pensions. These are hot-button issues in Libya, where the minimum monthly government salary has been fixed at 150 Libyan Dinars (L.D.) for twenty-five years under the terms of Law No. 15 of 1981 (Note: 150 L.D. is the equivalent of 115 USD at current exchange rates. End note). Wage stagnation affects a large number of Libyan families, since roughly a quarter of Libya's workforce is employed by the state. However, recent GOL moves have raised as many questions as incomes. End Summary.

Seif Makes Big Promises Regarding Wages and Pensions

¶2. (C) During the course of his much-ballyhooed August 20 speech before the First Forum of the National Organization of Libyan Youth (popularly known as the "From tomorrow" speech), Seif al-Islam al-Qadafi addressed the issue of a minimum salary for all employees, as well as a government pension. In his remarks, Seif al-Islam said that: "From tomorrow, it is supposed to have a minimal rate for the people who work in the government and the private sector. It is prohibited to have less than 200 L.D. per month. This means that the salary of 200 L.D. will be a history from tomorrow...The amount of 200 L.D. is the minimal rate of any salary." Regarding the possibility of a pension, he said: "It is clear that one wants the continuity of the contribution of the state concerning his retirement. He wants the state to give him that pension in cash and he will make his own insurance. Thus, there will be funds for a special kind of insurance. The employee will have his salaries for 13 months, not only 12 months...Everyone, who does not want the state to contribute in his pension, will not have the contribution of the state. But he will have the salaries of 13 months instead of 12 months."

In the State of the Masses (Libyan Jamahiriya) You Can Never Have Too Many Committees

¶3. (C) Post has been monitoring developments since Seif al-Islam's speech to see if there has been any GOL follow-through on his statements (Note: Although Seif does not have any formal role in the government structure, his statements are often viewed as having at least the tacit blessing of his father, and tangible results have sometimes resulted from his policy pronouncements. (End Note). GOL follow-up to the speech thus far has been a study in Libyan consensus-building/decision-making. In early September, the Secretariat of the General People's Committee announced the formation of three special committees, which would:

-- Revise the legislation related to remuneration against work, prepare a legal paper on the issue and propose necessary amendments to relevant legislation;

-- Study the economic affects of the amendment and movement of salaries;

-- Prepare a paper on the accompanying procedures for amendment of minimum remuneration for work.

Membership on the three committees was set at a high-level, to include the Secretaries of the General People's Committees for include the Secretaries of the General People's Committees for Justice, Planning, Economy, Finance, Tourism and Manpower, and the Governor of the Central Bank. All these committees were to submit a weekly progress reports to the Secretariat of the General People's Committee.

¶4. (C) To date, post has not seen any tangible outcomes stem from the formation of these committees, and there has been no official mention of addressing the issue of a government pension. However, the government did announce a bonus of between 200 and 280 L.D. for all government employees upon the occasion of Eid al-Fitr last month. Rumor has it that this one-time bonus represents the "13th month" of salary referred to in Seif al-Islam's speech, and is being touted in some circles as the fulfillment of his pledge to augment the national pension system.

A Windfall That Wasn't

¶5. (C) Adding to the confusion is a September 24 official letter from the Secretary of the GPC for Finance to the Central Bank Governor which requests that 300 million L.D. be made immediately available for "financial renumeration." These funds were to be allocated to various GOL entities (e.g., Social Security Fund, Armed Forces) for the distribution of lump sum gratutities to individuals on their payrolls. A subsequent edict from the GPC Secretariat stated that payments were to range from 150-230 L.D., with the larger sums accruing to workers at the bottom of the salary pool. Stipends were also due to families "deprived of wealth," although these recipients would only be determined following the completion of a "social survey." Workers in "productive projects" and "national companies" were also due a bonus, a stipulation that caused great consternation among foreign companies, particularly in the energy sector. Local legal interpreation differed on the GPC ruling, resulting in some companies paying the gratuity and others refusing. In the end, the GPC appears to have quietly pulled-back from this initative, and GOL payments were never made. The rationale behind this reversal remains unclear, as does the intent of the initiative.

¶6. (U) In a sign that this issue will keep evolving in the near term, the Secretariat of GPC approved a resolution on November 4 on the salaries of national employees in public companies and establishments. The resolution provides for a review of the salaries of those employees without reference to the provisions of law (15) for 1981, authorizing general assemblies of different public companies, contracting and insurance companies to set their own salaries for these employees in accordance with their activities and financial positions. Post will continue to monitor these developments to gauge their applicability and impact on U.S. companies in particular.

SUBJECT: LIBYAN CENTRAL BANK ESTABLISHING NEW TRAINING INSTITUTE

REF: TRIPOLI 561

CLASSIFIED BY: Elizabeth Fritschle, Pol/Econ Chief, United States Embassy, DOS.
REASON: 1.4 (b), (d)

¶1. (U) See action request, Para. 7.

¶2. (U) The Libyan Central Bank is launching a new training center to improve employee skills throughout the banking sector, and its director is open to U.S. offers of assistance. Pol/Econ Chief and Econoff met with the Libyan Central Bank on the afternoon of November 6 to discuss the scope and direction of Central Bank training initiatives and offer appropriate U.S. assistance. Dr. Omar Bushallah, General Manager of the nascent Institute of Banking and Financial Studies was joined by Saleh Keshlaf, Director of the Central Bank Governor's Office (chief of staff equivalent) for the discussion. Also present were two representatives from the McKinsey Group, which is currently engaged in a cooperative study with the Central Bank to upgrade and privatize the Libyan banking system (see Reftel).

¶3. (U) The Libyan Central Bank has just begun the process of standing up the Institute of Banking and Financial Studies, which was established by a decree from the General People's Committee Secretariat in late October. Although its bylaws are still being drafted, it has been decided that the Institute will replace the existing Central Bank Training Center. Dr. Bushallah is leading this effort at the Central Bank, and is developing a two-year training program encompassing three main skill areas: English language, computer science and industry-specific technical training. This comprehensive course of instruction is intended to be a mandatory certification program for all new employees of Libyan banks. Training programs for existing employees will also be developed in time. Dr. Bushallah declared that his Institute will be totally run by the Central Bank, in tandem with similar programs being developed by the General People's Committee for Finance or the General People's Committed for Manpower, Training and Employment.

An Institute "Matching Our Ambitions"

¶4. (U) Dr. Bushallah allowed that the current Central Bank training center was modest and functional, but he looked forward to being able to guide visitors through a brand-new facility that was "something matching our ambitions." He rejected a suggestion that Libyans could take advantage of excellent training programs already available in other Arabic-speaking countries. The current plan calls for the establishment of a training campus, complete with residence halls, sports facilities, auditoriums and housing for visiting trainers. Until that facility becomes reality, the Central Bank will begin the transition using existing infrastructure. In theory, all of Libya's state banks will be obligated to provide operational funding for the new Institute, their required share being determined based on the number of employees on staff. The Central Bank will also incorporate the national banks at a senior level, as their general managers will be required to serve on the Institute's advisory council. Dr. Bushallah noted that the Central Bank is already providing English language training to 500 banking sector employees, and hoped to expand this program. The Bank is currently employing six English language trainers contracted through Berlitz in Manchester, UK, placing them at its Tripoli, Benghazi and Sebha branch offices. Other part-time instructors have been culled from the Libyan university system.

Welcomes U.S. Government Cooperation and Other Training Opportunities

¶5. (C) Dr. Bushallah noted that he intends to generally model the Institute on the efforts of the GCC states, developing a highly institutionalized, vice outsourced, national training model. He stressed that the Central Bank is open to the best ideas from around the world, and is not wedded to a single training model. However, while the Central Bank was open to new ideas, his intention is that all banking sector employees will be required to complete the Libyan course before being eligible for training overseas. Pol/Econ Chief described numerous U.S. training opportunities that were available to the Bank, highlighting the financial sector service reform programs available through MEPI and the December 11-13 conference at the Federal Reserve Bank of New York under the U.S.-Middle East/North Africa Private Sector Dialogue (U.S.-MENA PSD). Dr. Bushallah indicated that he was aware of the conference and agreed that it would be a good opportunity to explore new avenues of engagement and training (Note: While on the subject of conferences, Bushallah stated that the planned November 20-21 "Banking and Finance Libya" conference in Tripoli (hosted by Aisha Qaddafi's Waatasimo Foundation) had been canceled. End Note). He also said that he would consider any USG proposals for closer cooperation on sector reform. He mentioned that several other countries had extended offers for training assistance and that the Libyans would determine which proposals were most advantageous (Embassy note: the souk is open. End note). Asked if the Central Bank Institute could provide assistance in setting-up appropriate meetings, as well as the facilitation of visa issuance for a future financial sector service reform team visit, Dr. Bushallah said that he would welcome a team with training proposals.

¶6. (U) Following up on this positive discussion, post's PAO section is engaging with Dr. Bushallah to provide information on the full range of U.S. educational training and exchange programs available to the Central Bank over the coming year. Post has also reminded the Central Bank about the Federal Reserve Bank conference in New York, and has encouraged a quick decision Libyan participation.

¶7. (C) COMMENT AND ACTION REQUEST: This may be another one in a continuing series of grandiose Libyan projects that are announced, but then falter during implementation due to the complex bureaucracy inherent in a "state of the masses" governing system. While Embassy has been pressing continually for an official government reception of a MEPI delegation, we are most likely to achieve our MEPI objectives if we help the Libyans achieve some basic comfort level with the scope of programming. This may be an opportunity to bring in a focused team of financial sector service reform experts to initiate programming as a good "foot in the door" project, that could also be combined with additional work through the Qadhafi Development Foundation's National Economic Strategy for maximum impact. Please advise if a financial reform specific visit might be possible in January or February 2007. END COMMENT AND ACTION REQUEST.

SUBJECT: LIBYA: TIP SPECIAL WATCH LIST ASSESSMENT

REF: (A) STATE 175900, (B) TRIPOLI 506

CLASSIFIED BY: Elizabeth Fritschle, Pol/Econ Chief, United States Embassy, DOS.
REASON: 1.4 (b), (d)

¶1. (C) SUMMARY: The most salient feature of trafficking in Libya is the lack of information about it. Governments, non-governmental organizations, inter-governmental organizations, and the media all appear to know very little about the phenomenon. While slightly more information is available about aspects of labor trafficking, the closed nature of Libyan society has prevented even local officials from estimating the true scope of trafficking for the purpose of either sexual or labor exploitation. Preliminary indications suggest that human trafficking does occur in Libya, although it is not yet possible to estimate its extent.

¶2. (C) SUMMARY CONTINUED: Libya has long, porous borders and serves as a transit point for migrants desperately seeking access to continental Europe. Migrants currently comprise almost one quarter of Libya's approximately 7 million residents. International organizations have concluded that the institutions designed to protect Libya's 6,500 kilometers of borders and coastline suffer from corruption and gross mismanagement. Indicators of potential sex trafficking stem from individuals who claim that the majority of inmates in Tripoli's only prison for women are prostitutes from sub-Saharan Africa. Indications of labor trafficking derive from the reportedly common practice among Libyan employers to confiscate the passports of their foreign workers, and to fail to pay them. The government has expressed an openness to learning about trafficking in persons, but appears to lack even a rudimentary understanding of the phenomenon. Post has adopted a pro-active approach to two of the more immediate problems - lack of information in general and lack of skills among officials. The Public Affairs Officer awarded September 28 a grant of almost $60,000 to IOM to build capacity among local officials and law enforcement agencies. Through this project, IOM, post and the Government of Libya (GOL) hope to improve their understanding of trafficking in Libya and how best to respond to it. END SUMMARY.

SEX TRAFFICKING

¶3. (SBU) The Government of Libya (GOL) has not conducted research or produced reports about trafficking for the purpose of sexual exploitation. The government-controlled media has not published any articles. Independent, domestic, non-governmental organizations (NGOs) are illegal and do not exist in the country. Foreign-based Libyan "NGO"s, such as those working in Geneva, have not reported about the problem. Semi-official local organizations, such as the Qadhafi International Development Foundation, have not investigated the phenomenon. Human Rights Watch (HRW), Amnesty International (AI), and the International Organization for Migration (IOM) all confessed to Poloff their ignorance about the extent and nature of the problem. In 2004 and 2005, respectively, AI and HRW visited Libya. They visited prisons and spoke extensively to foreign workers. HRW Director For The Middle East And North Africa Sarah Leah Whitson, HRW Researcher Frank Abrahams, and AI Researcher Phillip Luther told poloff, over the course of several conversations in September, that they produced no information about sex trafficking or sex workers during their trips to Libya. IOM has worked with the GOL since 2004, and signed an official status agreement in August. IOM's Tripoli Chief of Mission Laurence Hart admitted to poloff August 31 that IOM has so far obtained very limited information about sex trafficking in Libya.

¶4. (C) Prostitution is illegal in Libya, and it is a very sensitive topic. In informal and off-the-record conversations, Libyan men have told Poloff that the majority of prostitutes in Libya used to come from Morocco, only to be replaced more recently by women from sub-Saharan Africa. Most men agreed that sub-Saharan Africans now outnumber Arab women. (See reftel for information about Libya's "open door to Africa" migration policy of the 1990s, and the resulting influx of African migrants and refugees.) Mansour El Mesalati, an IOM local hire who has studied in the U.S. and worked in the Ministry of the Interior, told Poloff that many prostitutes come from Nigeria and Ghana. Pastor Jean Clement Ali of the Union Church in Tripoli told poloff that he has visited Libyan prisons for the past six years, as part of an officially-sanctioned program run by the church. He reported that he has regularly visited the only women's prison in Tripoli, which he said contains about 300 inmates. The majority of women in the prison come from countries in sub-Saharan Africa, Ali claimed, adding that the majority of women in the prison have worked as prostitutes in Libya. Four Union Church council members and another Union Church pastor corroborated Ali's story. Ali blamed "deception" and "shattered dreams" for driving these women into poverty and then prostitution. Their smugglers led them to believe that they could work in Libya to make enough money for the passage to Europe, he said. Instead, Ali reported, these women learned when they arrived in Libya that they had been misled, and entered into a traumatic state of destitution and dislocation. Out of desperation, they turned to prostitution. Ali said that he did not know how many of these women had been coerced or deceived directly into working as prostitutes.

LABOR TRAFFICKING

¶5. (C) A population of about 5.5 million Libyan citizens has witnessed since the 1990s a dramatic increase in foreign residents, currently estimated at 1.6 million. Some of these migrants entered the country under the GOL's formerly liberal migration policy, and many entered illegally. Laurence Hart of IOM asserted that the majority of all migrants hail from Nigeria, Chad, Niger, Ghana, and Egypt. Most came to Libya to work. Sub-Saharan Africans constitute the majority of the migrants, and also those most vulnerable to labor trafficking, according to Hart. Hantush Al-Wash, United Nations High Commission on Refugees (UNHCR) Tripoli Chief of Mission, confirmed this assertion, and reported that he currently handles a caseload of about 12,000 asylum requests (reftel). Al-Wash told Poloff that his staff has been overwhelmed by the number of applicants. Asylum-seekers face an eight-month waiting list for an interview, he said. Al-Wash has met and interviewed a wide swathe of foreign workers since he arrived in November 2005. Professional smuggling to and through Libya, he said, "is a fact." He has been impressed by the planning carried out in Egypt. Many migrants transit Libya very rapidly, he said, in three to four days, and he reported that Egyptians comprised 51% of the people arrested last year in Lampedusa on their way to Italy.

¶6. (C) Al-Wash reported that migrants who remain to work in Libya most frequently complain about unpaid wages. "Every week workers tell me they're not getting paid," he said. He also said that employers commonly confiscate the passports of their foreign workers. "They have a practice of keeping the passports of their employees - mainly for security, to make sure employees will not do something wrong." The bureaucratic procedures required to hire workers legally from abroad are so cumbersome, Al-Wash said, that barely anyone uses official channels. "A farmer can request 10 workers from Sudan...but he will to pay taxes and be obliged to pay his workers," Al-Wash explained.

"The majority of Libyans avoid doing this." Recently, Al-Wash noted, a trend emerged with employers firing both legal and illegal workers, in order to find new employees at lower wages. Workers have no one in the government to whom they can address complaints or ask questions about their rights. "The administration in this country on this issue is close to zero," Al-Wash complained. "There are no institutions. It's up to the manager or director. Even if you ask what are the policies or guidelines, you won't have a satisfactory answer." Al-Wash noted, however, that he has not heard reports of employers refusing to return passports to their employees. "The employers take passports, but I have not heard that when they [foreign workers] finish work, the employer wouldn't give it back. Maybe it exists, but I haven't heard."

MANAGEMENT OF BORDERS AND CUSTOMS

¶7. (C) Libya has approximately 2,000 kilometers of Mediterranean coastline and shares a land border with six different countries that totals approximately 4,500 kilometers. GOL officials and state-run media outlets commonly cite these statistics in explaining the government's failure to stem the flow of migrants transiting through Libya to Europe. IOM Chief of Mission Laurence Hart told Poloff August 31 that GOL officials have also quietly acknowledged widespread corruption among customs and border officials, and they claim to have begun fighting it. The World Bank's July 2006 country economic report for Libya cited key flaws in the customs administration and border management currently employed by the Libyan government, which could permit human smuggling directly through the official points of entry. According to the report, the customs system does not have the capacity "to tackle the reportedly high levels of informal trade and smuggling that occur between Libya and neighboring countries." The report highlighted the lack of an integrated information technology system and its associated infrastructure. The current system relies completely on physical verification and is "entirely paper-based." Moreover, the report stated that the customs administration lacks detection technology and its officials lack professional skills and training. Customs officials do not currently monitor key statistics, such as the percentage of goods selected for physical verification, the results of these verifications, or the compliance record of individual traders. Most significantly, the customs administration does not coordinate with other key border agencies, such as agriculture and health officials. (COMMENT: The report did not mention whether customs officials consulted with border security officials. The report strongly suggests that they do not coordinate their efforts, and that vehicles smuggling human beings could readily slip through the poorly administered customs regime. END NOTE.)

GOVERNMENT ATTITUDE

¶8. (C) Laurence Hart and Mansour El Mesalati of IOM told Poloff September 11 that the GOL had approached them to help fight trafficking in persons. Hart and El Mesalati described Libyan government officials as open to learning about and addressing the problem. They reported that government officials know very little about the global phenomenon of trafficking in persons. El Mesalati, who previously worked in the Ministry of the Interior, admitted that he did not know the difference between human smuggling and human trafficking. He was unaware that women who came to Libya knowing they would serve as prostitutes could find themselves in conditions that constitute trafficking. He did not realize that employers could coerce migrants to work by confiscating their passports, withholding their wages, or threatening them with detention and deportation. Nor did he know that mediation fees charged by smugglers to transport workers to Libya could place the workers in debt bondage to creditors in their countries of origin. El Mesalati explained that if he is unfamiliar with these basic facts about trafficking, then government officials and border guards certainly do not know them. Both Hart and El Mesalati said that Aliah Al Erishi, the new GOL Secretary for Expatriates, Migration and Refugees, has a vital role to play in Libya's fight against trafficking in persons. Hart said that Al Erishi has expressed a willingness to learn about and engage with the issue. Hart said that Al-Erishi has thus far demonstrated patience and intelligence. Al-Erishi reportedly told Hart that he rejected the first draft of Libya's new law on migration because, "I found it too primitive." (NOTE: Al-Erishi is a resident of Massachusetts who returns to Libya a few times a year. It is unclear to us how much of a player he is on issues, during the stretches of time when he is not here. End Note.)

EMBASSY APPROACH

¶9. (U) Post has identified the urgent need to bolster awareness and skills among local officials. The Public Diplomacy and Political/Economic Sections worked together with IOM to devise an eight-month project aimed at strengthening the capacity of government officials and law enforcement agencies to identify trafficking victims, prevent trafficking, and prosecute traffickers. On September 28, the Public Affairs Officer granted $59,850 to IOM to administer the project. IOM will implement it in close collaboration with the GOL and semi-official local organizations. Post intends to learn from more about the problem, and how best to counter it, through this capacity-building project. IOM is currently working with the GOL to develop a national strategy to combat illegal migration, and plans to include in the strategy lessons learned through this post-funded project. In addition, post has continually raised the issue with GOL counterparts, and has presented IOM with a formal request to help answer detailed questions about trafficking in Libya.

SUBJECT: QADHAFI ISSUES ANTI-CORRUPTION WARNING TO LIBYA'S WEALTHY

CLASSIFIED BY: Elizabeth Fritschle, Pol/Econ Chief, United States Embassy, DOS.
REASON: 1.4 (b), (d)

1. (U) Libyan leader Muammar al-Qadhafi recently issued a particularly stark warning against official corruption, calling on the wealthy to declare their holdings and income sources and "repent" for any ill-gotten gains. In a November 13 speech before the General Council for Planning broadcast live on state television, Qadhafi (known locally as, The Leader) used his self-declared position as a government "outsider" and leader of the Revolution to warn of a revolt by Libya's poor against the corrupt. He did so conjuring up vivid images of a popular uprising by Libya's underprivileged, complete with burning houses, farms and luxury automobiles. He warned that he was "still holding the safety valve, which if [he] let loose, it would lead to the country's explosion ~ They are only waiting a sign from me. If I tell them that I no longer hold the safety valve, you will see the country burning, and then we would not know when it [the fire] could be distinguished."

brought him to power. During the course of that speech, Qadhafi set a deadline of December 31 for the disclosure of annual income and personal assets on the part of a broad, but non-specific swath of Libyan citizens, including leaders in government, public companies and private business. This exhortation directly resulted in the passage of GPC resolution 395 in September, which established the "Verification Committee of the Transparency Declaration." This special committee, chaired by the Chief of the Libyan Supreme Court, has reportedly held a number of publicized meetings to finalize the necessary declaration forms and prepare for their receipt and processing. Qadhafi's November 13 speech served as a pointed reminder that only six weeks remain until the anticipated conclusion of this probe.

¶3. (C) Embassy Comment: Despite the dramatic rhetoric, it remains to be seen if the Qadhafi edict will be meaningfully implemented, and what if any impact it will have on Libya's wealthy citizens, particularly privileged members of his inner circle. Qadhafi has maintained his control by periodically "removing from favor" people who threaten his interests, or the interests of those who serve his current needs. This transparency initiative under the guise of good governance may be a way to "knock down" people who are judged to have expanded beyond their intended sphere of influence -- or individuals who have made themselves a regime liability through greed. Some have speculated that the "Revolutionary Committees," who opposed Libya's post 2003 opening to the west may be the target of the anti-corruption campaign. The country still is trying to recover from the socialist policies of the 70s and 80s when property was confiscated and businesses were expropriated through the work of revolutionary committees. Post has not been able to identify or speak with any members of the special "transparency committee" but will continue to seek out information about its deliberations.

SUBJECT: ABDALLAH YEHIA IS "UNQUESTIONED LEADER" OF SLA/UNITY

TRIPOLI 00001026  001.2 OF 002

¶1.    (SBU)  Summary.  Three SLA/Unity representatives visiting Tripoli said December 9 that Abdallah Yehia is the unquestioned leader of the Sudanese Liberation Army (SLA)/Unity branch and that SLA/Unity is open to an agreement with the newly-formed United Revolutionary Front (URF), though serious talks between the two groups have yet to begin.  They dismissed any efforts to bring the Fur into the predominantly Zaghawa URF and SLA/Unity grouping, stressing that military strength on the ground should determine representation in the peace talks.  End Summary.

¶2.    (SBU)  PolOff and P/E Chief met with three SLA/Unity representatives currently in Tripoli - Osman Muhammad Busra (a representatives currently in Tripoli - Osman Muhammad Bashir (a political rep of Abdullah Yehia who has been physically present in Libya since July), Mahjub Hussein (an SLA/Unity spokesman resident in London who's been in Libya since mid-November), and Abubakr Kadu (described as the senior SLA/Unity field commander). Kadu arrived in Tripoli on/about November 29 from Juba and departs for Darfur on/about December 13.

YEHIA IS CLEAR LEADER OF SLA/UNITY

¶3. (SBU) According to the SLA/Unity delegation, Abdallah Yehia is the unquestioned political leader of the SLA/Unity branch. Suleiman Jamous and Sharif Harir are "just members" of the SLA/Unity government council. They were dismissive of suggestions Jamous might be in direct contact with Justice and Equality / Collective (JEM/CL) leader Bahar Idriss Abu Gharda. Busra was vague on the status of talks between JEM/CL and SLA/Unity, implying that only after both groups returned to the field on/about December 13 would they consider talking about some form of "alliance." SLA/Unity will only consider an agreement with the URF that makes Abdallah Yehia the new group's leader. Kadu boasted that JEM/CL has only five percent of the fighters he has under his command.

SLA/UNITY DISMISSIVE OF TRIBAL DIMENSTIONS OF DARFUR CONFLICT

¶4. (SBU) All three dismissed the idea that there were tribal or ethnic dimensions to both the Darfur conflict and the UN/AU political process, and were similarly dismissive of any efforts to bring the Fur on board in any URF-SLA grouping. (Note: Although Hussein later bristled at the suggestion that he might be a member of the Zaghawa tribe, emphatically insisting that he was Nubian. End note.) "Any peace process with tribal underpinnings will fail," said Busra. They dismissed the idea that Fur leaders possess significant military strength; indeed, they described Abdulshafi and Diraige as militarily irrelevant. At the same time, they stressed SLA/Unity was inclusive of non-Zaghawa. Peace requires participation by forces with significant military strength (SLA/Unity and JEM/CL) and one delegation comprising both the IDPs and refugees.

KHALIL, NOT ABDULWAHID, NECESSARY FOR PEACE AGREEMENT

¶5. (SBU) The three spoke at length about Abdulwahid, characterizing him as a "historic" figure, but one who has ultimately not kept up with the changing situation on the ground. He continues to see himself as the new John Garang. Hussein said he was in Paris in November and refused to meet with Abdulwahid, whom he described as "a liar". While they conceded Abdulwahid has some support among youth in the IDP camps, he does not represent all of Darfur's marginalized people. All three said without hesitation that Abdulwahid's participation was not necessary for a meaningful peace agreement.

¶6. (SBU) By contrast, they assessed that Khalil Ibrahim's participation in the peace process is important, stressing that Khalil is still in a position to influence the security situation in Darfur (by contrast with Abdulwahid). They noted favorably that Khalil had sent a representative to Juba. All three had positive things to say about JEM/CL leader Bahar Abu Gharda, praising his commitment to people "in the field" and his attendance at the October 27 Sirte meeting. "Bahar is interested in cooperating with SLA/Unity," said Busra, noting an alliance between Yehia and Abu Gharda is "definitely possible."

SLA/UNITY EAGER TO "COOPERATE" WITH UNAMID

¶7. (SBU) Busra asked to deliver a three-part message to the USG: (1) the GOS is a dictatorial regime; (2) the US should therefore play a political as well as humanitarian role in Darfur (implying the USG should choose sides between the rebels and the GOS); and (3) SLA/Unity will not obstruct the UNAMID deployment and would like to "actively cooperate" with international peacekeepers.

SATISFACTION WITH LIBYAN HOSTS

TRIPOLI 00001026 002.2 OF 002

¶8. (SBU) SLA/Unity is satisfied with Libya as a host of the UN/AU peace process and thinks Libya has generally been helpful. They conceded not all movements agree but refrained from comment on Libya's relationship with elements of the JEM leadership.

NO ROLE FOR MINAWI

¶9. (SBU) All three were emphatic that Minni Minawi has no place in the peace process except as a member of the GOS (they called it NCP) delegation. Hussein said it would be "impossible" for Minawi to join the UN/AU process at this late stage.

SUBJECT: SUDANESE DIPLOMAT ALLEGES LIBYAN OFFICIALS' COMPLICITY IN HUMAN SMUGGLING

CLASSIFIED BY: Chris Stevens, DCM, Embassy Tripoli, Department of State.
REASON: 1.4 (b), (d)

¶1. (C) The long-serving Sudanese DCM in Tripoli, Isaac Kenti, told CDA in a recent meeting that Sudanese criminal networks freely operate migration smuggling rings from Libya to Europe with the complicity of some Libyan officials. According to Kenti, while the GOL provides border guards and police with free or subsidized apartments, cars, and food, the smugglers are able to provide the one thing the Libyan government does not -- cash. Laurence Hart, head of the International Organization for Migration's Tripoli office, confirmed separately that law enforcement and border officials are involved in facilitating illegal migration.

¶2. (C) Kenti bemoaned the fact that up to 80 percent of irregular migrants arrested in Europe after transiting from Libya claim Sudanese nationality to bolster their asylum applications. According to Kenti, only 20 percent of migrants smuggled or trafficked into Europe are actually Sudanese citizens. The rest claim Sudanese citizenship to decrease the chance that they will be repatriated. He estimated that there were currently about 500 Sudanese currently in detention in Malta after having made landfall there.

¶3. (C) Kenti said that 50 to 70 individuals from sub-Saharan Africa and South Asia, who are smuggled by Sudanese criminal networks to Europe, drown each month attempting to cross the Mediterranean. Sudanese diplomats in Libya privately estimate that between 300,000 and 400,000 Sudanese are resident and working in Libya at any given time, although the number of Sudanese in Libya has reportedly decreased with the levying of new, punitive school-registration fees for non-Libyan children this academic year.

October to imports of non-Egyptian goods as part of an effort to encourage greater use of its eastern port in Benghazi. A desire to better regulate imports and tariffs, as well as to reduce importation of used vehicles, may have prompted the decision, which was not coordinated with Egypt and which has disrupted business. The badly coordinated measure underscores the continuing dissonance between senior political leaders' calls for economic reform and the adoption of policies that hinder, rather than help, business. End summary.

CLOSING THE EASTERN BORDER TO NON-EGYPTIAN IMPORTS

¶2. (C) Libyan businessman Husni Bey (protect) told Pol/Econ Chief November 6 that the GOL adopted new rules in early October to prevent importation of goods of non-Egyptian manufacture across the Egyptian-Libyan land border. Only products manufactured in Egypt may be imported overland from Egypt to Libya; products manufactured elsewhere that had previously been trans-shipped via Egypt to Libya were no longer permitted. (Note: Bey is the senior sibling of a family-owned holding company whose varied commercial interests include import/export and distribution under license of foreign-manufactured products. End note.) Bey complained that the new strictures, which were implemented without advance warning to businesses using the overland route, had seriously disrupted imports of consumer goods, contributing to shortages of some items during the several weeks it took companies to adjust their import and distribution networks.

EGYPT SURPRISED

¶3. (C) Egyptian DCM Ayman Musharafa confirmed November 9 that the new strictures were in place. Indicating that the GOL had given Egypt's government less than 24-hours notice that the new rules would go into effect, he attributed the measures to the GOL's desire to encourage greater use of the Benghazi port, ostensibly to facilitate better regulation of imports and tariffs on same. Conceding that the Egyptian-Libyan land border is porous, Musharafa said the GOL had complained for some time that it was unable to better regulate the flow of overland imports. Rumors over the summer to the effect that the GOL would seek to close the Egyptian-Libyan border to all imported goods had prompted a senior-level demarche by Egypt to the GOL protesting the proposal. Egypt's understanding was that the plan, to include bans on non-Egyptian products, had subsequently been dropped altogther; the October initiative came as a surprise.

BENGHAZI PORT THE NEW ENTREPOT

¶4. (C) Benghazi's port, which both Musharafa and Bey described as "the worst" in Libya, had recently undergone some physical and administrative refurbishment (NFI) and the GOL was keen to funnel imports through it. Despite the changes and the GOL's efforts to encourage its use, the Benghazi port remains so "chaotic" that some importers have preferred to incur additional expense to route their products through the better-run ports at the Misrata Free Trade Zone or Tripoli.

USED GAS GUZZLERS PART OF THE PROBLEM?

¶5. (C) Musharafa said the new measures were prompted in part by the GOL's desire to better regulate and limit importation of fuel inefficient used vehicles. The GOL discounts car prices as part of the basket of subsidies it provides to Libyans in exchange for political quiescence. Imports and sales of vehicles, many of them used, have increased dramatically in the last 18 months. Noting a recent, short-term gasoline shortage occasioned by delayed delivery of two tankerloads of gasoline (details septel), Musharafa said the GOL had belatedly realized that its gasoline import and distribution networks weren't sufficient to supply the newly enlarged fleet of Libyan cars.

The GOL was particularly concerned about importation of used vehicles, many of which were purchased in bulk in Europe and shipped overland through Turkey, Syria, Jordan and Egypt to Libya. The GOL is reportedly also keen to limit imports of used vehicles from Tunisia.

¶6. (C) The relative porosity of land border crossings, together with less-developed customs and immigration systems at land border checkpoints, made it more difficult to police them. The move to encourage greater use of its ports was part of a broader GOL effort to better manage imports. Bey noted that funneling imports through the ports also limited the ability of individual border guards to solicit bribes, but potentially made it easier for more senior officials involved in port administration to do so. He indicated that corruption remained a greater problem at Benghazi than at Misrata or Tripoli.

¶7. (C) Comment: Bey was scathing in his criticism of the GOL's ill-considered and poorly implemented decision, citing it as a sign of what he characterized as a lack of commitment to and clarity about economic reform among senior GOL leaders. The measure highlights a continuing feature of the landscape here: the disconnect between senior-level rhetoric about the need for and commitment to economic reform and a series of decisions -- requiring Arabic-language translations of foreign passport biodata pages, increasingly stringent requirements that foreign companies employ Libyans who may or may not be qualified -- that hinder business at the practical level. End comment.

SUBJECT: QADHAFI'S TRAVEL TO SPAIN

CLASSIFIED BY: Chris Stevens, DCM, Embassy Tripoli, Department of State.
REASON: 1.4 (b), (d)

GOL requests for meetings and content. After initially saying the Leader did not want to sign bilateral agreements during his visit, the GOL has reversed course and the two sides are now scrambling to finalize language for a host of memoranda and treaties. The Libyan advance team's requirements for the Leader's lodging have prompted speculation about his health. End summary.

LACK OF CLARITY COMPLICATES PLANNING

¶2. (SBU) Spanish DCM Rafael-Maria Reig Sanchez told P/E Chief December 9 that planning for Leader Muammar al-Qadhafi's mid-December visit to Spain had been problematic in both a logistical and substantive sense. Qadhafi originally wanted to visit Spain before the recent EU-African Union Summit in Lisbon; however, that wound up not being possible for scheduling reasons on both the Libyan and Spanish sides. It is now expected that Qadhafi will travel to Spain December 15-18 for a visit comprising both personal and official elements. Sanchez noted noted that the GOL has been unclear and at times contradictory about whether it wishes the visit to be considered official or unofficial.

¶3. (C) Confirming press accounts, Sanchez said Qadhafi will meet with Spanish PM Zapatero December 17; King Juan Carlos is also scheduled to host a luncheon in honor of the visiting Libyan leader. Finalizing protocol arrangements has been "incredibly difficult", in part because Qadhafi does not encumber an official position or carry official title, and because the GOL's advance team -- apparently responding to shifting dictates from its principal -- continues to change its requests for meetings and content. Spain's Ambassador to Tripoli, Joaquin Perez-Villanueva, told the DCM that Qadhafi's plans to visit Seville and nearby Islamic sites in Cordoba and Grenada have prompted concern about the nature of the remarks he may deliver at historic Islamic sites.

INITIALLY COY, GOL NOW WANTS TO SIGN BEVY OF AGREEMENTS

¶4. (C) After initially indicating it did not/not want to sign bilateral agreements during the visit, the GOL indicated late last week that it wished to quickly finalize language for an education and culture agreement, a defense cooperation agreement, a bilateral legal cooperation and extradition treaty, an investment security agreement and a double taxation-exemption agreement. Sanchez expressed frustration about the GOL's "wait and hurry up" approach, noting that Spain had tried for some time to finalize several of the agreements, but to no avail. According to Sanchez, the only document for which agreement on the language had been achieved was the education and culture agreement. He noted that GOL officials, referencing the recent denouement of the Bulgarian medics' case, had been particularly insistent that a bilateral legal cooperation and extradition treaty should preclude the possibility of immediate pardon for prisoners returned to their home country. Sanchez lamented that the rush to finalize agreements for signature in time for Qadhafi's visit had precluded meaningful bilateral discussions of what the two sides' understanding of those accords would mean and how they would be implemented. "The form is more important to the GOL than the substance", he said.

LODGING REQUESTS PROMPT SPECULATION ABOUT QADHAFI'S HEALTH

¶5. (C) Sanchez noted that Qadhafi's lodging requirements were also problematic. GOL officials insisted that the Leader not be housed above the first floor of the hotel in which he will stay, saying Qadhafi refuses to ride in elevators because of security considerations. In addition, GOL minders insisted that the hotel and room in which Qadhafi will stay should feature as few stairs as possible. Sanchez said that GOL officials, when pressed, conceded that Qadhafi has difficulty physically negotiating stairs (NFI). (Note: Post notes that Qadhafi appeared to be unwell in television footage of Lisbon's EU-African Union Summit. His gait was unsteady and he appeared to have difficulty turning his head, forcing him to turn his entire upper torso. There have been recent, unconfirmed reports that he may have suffered a stroke. End note.)

¶6. (C) Comment: Madrid's frustration with Qadhafi's advance team and the Leader's vascillating druthers echoe what we've heard from our French counterparts here regarding trip coordination for the Paris stop. The focus on securing a raft of bilateral agreements, regardless of content, is consistent with the GOL's desire for demonstrable symbols of Libya's re-integration into the international community. End comment.

CLASSIFIED BY: Chris Stevens, DCM, Embassy Tripoli, Department of State.
REASON: 1.4 (b), (d)

¶1. (C) Summary: Four companies won exploration and production rights for gas in the recently concluded fourth round of Libya's Exploration and Production Sharing Agreement (EPSA) mechanism. Winning bids featured low production sharing percentages for the international oil companies (IOC's), but in a departure from past rounds, only Shell offered a signing bonus as part of its winning bid. The National Oil Corporation (NOC) has publicly touted the results as being positive for Libya, but has privately conceded disappointment that more companies did not choose to bid. Opinions among IOC country managers in Libya differed as to the takeaway from this round. Some argued that the small number of bids signaled to the NOC dissatisfaction with increasingly stringent terms and operating conditions. Others maintained that the fact that terms for EPSA IV winners were consistent with previous rounds has reinforced the NOC's belief that -- despite grumbling -- IOC's remain willing to absorb thin production sharing margins and, in some cases, pay hefty signing bonuses to secure access and book reserves. End summary.

THE PLAYERS ...

¶2. (U) As forecast in ref A, Libya's National Oil Corporation (NOC) Organizing & Supervising Committee hosted an event December 9 at Tripoli's al-Mahari Hotel to announce results of recent bids for exploration and production sharing agreements (EPSA's) for onshore and offshore parcels. The event represented the fourth in a series of EPSA bid rounds (EPSA IV) held since August 2004; it was the first to focus on natural gas. According to the U.S. Energy Information Administration, Libya has some 52 trillion cubic feet of proven gas reserves, fourth among all African countries. A dozen parcels comprising 41 separate blocks of territory were offered for bidding and generated 19 offers by 13 companies (from 11 different countries) for 10 of the 12 parcels. 35 companies had been pre-selected to bid for the contracts; only 19 chose to do so.

¶3. (C) Two offshore parcels comprising eight blocks only received bids by single companies; under the terms of the EPSA, the bids were not opened and will be examined privately by the NOC's management committee to determine whether they will be accepted. ExxonMobil Country Manager Phil Goss (protect) judged that significant projected exploration costs for the offshore areas (up to $100 million per test well) and tricky technical requirements (water as deep as 3,000 meters) that few companies have the ability to manage deterred most from bidding on offshore blocks.

... THE ACTION

¶4. (U) Four potentially lucrative gas EPSA contracts were awarded to Gazprom, Sonatrach, Shell and Polskie Gornictwo Naftowe i Gazownictwo (Polski). Russia's Gazprom beat back a competitive offer from French company Gaz de France for three blocks (area 64) comprising 3,936 square kilometers in the southern Ghadames basin. Despite earlier statements to the press by a Gaz de France official that the company was "very keen" to establish a presence in Libya, Gazprom's willingness to take a significantly smaller percentage of eventual production carried the day. Gazprom's commitments per its bid are: 1,500 square kilometers 2-D seismic imagery; 250 square kilometers 3-D seismic imagery, 4 wells, no signing bonus and a 9.8% share of gas produced. Gaz de France offered more seismic imagery and wells, but asked for a production allocation of 16.8%. Other bidders on area 64 were Polski, Japan's Inpex, Lukoil, British Gas and the Pakistan Oil and Gas Company.

¶5. (U) Algerian parastatal Sonatrach, in assocation with Oil India, won rights to four blocks (areas 95 and 96) comprising 6,934 square kilometers in the Ghadames area. Sonatrach's commitments per its bid are: 2,000 square kilometers 2-D seismic imagery, 600 square kilometers 3-D seismic imagery, 5 wells, no signing bonus and a 13.0% share of gas produced. Germany's RWE submitted a strong bid that included 11 wells, but asked for a 19.0% production share. Other bidders were Gaz de France, Polski and British Gas.

¶6. (U) Anglo-Dutch Shell Company won two blocks (Area 89) comprising 1,790 square kilometers in the northern Sirte Basin. Shell's was the only bid on the day that carried a signing bonus, in the amount of $93 million, for the NOC. (Note: Next to production share, signing bonuses are the most heavily-weighted factor in a given bid. End note.) Shell's commitments per its bid are: 0 square kilometers of 2-D seismic imagery; 740 square kilometers of 3-D seismic imagery; 4 wells; USD 93 million signing bonus and a 15.0% share of gas produced. Other bidders were Sonatrach and PetroCanada.

¶7. (U) Polski won two blocks (area 113) in the southern Murzak Basin with a bid that committed it to the following: 0 square kilometers 2-D seismic imagery; 1,500 square kilometers 3-D seismic imagery; 4 wells, no signing bonus and an 11.8% share of gas produced. The other bidder was Gaz de France.

NOC PUBLICLY POSITIVE, PRIVATELY "A BIT DISAPPOINTED"

¶8. (C) Winning bid terms echoed those for the EPSA III round in December 2006 (ref B), with low production shares weighted heavily in the calculus for awarding points to each bid. Publicly, the NOC is touting the favorable terms of the four winners, with an emphasis on the high percentage of eventual production that will go to Libya. Privately, NOC Chairman Shukhri Ghanem told visiting Verenex Energy (Canada) CEO Jim McFarland (protect) December 11 that he was "a bit disappointed" that more companies had not chosen to bid. Ghanem subsequently told executives from Algeria's parastatal Sonatrach that the NOC, discouraged by the tempered ESPA IV bidding, will "take a break" from organizing further EPSA bid rounds. Ghanem's thinking, according to Sonatrach, is to allow time for production in parcels contracted in previous rounds to kick in. By allowing Libya's market to "settle" a bit, the NOC hopes to whet IOCs' appetite for further contracts.

MARGINS REMAIN TIGHT

¶9. (C) By contrast with earlier bid rounds, which featured hefty signing bonuses in addition to razor-thin production sharing margins of as little as 6.8%, no company save for Shell offered signing bonuses for EPSA IV gas contracts. BP Country Manager Tawfiq Hussein (protect) attributed that to the increased difficulty of realizing profitability under increasingly stringent EPSA terms, and to the fact that "the bloom has come off the rose a bit" with respect to the Libyan oil and gas market. Woodside Exploration Manager Sean Guest noted that low production sharing margins were critical in determining winning EPSA IV bids. Stringent terms, low production shares and lingering concerns about the difficulty of operating in Libya (visas and expat staffing remain significant problems) have given some pause. In addition, Libya's limited gas export infrastructure and the lack of clarity about whether EPSA IV winners will be able to exploit oil reserves discovered while searching for gas tempered enthusiasm. Marathon's Country Manager, Freddie Quintana (protect), told P/E Chief that the EPSA IV round was "a particularly difficult one" in which to bid because gas pricing is more complex than oil pricing and because Libya's gas export infrastructure remains limited.

MIXED SIGNALS

¶10. (C) Opinions differed at a meeting of IOC country managers December 12 as to the summary judgment of the EPSA IV round. Some argued that the relatively limited number of bids constituted a message to the NOC that increasingly stringent terms and difficult operating conditions would discourage bids. Others maintained that contract terms for bid winners were consistent with previous bid rounds, confirming the NOC's belief that IOC's remain willing to take thin production sharing margins and, in Shell's case, pay hefty bonuses to gain access.

¶11. (C) Comment: Media reports have interpreted the EPSA IV

round results as a sign of diminished interest by IOC's in Libya's hydrocarbon sector in general, and in the gas end of the business in particular; however, the four winners (Gazprom, Sonatrach, Shell and Polski) are all major companies and proven gas producers. Although the latest EPSA round failed to attract as many bids as the NOC would have liked, the fact that serious first and high-second tier companies ultimately bid and won potentially augurs well for efficient exploitation of Libya's gas reserves, although serious investment in gas export infrastructure is needed. The broader message from this round is that while IOC's are still keen to establish a presence and book reserves, they are increasingly reluctant to pay large signing bonuses up-front to do so. End comment.

Shell only major IOC; Polski, Gazprom, Sonatrach reflect EPSA III results and trend towards highest bid despite quality of operator (for EPSA rounds); GOL has recently concluded non-EPSA contracts with BP and Exxon Mobil (reftel), and extended contracts with Eni and PetroCanada to lend some balance to mix. ¶1. (S/NF) Summary: Interlocutors at the MFA and quasi-governmental Qadhafi Development Foundation acknowledged to DCM and P/E Chief the GOL's commitment to provide Embassy access to returned Guantanamo Bay detainees. Attributing previous delays to bureaucratic snags vice political opposition, they agreed to quickly facilitate a follow-up visit with ISN 194 to determine the nature and extent of injuries that came to to determine the nature and extent of injuries that came to light in a previous visit with him. They also agreed to arrange a first whereabouts and welfare visit with ISN 557. The tone was positive, and the desire to achieve positive movement before FM Shalgham's upcoming visit to Washington may help prompt quick action. End summary.

¶2. (S/NF) DCM and P/E Chief met separately with MFA Americas Desk Officer Ahmed Aoun and Qadhafi Development Foundation (QDF) Executive Director Dr. Yusuf Sawani on December 13 to deliver ref A points. Aoun took on board the point that consideration of further involuntary transfers and the GOL's request for access to all Libyan citizens remaining in Guantanamo Bay would be viewed in light of whether we are/are not able to secure timely access to Muhammad Abdallah Mansur al-Rimi (ISN 194) and Ben Qumu Abu Sufian Ibrahim Ahmed Hamouda (ISN 557). Underscoring that the MFA well understands the sensitivities involved, he attributed the GOL's failure to arrange a follow-up visit with ISN 194 per ref B to bureaucratic ineptitude rather than a deliberate unwillingness to facilitate access under the terms of the Watchdog Committee MOU.

¶3. (S/NF) Aoun conceded that delays in making good on previous commitments to arrange visits had created concerns about the transparency of the process and the GOL's credibility. He noted that MFA Secretary for the Americas (U/S-equivalent) Dr. Ahmed Fituri had contacted security officials regarding the U.S. request for a second visit with ISN 194 to clarify the nature and extent of his injuries (ref B). According to Aoun, the security officials who have physical custody of al-Rimi had no problem facilitating access. He implied, but did not state, that the QDF, which has been delegated authority by the MFA to coordinate Watchdog Committee activities, had not reached out to those security officials to arrange the visit. Stressing that the MFA "wants to help", he said he would follow up with the QDF to urge that visits with al-Rimi and Hamouda occur quickly.

¶4. (S/NF) In a subsequent meeting, the QDF's Dr. Sawani characterized access to the returned detainees as "a straightforward matter" and said he was "sure" visits with al-Rimi and Hamouda could be quickly arranged. He attributed previous delays in granting a follow-up visit with al-Rimi to feckless GOL employees, whom he claimed are so poorly paid that they have no incentive to carry out their instructions. (Note: Implying that they had actually been instructed to arrange a follow-up visit. End note.) Sawani noted that the QDF employee who liaises with security officials on detainee access is due back from leave in a few days, and said he would follow up with that individual immediately thereafter to ensure that meetings with al-Rimi and Hamouda were quickly arranged. Like Aoun, he understood that it would be better if the visits occurred before FM Shalgham's visit to Washington on January 3. (Note: The "Yom al-Arafa" and Eid al-Adha holidays fall on December 18-20, followed by the local weekend December 21-22, potentially complicating the requested visits).

¶5. (S/NF) Claiming there had been "no problem" scheduling the first visit with al-Rimi in August (ref C), he echoed Aoun's statement that subsequent delays in granting a follow-up visit were occasioned by bureaucratic indifference, not political intransigence. (Note: Visiting al-Rimi in mid-August was not as easy as Sawani claimed. As noted ref C, it required two and a half months of negotiation and ultimately, in Post's view, occurred because the GOL wanted to avoid having visiting NEA A/S David Welch raise the issue in his meetings with GOL officials. End note.)

¶6. (S/NF) Sawani also claimed that he passed copies of a written statement by al-Rimi describing the nature and extent of his arm and tooth injuries after the meeting detailed in ref D. P/E Chief noted that while Sawani had mentioned that al-Rimi would be willing to provide a signed, written statement to the effect that he sustained injury to his arm during his time in U.S. custody, we had not received anything. Expressing surprise,

Sawani said al-Rimi had indicated in his statement that his arm was injured during his U.S. detention, and that problems with his teeth pre-dated his capture. Sawani said he would forward a copy of the statement to the Embassy. Per agreement with Aoun, we called him after the meeting with Sawani to give him a brief readout. He indicated he would reach out separately to Sawani to urge him to move quickly on our request.

¶7. (S/NF) Comment: Both interlocutors said the right things, but we've been here before. As in August in the run-up to NEA A/S Welch's visit, the upcoming visit to Washington of FM Shalgham may help prompt quick action by the GOL. End comment.

(S/NF) In a follow-up meeting regarding ref A demarche, MFA Americas Desk Officer Ahmed Aoun registered the GOL's "strong protest" of the planned transfer to the U.K. of Libyan national Omar Deghayes. Stressing that the GOL had been a good partner in the war against terror and noting excellent cooperation in GRPO liaison channels, he said the GOL opposed "in principle and in practice" the transfer of any Libyan national to a third country. He noted that MFA Secretary for European Affairs Abdulati Obeidi had personally discussed the issue with NEA A/S David Welch, and that the GOL had formally requested that Deghayes be returned to Libya (ref C). DCM reiterated that the USG's ability to return Libyan detainees to Libya depended in part on the GOL's honoring of its agreement to facilitate timely access to detainees returned previously. Aoun took the point on board regarding requested meetings with returned detainees al-Rimi (ISN 194) and Hamouda (ISN 557), and agreed to follow up (further details septel).

CLASSIFIED BY: Chris Stevens, CDA, Embassy Tripoli, State.
REASON: 1.4 (b), (d)

¶1. (C) Summary: U.S. companies AECOM and the Tennessee Overseas Construction Company (TOCC) inked separate deals worth a total of $2.0 to $3.0 billion with Libya's Housing and Infrastructure Board. AECOM is to provide project management for all infrastructure development under the HIB's auspices, and has committed to an ambitious U.S.-based training program for HIB executives and engineers. TOCC's agreement obliges the company to undertake high-profile infrastructure construction and refurbishment projects in Tripoli and Benghazi; the company envisages bringing up to 130 American employees to Libya in the coming year to help manage its projects. The GOL apparently awarded the contracts to U.S. firms for at least partly political purposes, telling company representatives that the deals symbolize the fact that U.S.-Libyan ties have moved beyond strictly security (i.e., WMD and counter-terrorism) concerns. The agreements underscore that the GOL continues to directly link commercial contracts to political relationships. The potential return to Libya of large numbers of non-official Americans has positive potential for people-to-people and cultural exchange, but could further anger Islamic militants already troubled by U.S.-Libyan reengagement.

AECOM TO MANAGE ALL INFRASTRUCTURE PROJECTS

¶2. (U) After nearly two months of negotiations, Houston-based company AECOM signed a mega-contract December 13 with Libya's Housing and Infrastructure Board (HIB) to provide project management services. The contract guarantees two years of work for AECOM for $201 million, and provides for three additional option years for a potential total contract value of $574 million. AECOM is to lead the HIB's 250-member Program Management Department in its administering of all projects that fall within the GOL's $50 billion comprehensive housing and infrastructure development program, to include contracts with any third-country companies. The scope of the development program includes urban design and development, housing unit construction, road construction and upgrades, and development of wastewater management systems.

FOCUS ON TRAINING, HUMAN CAPACITY BUILDING

¶3. (C) Reflecting the GOL's continuing focus on capacity-building, the contract obliges AECOM to train over 100 HIB executives, engineers and technical specialists in project management at AECOM's Houston headquarters during the coming calendar year. Dr. Ibrahim Shukhri, head of HIB's Program Management Department, told P/E Chief December 16 that three senior HIB officials have already applied in Tunis for J-1 visas to undertake a year-long program management course in Houston. Additional tranches of HIB engineers -- currently envisaged as cohorts of 50, 25 and 25 -- are scheduled to undergo three month training courses in Houston beginning in March/April next year. Jim Thompson, President of AECOM subsidiary Turner Collie & Braden and AECOM's signatory on the contract, told P/E Chief December 13 that AECOM plans to send up to 30 American employees to Libya in the first half of 2008 to help manage a bevy of recently concluded housing and infrastructure contracts (reftel and previous).

TOCC WINS MEGA-CONTRACT FOR HOUSING, INFRASTRUCTURE PROJECTS

¶4. (U) Separately, the Tennessee Oveseas Construction Company (TOCC), in partnership with Washington Group International, signed a LD 1.5 billion (about $1.2 billion) agreement with the HIB December 16. (Note: It is believed that the agreement represents the largest single non-oil and gas deal for a U.S. company in Libya to date. End note.) The deal was concluded in a televised meeting of the HIB at which a total of over LD 6.85 billion (about $5.3 billion) worth of infrastructure contracts with companies from India, China, Korea, Turkey, Russia and Tunisia were signed. TOCC's agreement obliges the company to undertake high-profile infrastructure construction and refurbishment projects in Tripoli and Benghazi, to include housing units, roads and wastewater management. The contract represents a framework agreement; individual contracts for specific projects envisaged in the framework agreement are to be negotiated separately. The agreement guarantees $1.2 billion worth of work, but TOCC's local office director, Selim Edes, told P/E Chief that it could be expanded to include a rainwater collection project in Benghazi, which could bring the total contract value to between $2.5 and $3.0 billion.

LARGE NUMBERS OF AMERICANS TO RETURN TO LIBYA?

¶5. (C) TOCC Finance Director Jennifer Windus (protect), who signed for the company, told the Charge that the company plans to send 50 American employees, up to a third of whom may come with families (about 15-20 children), to Libya in the next five months. TOCC envisages a total American employee presence of 100 within the coming calendar year, with a possible 30 additional employees in Benghazi if the rainwater collection project comes to fruition. She noted that obtaining Libyan visas and securing appropriate housing could significantly slow the dispatch of those employees. TOCC's Tripoli office currently comprises 15 locally-engaged staff.

AECOM, TOCC BENEFIT FROM GOL'S DESIRE TO SEND POLITICAL SIGNAL

¶6. (C) Windus told the Charge that Dorda and other HIB officials had stressed that they wanted to award the contract to a U.S. company as "a symbol" of the fact that the bilateral relationship had moved beyond strictly security (i.e., WMD and counter-terrorism) concerns. The fact that TOCC was a U.S. company was "critical" from the HIB's perspective. Windus telephoned P/E Chief later in the day seeking an Embassy quote for the company's press release; she said Dorda had counseled her to solicit remarks emphasizing the political, vice commercial, significance of the contract. (Note: Post's anodyne language welcomed news of the contract as a sign of the continuing development of U.S.-Libyan ties. End note.) Dorda reportedly underscored that the Charge's attendance at the contract signing was "an important symbol of the new relationship".

¶7. (C) Separately, AECOM's Jim Thompson (protect) shared with P/E Chief December 13 his impression that being an American company had been "extremely important" to securing the contract. He conceded that unnamed European firms had submitted bids that were in some respects more competitive, but the HIB's desire to "buy American" -- in part for purposes of political symbolism -- carried the day for AECOM.

HIB SEEKS GREATER U.S. COMPANY PARTICIPATION IN LIBYA'S INFRASTRUCTURE RENAISSANCE

¶8. (C) In a meeting with the Charge before the signing ceremony, HIB Chairman Abuzaid Dorda sounded a similar refrain, saying more U.S. companies should "focus on the future" and bid for lucrative GOL development contracts. Noting that some U.S. and European companies remain "hesitant" about doing business in Libya because of past contretemps, he reiterated the GOL's desire for greater participation by U.S. companies in large-scale infrastructure and development projects. Stressing the American angle, he noted that AECOM enjoyed the HIB's "full confidence" and said the HIB would sign a contract worth "hundreds of millions of dollars" (NFI) with U.S. company KBR on December 30 for infrastructure projects in Benghazi.

PUBLIC COMMITMENT TO ANTI-CORRUPTION ...

¶9. (U) In a subsequent televised meeting of the HIB that resembled nothing so much as a game show, Dorda continued sounding the American theme. TOCC's was the first contract signed on-air; Dr. Shukhri told P/E Chief that the decision had been deliberately designed to "emphasize American participation in the Jamahurriya's development". AECOM's deal also featured prominently in Dorda's remarks, even though the deal was signed several days earlier and no one from the company was present. In a somewhat bizarre lecture clearly crafted to appeal to viewers at home, Dorda chided winners to take seriously the transparency and anti-corruption clauses of their respective contracts. Noting that he had personally blacklisted three foreign companies for unspecified alleged acts of corruption in recent months (NFI), he cautioned contract winners that the GOL has "our methods" for "knowing what you are up to".

¶10. (C) Companies accused of paying bribes or engaging in other forms of graft would be assumed to be guilty unless able to prove otherwise, would be forced to forfeit their contracts and pay penalties, and would be summarily ejected from the country and not allowed to bid on future GOL contracts. In a seeming contradiction with the "guilty until proven innocent" assumption, Dorda claimed there was "no excuse" for companies not to immediately report solicitations of bribes to the HIB. Once they had done so, it would "be the HIB's problem" to deal with.

... BUT OLD HABITS DIE HARD

¶11. (C) On the margins of the televised meeting, Brown & Root country director Richard Weeks (protect) told P/E Chief that the HIB delayed providing a copy of its putative Benghazi contract, and only did so on the morning of December 16. Seeking to inflate the figure for the total value of contracts concluded on the day, the HIB pressured KBR to sign the contract without having adequately reviewed it. Weeks said HIB officials took back the sole hard copy they'd been given when they determined that KBR would not sign without having their attorneys perform necessary due diligence. In a last-minute plea to Brown & Root, P/E Chief overheard an HIB official telling Weeks not to worry about the details of the contract because the contract itself was "meaningless". "What is important is that we trust you", the official said. Conceding that the remark confirmed the worst suspicions of some KBR executives about the GOL's approach to the sanctity of contracts, Weeks said he was wrestling with whether share it with his corporate management.

¶12. (C) Comment: While certainly good news for American business, AECOM and TOCC's wins underscore that the GOL, encouraged by its interactions with the French and Italians, continues to view commercial contracts as means by which to curry political favor. The new deals also represent a potentially significant evolution in the U.S. business presence in Libya. To date, U.S. companies -- with the notable exception of oil and gas concerns -- have largely focused on selling discrete products and services, a relatively straightforward exercise. Participation in performance-based contracts represents a markedly more complicated exercise in which the potential exposure to graft, delayed payment and breach of faith are greater. The potential return to Libya of non-official Americans in numbers not seen since the early 1970's also represents a mixed blessing. The people-to-people and cultural exchange potential are great and will likely be welcomed by many Libyans; however, increased numbers of Americans could constitute a further irritant to (and target for) Islamic militants already leery of U.S.-Libyan reengagement. End comment.

¶1. (SBU) The Government of Libya (GOL) does not maintain diplomatic relations with Israel. Local firms are required by national law to comply with the boycott, and would therefore not be able to sign the required U.S. certification without exposing themselves to civil and/or criminal penalties. Post accordingly requests a waiver of of the Arab League boycott certification.

¶2. (SBU) Post continues to raise the Arab League boycott issue in its meetings with the Ministry of Foreign Affairs and the Ministry of Economy and Trade. Most recently, in the fall, the Charge' pressed the MFA's Secretary for the Americas on the issue, noting that AL boycott language in Libyan contracts would undermine GOL efforts to attract U.S. business. The MFA official replied that the GOL and private entities are compelled by Libyan law stemming from the AL resolution to include language requiring compliance with the AL boycott

¶3. (SBU) The Ministry of Trade and Economy informed Post that the GOL does not enforce the boycott. While this may be GOL policy, as a practical matter boycott language continues to appear in contract language, and is sometimes enforced, sometimes not. As detailed ref C, for example, a U.S. company was presented with a draft contract by Libya's National Procurement Authority (NPA) containing language requiring the company to acknowledge that it observed a comprehensive boycott of Israel. The language was expansive, barring any business contact with or investment in Israel, and requiring the U.S. company to abide by all laws and decisions related to the AL's boycott action. Representatives of the U.S. company refused to sign the contract; the NPA subsequently removed the boycott-related language in its entirety. To reinforce the decision and avoid potential misunderstanding, the parties agreed on and signed an English-only iteration of the contract. In an additional example, two German firms were reportedly asked to sign letters attesting that they were in compliance with the anti-Israel boycott as a pre-condition for securing required GOL stamps on export documents from the Libyan People's Bureau in Berlin (Libyan Embassy-equivalent).

¶1. (S/NF) Summary: Libya's newly-constituted National Security Council continues to experience growing pains. A shortage of skilled staff, questions about its mandate, and friction between National Security Adviser Mutassim al-Qadhafi and some senior GOL officials have limited the NSC's organizational effectiveness, although al-Qadhafi remains "ambitious" and continues to work to expand his area of influence. End summary.

STAFFING CHALLENGES

¶2. (S/NF) Dr. Hind Siala, Director of Libya's National Security Council (strictly protect), told P/E Chief that the NSC, formed earlier this year (reftel), was experiencing growing pains. Noting that the NSC's staff had grown in size, she cited a continuing shortage of skilled, trained individuals as an impediment to greater organizational effectiveness. The NSC had to date pulled most of its staff from other GOL entities, including the External Security Organization, Internal Security Organization, General People's Committee for Foreign Cooperation and International Liaison (MFA) and Ministry of Justice. Siala noted that training and skill sets among staff drawn from other organizations varied considerably.

¶3. (S/NF) Other organizations were initially more willing to provide staff, she said, in part because they feared repercussions if they refused requests from a son of Leader Muammar al-Qadhafi; however, the NSC's policy of aggressively identifying and attempting to lure quality staff had begun to engender resentment and a sense that the NSC was pursuing its staffing needs at the expense of other GOL agencies. Siala mentioned that the MFA had successfully resisted an attempt in late November by the NSC to request that a well-regarded MFA employee be detailed to the NSC (NFI).

NATIONAL SECURITY TRAINING ACADEMY IN THE WORKS?

¶4. (S/NF) Noting a lack of basic professional skills, Siala specifically mentioned a shortage of employees who could take notes in meetings and draft memoranda of conversations. Describing National Security Adviser Mutassim al-Qadhafi as a "dynamic" individual given to holding many meetings, she complained that the dearth of qualified working-level employees meant that more senior staff members such as herself were often pressed into service as notetakers. She indicated that al-Qadhafi, responding to suggestions from his advisers, is moving to establish a National Security Training Academy that would train staff for the NSC and other GOL entities with national security and foreign policy equities. Pointing to the poor quality of Libya's educational system, she conceded that the NSC and other GOL entities were "suffering" from the fact that comparatively few Libyans were able to engage in critical thinking and writing of a sort that lent itself to more sophisticated exercises such as drafting analytical reports. (Note: We understand that the UK Embassy in Tripoli has discussed with her possible training opportunities in the UK for NSC terrorism analysts. End note.)

MUTASSIM'S AMBITION CREATES FRICTION WITH SOME

¶5. (S/NF) Siala noted that the NSC as an organization is still trying to define its role within the GOL. It remains "a bit unclear" whether the NSC is to serve as an interagency coordinating mechanism, or as a formulator and implementer of policy in its own right. Responding to a question about whether her principal's personality might have something to do with that, she conceded that Mutassim al-Qadhafi is "ambitious" and said he is still working to "create a space" in which to work cooperatively with other senior GOL officials. She implied that doubts among some senior members of the GOL's old guard about whether Mutassim was substantively qualified for his position, together with his increasingly obvious desire to grow his fiefdom, had created friction with unnamed others in the leadership. Indicating that the MFA and "some security organizations" had been particularly resistant to the NSC's attempts to expand its brief, she said the Ministry of Public Security (MinInterior-equivalent) and armed forces had been less recalcitrant.

¶6. (S/NF) According to Siala, the NSC's membership is as follows: PM al-Baghdadi al-Mahmoudi (chairman); National Security Adviser Mutassim al-Qadhafi; Foreign Minister Abdulrahman Shalgham; Minister of Public Security (MinInterior-equivalent) Rajib Saleh; Minister of Economy and Trade Essawi; Minister of Finance Muhammad Ali al-Hweij; and Chief of Defense Major General Abubakr Yunis Jafr. It is believed that Jafr encumbers the seat reserved for a "representative of the Temporary General People's Committee" per Law Number Four of 2007, which established the NSC.

¶7. (S/NF) Comment: Siala's suggestion that Mutassim's ambitions have caused friction with others in the leadership accords with the view of some local observers that Mutassim is an increasingly important player in the political firmament. Determining how he is perceived as a potential successor to his father, particularly by key members of his father's cohort of contemporaries, remains something of an open question, however. There are reports that putative heir apparent Saif al-Islam al-Qadhafi is out of favor with some segments of the leadership, due to his public participation in the messy denouement of the Bulgarian nurses' case, and his championing of economic reforms. End comment.

¶8. (U) Biographical note: Siala, who was trained as a pharmacist and previously served as Libya's ambassador to Valletta, serves as a combination of chief-of-staff and senior special assistant to Mutassim al-Qadhafi. She is married to a Libyan businessman who, somewhat unusually, is several years her junior. She is the niece of Deputy Foreign Minister Muhammad Siala.

¶1. (S/NF) Summary: Libya's newly-constituted National Security Council continues to experience growing pains. A shortage of skilled staff, questions about its mandate, and friction between National Security Adviser Mutassim al-Qadhafi and some senior GOL officials have limited the NSC's organizational effectiveness, although al-Qadhafi remains "ambitious" and continues to work to expand his area of influence. End summary.

STAFFING CHALLENGES

¶2. (S/NF) Dr. Hind Siala, Director of Libya's National Security Council (strictly protect), told P/E Chief that the NSC, formed earlier this year (reftel), was experiencing growing pains. Noting that the NSC's staff had grown in size, she cited a continuing shortage of skilled, trained individuals as an impediment to greater organizational effectiveness. The NSC had to date pulled most of its staff from other GOL entities, including the External Security Organization, Internal Security Organization, General People's Committee for Foreign Cooperation and International Liaison (MFA) and Ministry of Justice. Siala noted that training and skill sets among staff drawn from other organizations varied considerably.

¶3. (S/NF) Other organizations were initially more willing to provide staff, she said, in part because they feared repercussions if they refused requests from a son of Leader Muammar al-Qadhafi; however, the NSC's policy of aggressively identifying and attempting to lure quality staff had begun to engender resentment and a sense that the NSC was pursuing its staffing needs at the expense of other GOL agencies. Siala mentioned that the MFA had successfully resisted an attempt in late November by the NSC to request that a well-regarded MFA employee be detailed to the NSC (NFI).

NATIONAL SECURITY TRAINING ACADEMY IN THE WORKS?

¶4. (S/NF) Noting a lack of basic professional skills, Siala specifically mentioned a shortage of employees who could take notes in meetings and draft memoranda of conversations. Describing National Security Adviser Mutassim al-Qadhafi as a "dynamic" individual given to holding many meetings, she complained that the dearth of qualified working-level employees meant that more senior staff members such as herself were often pressed into service as notetakers. She indicated that al-Qadhafi, responding to suggestions from his advisers, is moving to establish a National Security Training Academy that would train staff for the NSC and other GOL entities with national security and foreign policy equities. Pointing to the poor quality of Libya's educational system, she conceded that the NSC and other GOL entities were "suffering" from the fact that comparatively few Libyans were able to engage in critical thinking and writing of a sort that lent itself to more sophisticated exercises such as drafting analytical reports. (Note: We understand that the UK Embassy in Tripoli has discussed with her possible training opportunities in the UK for NSC terrorism analysts. End note.)

MUTASSIM'S AMBITION CREATES FRICTION WITH SOME

¶5. (S/NF) Siala noted that the NSC as an organization is still trying to define its role within the GOL. It remains "a bit unclear" whether the NSC is to serve as an interagency coordinating mechanism, or as a formulator and implementer of policy in its own right. Responding to a question about whether her principal's personality might have something to do with that, she conceded that Mutassim al-Qadhafi is "ambitious" and said he is still working to "create a space" in which to work cooperatively with other senior GOL officials. She implied that doubts among some senior members of the GOL's old guard about whether Mutassim was substantively qualified for his position, together with his increasingly obvious desire to grow his fiefdom, had created friction with unnamed others in the leadership. Indicating that the MFA and "some security organizations" had been particularly resistant to the NSC's attempts to expand its brief, she said the Ministry of Public Security (MinInterior-equivalent) and armed forces had been less recalcitrant.

¶6. (S/NF) According to Siala, the NSC's membership is as follows: PM al-Baghdadi al-Mahmoudi (chairman); National Security Adviser Mutassim al-Qadhafi; Foreign Minister Abdulrahman Shalgham; Minister of Public Security (MinInterior-equivalent) Rajib Saleh; Minister of Economy and Trade Essawi; Minister of Finance Muhammad Ali al-Hweij; and Chief of Defense Major General Abubakr Yunis Jafr. It is believed that Jafr encumbers the seat reserved for a "representative of the Temporary General People's Committee" per Law Number Four of 2007, which established the NSC.

¶7. (S/NF) Comment: Siala's suggestion that Mutassim's ambitions have caused friction with others in the leadership accords with the view of some local observers that Mutassim is an increasingly important player in the political firmament. Determining how he is perceived as a potential successor to his father, particularly by key members of his father's cohort of contemporaries, remains something of an open question, however. There are reports that putative heir apparent Saif al-Islam al-Qadhafi is out of favor with some segments of the leadership, due to his public participation in the messy denouement of the Bulgarian nurses' case, and his championing of economic reforms. End comment.

SUBJECT: CORRECTED COPY - DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY TEAM FINALIZES HEU-LEU AGREEMENT LANGUAGE WITH GOL

¶1.   (SBU) Summary: A visiting team of experts from the Department of Energy (DOE) finalized language for a government-to-government agreement providing for the return of highly-enriched uranium to Russia under the rubric of the tri-lateral agreement (TSCC) announced December 19, 2003 with the U.S., U.K. and Libya. The agreement also envisages cooperation in improving physical security at Libya's experimental Tajoura reactor facility and other sites, to include hospitals with radiological equipment and material. The two sides initialed English-language versions of the agreement; the GOL and the Department's Language Services staff are currently working to finalize Arabic language that conforms with the agreed English iteration. It is expected that a senior USG official will sign the agreement in conjunction with putative travel to Libya early next year. End summary.

¶2. (SBU) A team from the DOE's Office of Global Threat Reduction traveled to Libya December 9-12 to meet with Libyan science community counterparts to finalize language for a Highly-Enriched Uranium/Low-Enriched Uranium (HEU-LEU) agreement. The delegation, consisting of Kelly Cummins (Delegation Head), Phil Robinson (Country Officer), Diana Clarke (General Counsel), Igor Bolshinsky (Technical Lead) and Stan Moses (Technical Staff) met with Dr. Abdelkarem Mgeg, Director of the Tajoura Renewable Energies and Water Desalination Research Center, to resolve issues and finalize language for a related to a government-to-government agreement between the U.S. and GOL. The agreement would facilitate the return to Russia of 26 fuel assemblies comprising approximately 4.6 kilograms of HEU material. (Note: Technical Lead Bolshinsky confirmed December 9 that all HE material was still physically present at the Tajoura facility. End note.) The agreement would complete the process begun in March 2004, when the GOL returned to Russia 15 kilograms of HEU material.

¶3. (SBU) It is envisaged that the material would be transferred to Russia by air circa late 2009. In addition to fuel return, the agreement includes language detailing cooperation on nuclear and radiological security enhancements at the Tajoura site and other facilities in Libya, to include four hospitals in Benghazi, Sabratha and Tripoli (two facilities). Implementing additional security measures as the Tajoura site could occur 12-24 months after the agreement is signed; radiological/security upgrades at the hospitals could be made within several months of signing.

¶4. (SBU) Discussion on day one of the talks, which took place at the Tajoura facility, focused on resolving issues associated with the agreement. GOL officials initially expressed some concern that the agreement included language regarding enhancement of physical protection measures; however, a closer reading and explanation by the DOE's experts convinced them that the language was anodyne. Consensus was also achieved on language concerning audit and inspection protocols. DOE delegation head Cummins and Director Mgeg initialed the draft agreement to signal consensus on the language.

¶5. (SBU) Day two focused on finalizing language for a Basic Ordering Agreement (BOA) contract between the Oak Ridge National Laboratory and the Tajoura facility. After minor changes to the scope of the work at the GOL's request, the two sides achieved consensus on final language.

¶6. (SBU) The GOL agreed to provide an Arabic language translation of the agreement and the BOA; however, given concerns about how quickly the GOL would honor that commitment, post understands that NEA/MAG has asked Language Services to prepare treaty-ready translations. The GOL stressed that the agreement would have to be approved by the relevant ministries before it could be signed. (Note: It may also have to be blessed by the General People's Congress. End note.) Libyan interlocutors were optimistic that the agreement could be finalized on their side in time for a visit by a senior State Department official in early 2008. Following the negotiations, the DOE team learned that Dr. Ali Gashut, the senior Libyan interlocutor on technical nuclear issues, had obtained a copy of the agreement and was working to obtain the requisite GOL

approvals.

¶7. (SBU) Comment: In the DOE team's judgment, the meetings were positive and cooperative, suggesting that the GOL wants to quickly finalize and implement the agreement. The GOL ultimately insisted on only minor changes to the original draft agreement. Despite the enthusiasm of the Tajoura facility scientists and the avowed interest of other senior GOL officials in signing the agreement, obtaining approval from the appropriate ministries may be time-consuming and difficult. The fact that the GOL clearly expects that the agreement will be signed in connection with a putative senior-level visit early next year may help expedite the Libyan interagency process. End comment.

REASON: 1.4 (b), (d)

¶1. (S/NF) During a meeting with Qhadafi Development Foundation Executive Director Dr. Yusuf Sawani (protect), Sawani described the trans-national terrorism threat (which he feels some GOL officials underestimate), the Libyan public's perception that U.S.-Libya bilateral ties are overly focused on security, the attendant risk that the GOL and USG will fail to capitalize on a window of opportunity to establish deeper cross-cultural understanding, and the economic and social failures of al-Qadhafi's political revolution. End summary.

TUAREG, TOUBOU GROUPS A POTENTIAL THREAT

¶2. (S/NF) DCM and P/E chief called on Qadhafi Development Foundation (QDF) Executive Director Sawani in mid-December to discuss the QDF's role in providing Embassy access to returned GTMO detainees (reported septel). Sawani took the opportunity to discuss counter-terrorism issues and the bilateral relationship more generally. Referencing recent attacks in Algiers, Sawani said most Libyans were "horrified and disgusted" by events such as those in Algiers, but the fact that such a small minority of Islamic fundamentalists could inflict such damage underscored the gravity of the threat. Sawani (who is not a security expert) expressed concern that al-Qaeda could seek to exploit the nationalist aspirations of Tuareg and Toubou ethnic minority groups in southern Libya to conduct operations inside Libya. The fact that at least a million sub-Saharan African guest workers were resident in Libya was "cause for concern"; the large number of Egyptian guest workers, some of whom were politically and religiously radical, was similarly troubling. (Note: Egyptian Embassy officials put the number of Egyptian workers at 700,000 to one million, depending on the season. End note.)

SOME GOL POLITICAL LEADERS UNDERESTIMATE FUNDAMENTALIST THREAT

¶3. (S/NF) The GOL lacked the capacity to deal with serious trans-national terrorist threats, said Sawani. Worse, some "senior political elements" -- he didn't specify who -- failed to realize how serious the threat really was. Those officials considered recent events to be Algerian or Tunisian problems, rather than symptoms of a broader regional threat dynamic. While Libya's security and intelligence services were "very serious" about blunting the ability of al-Qaeda in the Maghreb (AQIM) and the Libyan Islamic Fighting Group (LIFG) as potential threats to the stability of Qadhafi's regime, they were less keenly focused on the broader trans-national terrorist threat. (Note: He did not reference the November 3 announcement of the AQIM-LIFG merger. End note.) In Sawani's view, the overweaning focus on preservation of the regime potentially left the GOL exposed by ignoring the fact that the terrorist threat had evolved and become less local and more dangerous.

U.S.-LIBYA RELATIONSHIP NEEDS TO BE FORWARD-LOOKING ...

¶4. (S/NF) Noting opposition in some Congressional quarters to Libya's reintegration into the international community, Sawani said he did not expect "substantial" developments in U.S.-Libya bilateral ties until after the upcoming U.S. presidential elections. Libya is "not that important" in the grand scheme of U.S. foreign policy interests; GOL officials "need to be patient", although not all senior GOL leaders realized that. Referencing earlier comments on extremists, he lamented that development of bilateral ties was slow by comparison with the quickly mounting terrorist threat. It was important that the relationship not be seen as being hostage to the Lockerbie bombing and other past contretemps. The GOL "needs to feel confident" that bilateral relations were moving forward; Libya wanted a "strategic alliance" with the U.S.

... AND HAS BEEN TOO FOCUSED ON SECURITY

¶5. (S/NF) At the same time, it was important that the USG realize the danger for Qadhafi's regime of overly emphasizing the security dimension of the bilateral relationship. The initial premise for re-establishment of diplomatic ties - WMD counter-proliferation and counter-terrorism cooperation - had been logical, but it was "too narrow" to sustain the relationship over time and bred a strong negative reaction among Libyan intellectuals, certain members of the old guard, and the public at large. Cooperation in other avenues would help mitigate the perception of a monolithic security relationship, creating a healthier relationship and contributing to better security in the long run. Serious mistrust of U.S. motivations for reestablishment of ties with Libya remain; the U.S. needs to engage different strata of the Libyan elite and public; otherwise else prospects for sustained, long-term improved bilateral ties will remain dim.

VISAS HINDER LIBYAN STUDENTS' WILLINGNESS TO STUDY IN U.S.

¶6. (C) Sawani specifically mentioned student visas as an area in which the U.S. is missing an opportunity. Echoing comments we've heard from other GOL interlocutors, he said that the QDF alone offers some 3,000 scholarships for Libyan students to study abroad. The GPC for Higher Education gave 7,000 scholarships to Libyan students to study abroad in 2007; according to Under Secretary for Higher Education, the GOL's goal is to send 2,000 of those to the U.S. next year. Many would choose to study in the U.S., but the fact that they currently must travel to Tunis twice to obtain a U.S. visa is a disincentive, he said.

¶7. (C) Libyans also have difficulty meeting English language requirements and navigating U.S. university application processes and timelines. Libyan students without sufficient English skills frequently enroll in intensive language classes in the U.S. prior to matriculating in graduate courses; the Libyans would prefer conditional acceptance at universities to their current practice of attending a language school and subsequently matriculating at a university. In addition, the U.S. university admissions schedule impedes disbursement of GOL scholarships. Scholarships are typically disbursed in autumn and students - who typically have not even begun researching U.S. universities and their application processes - must rush to meet application deadlines in January. An additional constraint is that the maximum validity for F and J student visas is one entry. If students were to travel home at any time during their studies, they must reapply for a visa in Tunis.

EDUCATIONAL, CULTURAL EXCHANGES KEY

¶8. (C) Consequently, Sawani concluded, most Libyan students prefer to study in Europe. Sawani expressed frustration that greater progress had not been made in establishing an interim U.S. Embassy facility with normal visa functions, saying the focus on security and CT cooperation to the exclusion of other equally aspects of bilateral cooperation meant that opportunities for genuine cultural dialogue and exchange were missed. Mentioning his own experiences as a student in the U.K., he said the greatest investment the U.S. could make in furthering long-term ties would be to find a way to get more Libyan students to the U.S. to study.

RISING ANTI-AMERICAN SENTIMENT A REACTION TO U.S. POLICIES & FAILED REVOLUTION

¶9. (S/NF) Contrasting his own experience with multi-culturalism

and tolerance as a student in the U.K., he highlighted a growing sense of anti-American sentiment in the region. Libya had largely avoided the trend to date, but the continuing impact of Saudi Wahhabism, conservative satellite television programming, and radical Sudanese and Egyptian elements had begun to change that. Older Libyans still tended not to demonize the U.S., but there was a marked increase in anti-American sentiment among Libyan youth. Sawani ascribed that to U.S. policies, particularly the Iraq "occupation" and the public's perception of strong U.S. bias toward Israel vis-`-vis the Palestinians, and to the failure of al-Qadhafi's political revolution.

¶10. (S/NF) The GOL had "absolutely failed" to address the concerns (education, employment) of Libyan youth, fueling greater receptivity to anti-American and fundamentalist messages. He related a recent conversation in which his 16-year old son asked whether there would be elections after Leader Muammar Qadhafi departed from the political scene, or whether Saif al-Islam would inherit his father's mantle. In discussing the question, Sawani referenced the Leader's early achievements, particularly in establishing a Libya free from colonial vestiges. Dismissing those as "ancient history", Sawani's son asked what the Leader had achieved more recently, demonstrating in Sawani's judgment just how far traditional revolutionary authority had eroded in Libya.

LIBYA A "FAILED STATE" ECONOMICALLY AND SOCIALLY

¶11. (S/NF) Claiming that Qadhafi's revolution had succeeded in some political respects, particularly as a catalyst for anti-imperialism, Sawani characterized Libya as "a failed state" in the economic and social sense. The lack of proper housing, infrastructure, education and health care in a hydrocarbon rich state galled Libyans. Noting that he had recently spent a month's salary to take his ailing wife to Tunis for medical care, he said no Libyan who could afford to would subject his family to the Libyan health care system.

¶12. (S/NF) Nonetheless, old revolutionary ideas "die hard". High oil prices and a concomitant windfall of petro-dollars have created "false pride" on the part of the National Oil Corporation (NOC) and certain senior GOL leaders, Sawani said. Suggesting that oil wealth was impermanent, he noted that the recently staged fourth round of Exploration and Production Sharing Agreement bidding (ref B) had only garnered about half the number of bids expected by the NOC.

LIBYA "IN DANGER OF BEING LOST"

¶13. (S/NF) Citing Israel's successful lobby in Washington, he lamented the GOL's failure to establish a more robust, effective apparatus to promote U.S.-Libya relations. Saying that bilateral ties were at a critical juncture, he claimed establishing such a capability now would require time neither side has; U.S.-Libya relations accordingly required action at "the top level". (Comment: A convenient line of thinking that accords with the GOL's preference for dramatic, high-level gestures a la Sarkozy's visit in July, as opposed to a more deliberate, phased engagement. End comment.) Cautioning that Libya was "in danger of being lost", he claimed the U.S. would then have to install a monarchy in Libya, which he characterized as a "dangerous" alternative.

¶14. (S/NF) Comment: Sawani, who is well-connected and enjoys the confidence of his boss and putative heir-apparent Saif al-Islam al-Qadhafi, typically rushes through agenda points and is careful in his remarks. That he made time for an extensive tour d' horizon on sensitive subjects suggests that he may have been conveying a message on behalf of other, more senior figures conveying a message on behalf of other, more senior figures, perhaps in connection with Foreign Minister Shalgham's upcoming visit to Washington. While Sawani's access to information regarding the GOL's counter-terrorism operations is uncertain, his assertion that some senior GOL political leaders have underestimated the trans-national terrorist threat is troubling. We share his assessment that the relationship has in some respects focused on security and CT issues to the exclusion of other worthwhile areas of engagement. To be sure, a large part of the problem stems from the reluctance of Libyan elites to engage more broadly with the U.S., perhaps out of fear that the leadership will change its mind about the direction and pace of the bilateral relationship.

¶15. (S/NF) Comment (cont.): Sawani's comments on student visas reflect the prevailing perspective on difficulties Libyans encounter when contemplating study in the U.S. The biggest obstacle to increased numbers of Libyan student studying at U.S. universities is not obtaining visas, but the unwillingness of Libyan students to meet U.S. admissions requirements and the misguided belief that the USG can and should exempt them from those strictures. Dissatisfaction with U.S. admissions and student visas reflects the frustrations many Libyans feel more generally as they reintegrate with an international community in which standards obtain. Thirty-eight years of "Jamahurriya" thought, emphasizing decentralization and lack of accountability, have left many Libyans ill-equipped to participate in the broader world from which they have been isolated for so long. Some of the frustrations Sawani articulated regarding the bilateral relationship and student visas reflect the inevitable growing pains of a society and body politic struggling to come to grips with its place in the world.

Libya, about its work in AIDS awareness education, Embassy was invited to a World Aids Day held at the Tripoli General People's Congress Hall on December 2 that was jointly sponsored by UNDP and Watassimo. Aisha Qadhafi did not attend, but was idolized in a slide show that depicted her in halo'ed photographs attending committee meetings and giving speeches.

¶3. (C) The sparsely-attended event had about 50 "boy scouts" and 30 "girl guides" in the audience, along with a dozen public health officials and the family members of the children performing a skit as part of the program. In the lobby, head-scarf covered women from Watassimo handed out promotional materials for a Quran memorization contest sponsored by Aisha Qadhafi, along with some basic informational materials about AIDS. The General People's Congress Hall, one of the largest government structures in Tripoli, features a large auditorium that could hold several hundred people on both the main and upper level seating areas. The building is decorated with two large murals - one is an outline of all the Arabic-speaking countries painted in green with the caption "All Arab Countries are One." On the opposite wall is an outline of the African continent in black, with only the Libyan territory highlighted in green, along with the caption, "Africa isn't just an entity, it is a message of future civilization."

¶4. (C) After a blessing from an Imam and introduction by the head of the Libyan Infectious Diseases Center (LIDC), Secretary of the General People's Committee for Health Dr. Mohamed Abu-Ujaylah Rashed gave an address that broadly outlined the scope of AIDS in a global context, but also commented in his remarks that children in Benghazi were deliberately infected with the AIDs virus. He told the audience that there were 7023 cases of AIDS in Libya and 6707 were Libyan citizens.

¶5. (C) There was also a brief presentation by a man, currently under treatment for AIDS, who urged the crowd to accept those with the illness and also called for the government to create a special center to provide free treatment and support for all people with AIDs. The man, wearing very conservative Islamic dress including a white robe, crocheted white skullcap, and facial hair worn by devout religious clerics, conveyed a sense of repentance for past misdeeds in his remarks. The audience reaction to the remarks was polite and reflective.

¶6. (C) More than half of the program was a play enacted by young schoolgirls describing how viruses (using the example of avian influenza, not HIV) could attack the body. The play explained the role of good nutrition in heath, and also the function of red and white blood cells in the body's immune system. The schoolgirls representing white blood cells (the defender's of health) were dressed in copies of the white military uniform Colonel Qadhafi usually wears on Revolution Day, complete with gold-fringed epaulets just like the "Leader's" outfits. In keeping with the revolutionary mindset of the Jamahiriya (an Arabic word that translates as "the state of the masses"), the play included air raid sirens when the system was under attack by the virus, and the girls used toy rifles and handguns to attack back, accompanied by background sound effects simulating machine-gun fire.

¶7. (C) After the program, P/E Chief spoke with a doctor who lived in the U.S. for seven years and did post-graduate work in medicine at Tulane University. She now runs public health programs at the LIDC. Asked to confirm P/E Chief's understanding of the Health Secretary's remarks in Arabic, she said that yes, the children had been deliberately infected. Asked how she, as a health professional, knew the infections were deliberate, she said that the Libyan health authorities had conducted studies that proved the crime of the accused Bulgarians and Palestinian. She was not aware that the Libyan courts had rejected expert testimony from leading AIDS researchers from outside Libya. While earlier in the conversation, the doctor complained about Libya's abysmal state of public health, health education and service, when it came to the AIDS investigation, she insisted that Libyan doctors and equipment were world-class and capable of conducting a thorough investigation.

¶8. (C) Similarly, the head of the Tuberculosis prevention program for the General People's Committee of Health, a doctor who lived and studied in Budapest for seven years before who lived and studied in Budapest for seven years before returning to Libya also said he believed the Benghazi HIV infections were deliberate. When P/E Chief ran through a list of medical reports issued by internationally-recognized experts, including Libyan expatriate medical specialists, and offered other explanations for the outbreak, the doctor was not receptive to any citations of scientific studies.

¶9. (C) Last year P/E Chief had dinner in Benghazi with a working-class family with one son in medical school. Asked about the case and local Benghazi opinion, the future doctor said that "everyone" in Benghazi knew the infections were deliberate and that if the medics were released it was a sign that the government was corrupt and bowing to pressure from the West.

¶10. (C) In late November the charge had a conversation with a Libyan doctor now living outside Libya but who returns from time to time to provide consultative services to the government. The doctor gave many examples of the declining quality of the education available in Libya's medical schools, and cited the absence of quality control in the educational system. He then told the charge that he had been asked to write a report about AIDS and its treatment, with reference to the Benghazi problem. At first his interlocutors had been reluctant to provide him requested data, and remained vague as to whether the report was to be read by specialists or by laymen or someone in between. After persistent questioning the doctor finally ascertained that the report was to be prepared for Muammar Qadhafi. The doctor concluded that Qadhafi was intensely interested in this technical issue and was following the Benghazi case closely. The doctor made it clear to the charge that he did not believe the Bulgarian nurses were guilty of intentionally infecting the children but it was not clear how much of this conclusion was conveyed in the report he wrote.

¶11. (C) COMMENT: The disconnect between the public rhetoric of health policy officials and the often privately-acknowledged admittance that the HIV infection was not a deliberate criminal act by the medics reflects the deep threat felt by the authoritarian regime. There are a number of factors influencing the government's current stance that outsiders are to blame for the HIV infections in Libya. Religious, social and cultural stigmas make it very difficult to admit that behaviors or practices that contribute to the spread of HIV may exist in Libya. The government also, given Benghazi perceptions that it receives less than a fair share of state resources, has to manage public opinion. It is not willing to accept responsibility for the lack of basic hygiene, sanitation, equipment or adequately trained staff in state-run facilities. The government's image problems became even more tangled after its initial attempts to blame the outbreak on outsiders, (at one time claiming U.S. and Israeli intelligence services were behind a plot to kill Libyan children). After 8 years of blaming outsiders, now the government also faces heavy criticism from oppositionist forces, especially conservative Islamic groups, who decry the government falling under the influence of western forces. While some Libyan officials acknowledge privately and confidentially that they know the HIV outbreak was not a deliberate, criminal conspiracy they have not found a way to manage the situation in a way that protects the Libyan regime from damaging criticism. The cognitive dissonance on HIV awareness makes it extremely difficult to manage public opinion that prevents a quick solution in the Medics case.

SUBJECT: LIBYA: AISHA GADHAFI IN THE BLACK

REF: 06 TRIPOLI 198

CLASSIFIED BY: Elizabeth Fritschle, POL/ECON Counselor, U.S. Embassy Tripoli, State.
REASON: 1.4 (b), (d)

¶1. (C) SUMMARY. Despite claiming to be a charitable NGO that provides disaster assistance in sub-Saharan Africa and support to Libyan women while promoting traditional Islamic values, Dr. Aisha Muammar Al-Gadhafi's Wa'atassemo Charity Society is primarily an outlet for Gadhafi's oldest daughter to have her picture taken and pursue her own business interests (see reftel). Wa'atassemo's 12 employees appear to spend nearly all of their time organizing business conferences -- only some of which actually happen. Wa'atassemo sees itself as an intermediary between government and business and believes that by extracting concessions from foreign companies looking to do business in Libya it can further Aisha Gadhafi's unclear development agenda. END SUMMARY.

¶2. (C) Wa'atassemo Foundation Director of Events Abdulnasser Al-Najah and Public Relations Manager Mohammed Al-Hawari met with Poloff on February 6 to discuss Waatasemo's current projects. Over the last two years, Emboffs have made repeated requests to meet with Waatasemo to learn more about civil society and propose cooperative activities promoting MEPI objectives. Until now, Embassy has never been granted a meeting and only was able to learn about Waatassemo projects after the fact. According to promotional literature, Aisha Gadhafi created the Wa'atassemo Foundation in 2002 as a charitable non-government organization (NGO) promoting traditional Islamic values that would provide disaster assistance in sub-Saharan Africa and also assistance to marginalized social groups, particularly women and children, within Libya. The Foundation employs 12 "active" employees, which apparently includes only event planning and support staff. (An additional 30 "inactive" employees are also on the Wa'atassemo payroll.) Aisha Gadhafi maintains an office at the Wa'atassemo headquarters but leaves the day-to-day running to Executive Director Ahmad Kajman. Kajman is the only Wa'atassemo staff member with any access to Aisha. Embassy believes that with a shift to add business development activities to the agenda, the organization is now more open to talking with us to learn about potential commercial partners. Asked what the word, "Wa'atassemo" meant, our interlocutors did not know the origin of the name. Subsequent research turned up the phrase, "Wat'asimu bihablillahi jami'un, wa la tararraqu," reportedly a well-known Quran quotation that translates as, "And cling to the rope of Allah, and do not divide," admonishing all Muslims to stand together. While in the past Aisha was known to dress western-style and dye her hair blonde, since forming Wa'atassemo she has appeared in public in conservative Islamic-style long, black robes with her dark hair covered by a scarf; literally in the black.

¶3. (C) Asked about Wa'atassemo's current projects, Al-Najah mentioned four business conferences scheduled for 2007, including a banking and finance conference for foreign executives in March. Al-Najah said Wa'atassemo acts as an intermediary between the GOL and the business community -- facilitating visas, planning conferences, and hosting events. It does not do any projects of its own. Al-Najah said Wa'atassemo promotes social development in Libya by stressing to foreign companies their own social responsibility requirements. Al-Najah was unable to connect Wa'atassemo's conference planning with charitable work of any kind. Asked specifically about charitable work, he showed Poloff numerous pictures of Aisha Gadhafi receiving awards for sponsoring a Quran memorization contest for Muslim women. (NOTE: Al-Najah is a former RevCom member who speaks proudly of his 12 years working in the General People's Committee for Foreign Liaison and International Cooperation (MFA equivalent) Office of Protocol.)

¶4. (C) Both Al-Najah and Al-Hawari repeatedly mentioned that they could accomplish things in Libya for foreign business with the help of "Dr. Aisha" and her personal influence. Underscoring this point, Poloff ran into Al-Hawari on February 7 at the Libya Telecom and Technology headquarters. Al-Hawari said the Wa'atassemo office had a problem with its internet connection but that he insisted at first on fixing it "the right way" rather than by calling in his connections. However, after waiting for about three minutes, Al-Hawari's cell phone rang, he wrote down a name on a piece of paper, showed the paper to a receptionist, and smiled to Poloff as he was whisked into a back room, bypassing all the lines.

¶5. (C) COMMENT. Aisha last garnered international attention when she signed on to the legal consultancy supporting the defense of Saddam Hussein and she made remarks to the press denouncing the imprisonment and trial of Hussein (clearly, seeing a deposed dictator put on trial hits close to home for her). In addition to using Wa'atassemo to promote her public profile and personal interests, Aisha Gadhafi continues to use Wa'atassemo to pursue her own business adventures. Wa'atassemo's 2007 conference schedule -- and therefore, Aisha's interest -- runs the gamut from banking to transportation to telecommunications to, of course, petroleum. Al-Najah's comments illustrate the easiest way for a well-connected Gadhafi to make money in Libya -- wring it out of legitimate foreign businesses trying to operate here through "facilitation" fees. With Aisha and Wa'atassemo focused squarely on business ventures, while dabbling at charitable work, Libya still suffers from a lack of legitimate NGOs. END COMMENT.

¶6. (U) Bio Note: Aisha, married to a the son of a regime insider in 2006, recently gave birth to a son. Embassy was invited to send a representative to a celebration hosted by Safia Qadhafi at the Bab al-Azizia compound in Tripoli for wives of Ambassadors and prominent Libyan families. Guests at the party reported that the child was born in London, although the exact date was unknown.

SUBJECT: BEARISH: LIBYAN STOCK MARKET LUMBERING ALONG SLOWLY

¶1. (SBU) Last month Libyan authorities announced the launch of Libya's stock market (the Libyan Stock Exchange Market, or LSEM) on the occasion of the 30th anniversary of the establishment of the Jamahiriya (or "state of the masses") with the unveiling of Moammar al-Qadhafi's Green Book. This seemed an odd pairing, given that the cocktail of socialist economic admonitions found in the second volume of the Green Book ("The Economic Basis of the Third Universal Theory") are not obviously compatible with the form and function of stock markets. It was also yet another widely-hyped announcement for an entity which has been difficult to quantify since its purported formation in 2004, and subsequent "launching" announcements each year since. Adding to the confusion, conflicting official statements alternate the LSEM's headquarters location between Tripoli and Benghazi in different announcements.

different announcements.

"Like Starting a Stock Exchange on the Moon"

¶2. (SBU) In an effort to cut through the confusion, Econoff sat down on April 5 with a U.S. contractor who provides LSEM consulting support. This source, with twelve years of experience working as a consultant to numerous governments establishing their own stock markets, was just finishing his first visit to Libya. During his visit, he had delivered remarks at an Arab Stock Exchange conference in Benghazi, which he described as well attended and professionally organized.

¶3. (SBU) The LSEM intends to draw from regional models -- the stock markets in Egypt, Jordan and Morocco -- to develop its own set of procedures and regulations. Source described the LSEM's most pressing requirement as the selection and implementation of a computerized trading and settlement system, which will be issued as a tender to a select group of bidders in the coming months. There are currently no established rules and regulations for the LSEM, no set procedures for registering companies and no mechanism for issuing stocks. There are also no brokers or brokerage houses, and no companies are truly "listed" with the exchange (Note: Press reports and embassy contacts have indicated that a half-dozen companies were listed with the LSEM, but that seems to reflect planned, vice actual listings accessible to potential investors. End note). Reflecting on the challenges of starting a stock market from scratch in the Libyan operating environment, source commented that it was "like starting a stock exchange on the moon." Despite the daunting task, source noted that there was great enthusiasm on the part of the LSEM staff to set up an effective stock market that would compare favorably to others in the region.

How the LSEM Is Organized

¶4. (SBU) The LSEM currently falls under the auspices of the Secretary of the GPC for Economy, Trade and Investment, and is managed on a day-to-day basis by General Director Suleiman Salem al-Shahomy. It was formally established in Libyan law under General People's Committee Decree Number 34 of 2006. The LSEM currently occupies two facilities, one in Tripoli and the other in Benghazi. The fifteen employees at the Tripoli-based headquarters occupy a modern office located within the premises of the Tripoli International Fairgrounds. The Benghazi office employs about thirty people in brand-new office spaces, and the facilities in both cities conduct basic training on-site for their employees. Despite GOL announcements that the LSEM would be headquartered in Tripoli, Econoff's source surmised that the LSEM would ultimately be headquartered in Benghazi once fully operational. He estimated that it would take another full year until a limited launch of the LSEM, with two or three companies participating, was possible. The launch number might grow if Libyan authorities allow the LSEM to link-up with neighboring stock markets to generate cross-border trading and additional trading options.

¶5. (SBU) Post Comment: The LSEM launch is an integral part of the GOL's National Economic Strategy. It is closely linked with efforts to privatize state-owned enterprises (SOEs) and may become the preferred means by which to broaden the ownership base of hitherto government-owned companies. Saif al-Islam has announced that the government will create investment "portfolios" for Libyan citizens and some speculate that instead of giving people money, the government will give them shares of former SOEs. Comments made last month by the Secretary of the GPC for Economy, Trade and Investment revealed how the LSEM will attempt to bridge the socialist and free market inclinations of the state. He noted that, "the establishment of the stock exchange market is part of the general restructuring of the Libyan economy...and most importantly, broadening the base of public ownership." The LSEM therefore appears to be a mechanism open Libya to the outside world, privatize SOEs, and serve the social aim of redistributing wealth internally. How well it performs each of these roles will directly impact the other, and the GOL's opaque economic reform process will likely make for continued slow going at the LSEM.

¶1. (C) SUMMARY. In two recent public appearances -- a March 27 Al Jazeera interview and a March 31 speech to Tuareg tribal leaders in Agadez, Niger -- Libyan leader Muammar Qadhafi continued his long drift away from the Arab world and worked to portray himself as a distinctly African leader. Speaking just after his decision not to attend the Arab League summit in Riyadh, Qadhafi dismissed Arab leaders as "headed for extinction," declaimed divisions in the Muslim world between Sunni and Shia camps, and called for the resurrection of the tenth century Fatimid Caliphate in North Africa. While better-educated Libyans dismiss Qadhafi's ramblings, many Libyans take the "brother Leader's" calls for Muslim unity seriously and link Qadhafi's comments to sectarian violence in Iraq. Qadhafi's latest remarks should been seen as ongoing efforts to position himself as an African leader, while at the same time framing himself as a "pure" Muslim leader relentlessly criticizing other Arab governments. END SUMMARY.

QADHAFI LASHES OUT AGAINST ARABS AND CALLS FOR A NEW FATIMID STATE

¶2. (C) Qadhafi's recent public remarks -- a March 27 Al Jazeera interview and a March 31 speech to Tuareg tribal leaders in Agadez, Niger (commemorating the Prophet Muhammad's birthday) -- strongly criticized the Arab League for allowing the United States' to set its agenda and attempting to pit "Arabs against Persians." In addition, Qadhafi spoke out against the division of Muslims into Sunnis and Shiites as a "colonialist plot" to weaken Muslims' political power. Trying to set himself apart as a unifier, when other Muslim leaders focused on divisions, "the Caliphate has nothing to do with religion, and this is a worldly struggle for rule." At the same time, Qadhafi's comments served his continuing interest in trying to counter Saudi influence in Islamic affairs.

¶3. (C) The Agadez speech elaborated on Qadhafi's criticism of the "conspiracy of mobilizing Arabs against Persians" with a convoluted argument that African Muslims are really Shiites and that Africa, not Iran, is the true center of Shia power. Qadhafi claimed many Libyans have Shiite names (they do not) and celebrate Shia holidays, including Ashoura. (NOTE: Ashura is observed in Libya, but as a minor holiday focusing not, as in Iran on the martyrdom of Hussein, but rather on the Prophet Musa's parting of the Red Sea. Children wear costumes and carry effigees. Libyans with whom we have spoken are universally scornful of self-flagellation and other Shiite Ashura practices associated with the seventh century martyrdom of Hussein.) In addition, Qadhafi spoke nostalgically of the 260-year Fatimid reign in North Africa from the tenth to the thirteenth century, describing it as a halcyon period of African Muslim political unity. "The Shiites are North Africa. We will build the modern, second Fatimid state... on the condition that it be free of all the sectarian conflicts and the debate about the Imamate and religious rule" said Qadhafi.

QADHAFI'S CALLS FOR MUSLIM UNITY RESONATE WITH LIBYANS CONCERNED ABOUT IRAQ

¶4. (C) While it is difficult to find a chain of logic in any Qadhafi speech, and there are invariably inaccuracies or unique interpretations, there are always segments that strike a chord with his audience and the broader Libyan population. Though Qadhafi's remarks are easily dismissed in most parts of the Arab world and among most better-educated Libyans, his calls for Muslim and African unity strongly resonate among certain, less worldly segments of Libyan society. Describing the Al Jazeera interview, one Libyan (and LES mission employee) praised Qadhafi as a strong leader willing to stand up to imperialist powers and their Arab puppets. In contrast, an LES who spent much of his life outside Libya rolled his eyes and dismissed Qadhafi as a lunatic. A number of Libyans echoed Qadhafi's sentiment that Sunni-Shia divisions reduce the Muslim world's capacity to respond to foreign powers. However, we have also heard highly educated Libyans expressing visceral hatred for Shiism and recent efforts to project Iranian power into Iraq. Qadhafi's reminder that all Muslims share a single Qu'ran and should return to the text to find the true faith also falls on receptive ears.

¶5. (C) While most Libyans were confused by Qadhafi's comments that all African Arabs are really Shiites, none would criticize "the Leader" to Poloff, instead redirecting the conversation to a defense of Qadhafi's calls for Muslim unity. "Libyans did not know from Sunni and Shia before the U.S. killed Saddam Hussein," one bookstore owner told Poloff. While all Libyans are (by Libyan government definition) Sunni, Saddam's death and continuing sectarian turmoil in Iraq have created a new awareness in Libya about sectarian division. One taxi driver told Poloff that he had never met a Shiite before Iraqi refugees began to arrive in Libya following the 2003 U.S. invasion of Iraq.

IMAM MUSA AL-SADR CASE STILL AN OBSTACLE FOR QADHAFI TO OVERCOME

¶6. (C) Libyan thoughts, official and un-official, about Muslim unity are further complicated by the case of Imam Musa al-Sadr, a Lebanese Shia cleric who disappeared in 1978 after traveling from Lebanon to Libya to seek funding from Qadhafi. Sadr's disappearance continues to cast a cloud over Libyan-Lebanese relations that has only slightly dissipated over time. Lebanese Parliament Speaker Nabih Berri claimed publicly that the Libyan regime is responsible. The Lebanese Charge in Tripoli regularly bemoans being in the Libyan backwater with nothing to do since most Lebanese can not travel here unless they have Libyan sponsors using "wasta" to get exceptional visa issuances. U.S. government officials have inquired about the background and status of the case on numerous occasions and are given the standard response that Sadr departed Libya and disappeared in Italy. We understand that an Italian investigation of Sadr's disappearance was closed without any conclusive results. The Libyans also consider the Sadr issue "case closed" as long as the Lebanese or the Arab League don't put it on the agenda. The cold Libyan relationship warmed slightly during the summer 2006 war in Lebanon, when the Libyan public responded enthusiastically to Hizballah's "resistance" against Israel and the Government jumped on the bandwagon by trying to send humanitarian aid to the Lebanese people.

COMMENT: THE LATEST STEP IN A LONG DRIFT FROM THE MIDDLE EAST TO AFRICA

¶7. (C) Qadhafi's latest remarks should be seen in the context of his long drift away from the Arab world and ongoing efforts to position himself as an African leader. His speeches were riddled with anti-Saudi rhetoric, ranging from thinly-veiled criticism of state-sponsored extremism (Wahhabism) to a line that the two holiest places in Islam are actually Mecca and Jerusalem rather than Mecca and Medina. While anti-Saudi sentiment has long been central to Qadhafi's worldview, King Abdullah ibn Abdulaziz's recent successes brokering a Hamas-Fatah power-sharing agreement in Palestine and hosting a productive Arab League summit have clearly rankled. While King Abdullah -- Qadhafi's self-styled nemesis -- has seen his star rise, Qadhafi's own efforts to unite Africans under his leadership are struggling. Qadhafi has been unable to implement a Chad-Sudan ceasefire signed in Tripoli in February 2006; promises to unite Darfur rebels as a step towards a political settlement have stalled, and Qadhafi's "Cen-Sad" organization continues to play a distant second fiddle to the African Union as a coordination mechanism for African foreign policy.

¶8. (C) Qadhafi's seeming defense of Iran in the wake of Arab League attempts to retool the Iraqi constitution in favor of Iraqi Sunnis may have more to do with personal antipathy towards Arab leaders than any great support for Iran. Though GOL interlocutors frequently claim that the United States did not appropriately reward Libya for renouncing WMD and terrorism, and therefore Iran has no incentive to dismantle its own nuclear program, Qadhafi's latest ramblings are more contemptuous of the Arab League than supportive of Iran's nuclear ambitions. END COMMENT.

¶1. SUMMARY. (C) In late February 2007, Libyans started talking about a new law that prohibited women under the age of 40 traveling abroad unless escorted by their husband, father or brother, although there was conflicting information about the source of the "law" or the scope of implementation. After a couple weeks, the government clarified that it was a regulation, not a law. After another short time, there was an announcement that the regulation was retracted. As a case study of Libyan governance, the ban demonstrated the shifting character of power structures and the way that citizens adapt to ambiguities and change. It also revealed the level of misinformation and misunderstanding that prevails in Libya at any time. SUMMARY.

¶2. (C) In late February, Libyans started talking about a new law that prohibited women under the age of 40 traveling abroad unless escorted by their husband, father or brother. Emboffs starting collecting information from friends and colleagues, but there was no consistent pattern among interlocutors' experiences. Some women reported they traveled through airport immigration with no problems, while other women reported that they were turned away at airport immigration and told they could not leave under a "new law." Some people said there was a law, some people said there was a regulation, and some people said government officials were acting on their own authority to impose personal beliefs. March 10, the Jamahiriya News Agency released information that the Secretariat of the General People's Committee (GPC) reported in its website that its decision banning Libyan women under the age of 40 from traveling abroad unless they are escorted by a close relative was a regulatory measure. "This measure aims at drafting the necessary regulations to avoid some negativity accompanied unnecessary Libyan girls travel who fell victims of criminal networks abroad," the GPC said. According to the Libyan press, "the GPC explained that the new procedure wasn't an obstacle to the travel of Libyan women who, recognized from all over the world, were leaders in judicial, legal and political professions." In yet more twisted logic, the Libyan rationale continued, "it doesn't affect freedom existing in the legislations." "It is like the control of Libyan officials to travel abroad or foreign nationals to enter Libya," the GPC elaborated. It is true that all Libyan officials, male or female, must have written approval to travel abroad. Embassy cooperative programming has faced long delays or cancellations as working level officials wait to get written approval from the Foreign Minister-equivalent for their participation in bilateral export control, scientific engagement or other activities.

¶3. (C) P/E Chief sent out emails to a broad range of women asking for their experiences and got back only two brief responses, one from a woman who just returned from an uneventful trip overseas, and another from a friend who said she had been asked to show authorization papers from her husband when trying to depart Libya via Tripoli International Airport. One contact wouldn't even respond to an email soliciting information on whether or not the press clip might be accurate. She knew that all emails were monitored and so showed up unannounced, without even phoning for an appointment, to try and put the prohibition in context. She was apologetic in tone, saying, "you must understand, we can't control these things." She then tried to rationalize that since Saudi Arabia and other Muslim countries had these restrictions and even more stringent laws about women's conduct in place for a long time, therefore the Libyan law was a natural and appropriate progression. Her response to the "two wrongs don't make a right" comeback was that she agreed personally that the law was wrong, but in Libya, no one had the power to initiate any change. She said she would comply with the regulation, as she chose to wear hijab, because she believed that it made her safer and in closer compliance with Islam as she interpreted the religion.

¶4. (C) In context of the Jamahiriya or "state of the masses" governance in Libya, in theory this law could not have been introduced without the participation of all women through their basic people's congresses, general people's committees and the General People's Congress. Most Libyans, when asked about the unexpected law, admitted that direct democracy did not really exist in Libya and the law had not been proposed, debated, or legislated by the General People's Congress. One Libyan said, "you have to understand, if any woman goes to a basic people's committee meeting she gets a bad reputation; women are not supposed to play an active role here." This analysis was from a highly educated, U.S. passport holder who has lived in America for a number of years and now works for a western company in Libya. She said, "women here do the best they can within constraints, they don't have any choice except to accept what happens to them," Asked about the potential for civil society action, engagement in the political process, intercessions to influential policy makers, or advocacy through husbands, fathers and brothers, she said, "none of that will happen in Libya, but if outside countries forced Libya to change the law, women would be very grateful."

¶5. (C) Another contact took great pleasure in noting that Aisha Qadhafi, the "Leader's" daughter, traveled frequently outside Libya without a male family member when she was still single. A local lawyer said she heard of a group of Libyan business women traveling to a conference in Italy that were denied exit at passport control by Libyan officials. Asked on what authority they were denied permission to travel, the officials said they didn't have any specific citations, but they had "heard" it was no longer permissible for women to travel alone. As the rumor mill churned, there was endless speculation about why the regulation was enacted. Some people claimed that a prominent family's female relative had been assaulted at a Cairo nightclub, some claimed a group of Libyan women had engaged in "scandalous" behavior outside Libya that was embarassing to the regime and therefore more controls were put in place.

¶6. (C) As the prohibition continued to be a topic of local conversation, and the international press started printing stories, the origin and scope of the law/regulation became even more vague. Ahmed Fituri, the Secretary of American Affairs at the General People's Committee for Foreign Liaison and International Cooperation, when asked about the law said, "don't worry, this won't last, it will go away." Even senior Libyan government officials couldn't hold up the fig leaf of direct democracy, admitting that there was a disconnect somewhere and it would be fixed. Women who agreed that the "law" was wrong did not organize any bold actions to seek repeal. Rather than engaging directly to affect a change to the law, women used personal connections to avoid implementation. The word went out that the "law" was repealed, though the process was unclear.

¶7. (C) Embassy sponsored a reception at the end of March to celebrate International Women's Day and asked contacts what had happened to the "regulatory measure." It seems that a small group of women with legal practices or other professional positions had gathered in a local hotel conference room to plan how to lobby with senior Libyan officials through personal connections. They planned to use the international press to draw further attention to the disconnect between the Libyan theory of direct democracy and government practices. That information, conveyed directly to regime insiders through personal connections was enough to make the ban "go away," as Fituri predicted.

¶8. (C) COMMENT. Governance here truly is a Jamahiriya, or "state of the masses." It just depends on who among the masses has the ear of the leader (Qadhafi) or other key officials at any one time. As a case study, this example of governance revealed the level of misinformation and misunderstanding that prevails in Libya at anytime. It also demonstrates the shifting character of power structures and the way citizens adapt to ambiguities and change. People rely heavily on word-of-mouth for information; not even officials implementing the law or regulation seemed to have an authoritative source. At first, it was not even clear if the ban was a law or a regulation. Libyans are used to working the system, and women managed to find the right pressure points to achieve their objectives. As a start-up Embassy, our staff are also engaged in finding the right points of contact to implement our mission objectives. The level of misinformation and misunderstanding of issues presents another level of challenge as we pursue our infections in Libya. Libyan papers continue to print "public opinion" pieces that have no attributions but express outrage against the foreign medical staff who allegedly injected over 400 Libyan children in a Benghazi hospital with the HIV virus in 1998. The accused Palestinian and Bulgarians are currently waiting for a Supreme Court decision on the appeal of the guilty verdict and death sentence in their trial. The decision is due before May 17, although an exact date is not determined, according to the Bulgarian Embassy. This is the second time they have been sentenced to death. The Supreme court overturned a previous death sentence and remanded the case for retrial. The press articles consistently blame the Palestinian doctor and Bulgarian nurses, along with foreign intelligence services including the CIA and Mossad, for deliberating infecting the children with HIV.

¶3. (SBU) Although international legal experts have grave concerns about the court process and quality of evidence, the Libyan press continues to insist that their judicial system is sacrosanct. The articles also claim that the international community's concern over the case reflects racism because they claim, if the children were American or European, no one would have questioned the court decision. The following quote is typical of most articles: "The West wants this case to be about the five Bulgarian nurses and not the hundreds of children. All this happened since no one cares about Arab children. The world, with its human rights, charitable and political organizations, is reduced to silence only because these children and mothers are Libyans and not Scandinavians or North Americans."

¶4. (SBU) Particularly inflammatory was an article in al-Jamahiriya newspaper that published pictures of many Libyan children infected with the HIV virus with the following headline, "our children did not come from Mars, and their blood isn't sewage water. Anyone trying to question this trial is guilty as well. The crime of injecting Libyan children with AIDS is a crime against humanity and not just a case of Bulgarian nurses." Many of the articles claim that anyone who questions the court's guilty verdict must have played an integral role in the crime. Some typical quotes include:

"Any entity or any country trying to raise doubts about this case is not innocent of this crime;"
"Intelligence services and parties involved in this crime are those who push for questioning justice in the case of those victim children;"
"Those objecting to the case are suspect characters who are loyal to the intelligence services of those countries involved in the case;" and

"Anyone trying to question this case is an active player in the crime and bears responsibility."

The "public opinion" pieces also claim consistently that it would only be fair for the families of the victims to seek proper compensation for the crime; that the deliberate infections are a crime against humanity that require blood money.

¶5. (C) While the Libyan government gives assurances that is is working to find a resolution to the case, and some officials admit in private that they know that infections were not a deliberate, criminal act, there are no public signs of trying to educate the Libyan population or shift public opinion. In contrast, there seems to be an effort to maximize public outrage to create nationalist sentiment against "outside influences." The Libyan government will have to use some twisted explanation when a settlement is finally reached. There are many precedents for unusual logic in Libya. In April, Qadhafi gave public remarks that could be interpreted to say that Libya did not really pay the Lockerbie settlement for the Pan-Am 103 bombing, but instead U.S. companies paid for the Lockerbie settlement by purchasing Libyan oil. Similarly, the official Libyan stance is that the Operation El Dorado Canyon air strikes on Libya in 1986 were a U.S. failure and that Libya won against the "American aggression" by surviving the bombing raid.

¶6. (C) One sign that there might be a shift in the Libyan insistence that the medical personnel are guilty and that compensation must be paid can be found in a recent press statement from the group representing the infected Libyans statement from the group representing the infected Libyans. The statement of the Great Socialist People's Libyan Arab Jamahiriya Civil Society for the Care of the Infected Children organization was released via the internet and not through the local papers, so it would not have wide circulation in Libya. Therefore, the intended audience is the international community.

The statement says that the families of the Libyan victims value EU Commissioner for External Relations Ferrero's (sic) initiatives on behalf of the Benghazi children. It also expresses appreciation for the efforts by the German government as the current EU chair. It also noted that the UK, while acting as the EU chair, worked to set up the Benghazi International Support Fund and initiated a dialogue with the victim's families through the Qadhafi Development Foundation. It emphasizes its appreciation for "representatives of the international community that have shown all respect for the feelings of the families and understanding of what their children have suffered through this humanitarian tragedy and respect for the justice of their situation." Whereas most previous statements have focused strongly on compensation and retribution, this press release emphasizes appreciation for people who empathize with the infected children. The release is signed by Omar al-Kilani al-Mismari and Idris Hamad Lagha as "representatives of the families of the Libyan Child Victims of the AIDS Disaster."

¶7. (C) At the same time, the press statement calls attention to a scientific study issued in the U.S. It says, "the children's families appeal to the Arab and international scientific and legal community to take greater interest in the new scientific studies by specialists from the Biotechnology Center of South Carolina and from the American Calvin University which reveal more evidence about what happened in Benghazi Children's Hospital in 1998. Libyans are using the new study released in South Carolina to support their claim that the infections must have been deliberate. In contrast, world-renowned HIV experts dismiss the study as "scientific drivel", but unfortunately, the Libyans are claiming that since the study comes from the U.S. it must be authoritative proof of the medics' guilt. The Libyan Medical Board is particularly sensitive to criticism that the infections were spread by poor sanitation and medical practice. Since the South Carolina study concludes that it would be unusual for an infection to be spread by poor sanitation in only one hospital, the Libyans are using the study to exonerate themselves of accusations of poor sanitation across the board.

¶8. (C) COMMENT. We are not familiar with the "Biotechnology Center of South Carolina" or the "American Calvin University." If they exist and have issued such a study, it is unfortunate that the U.S. scientific community is being used by the Libyan medical establishment to refute independent studies by the world's leading HIV experts that the infections developed and spread through the patient population in a manner inconsistent with deliberate criminal intent, but similar to outbreaks in hospital populations in other countries such as Romania. That only makes it more difficult to hope for a ruling by the Libyan appeals courts that the case should be thrown out based on scientific evidence. It is widely anticipated that the Supreme Court will confirm the guilty verdict and death sentence sometime before May 17. Embassy expects that there will be another upsurge of Libyan press statements dramatizing the suffering of the Libyans with HIV and AIDs at that time. At the same time, the ongoing defamation cases against the medics brought by the security officials schedule for another hearing about May 6. It is widely anticipated that the medics will be found guilty of defaming Libyan security by claiming that they were tortured while in police custody. If, as expected, the guilty verdicts in the infection case are upheld by the Supreme Court then the Libyan Higher Judicial Council will consider the verdicts. The Higher Judicial Council includes Libyan "cabinet" officials as well as judicial officers and would be the mechanism to arrange some way for the medics to depart Libya.

END COMMENT.

¶1. (C) SUMMARY. A Libyan-organized conference on Darfur April 28-29 was a substantive success (Reftel), but the scheduling challenges posed by a last minute decision by the Leader to fly all delegates to Sirte to meet with him exemplify the capricious environment in which even Libya's most senior diplomats operate.
African Affairs Secretary Ali Treiki pulled out all stops, organizing the conference in Tripoli's most expensive venue, the Corinthia Hotel, and bedecking it with all the trappings (flags, signs, simultaneous translation in three languages etc.), but had to smile his way through an eight hour delay in start time (from 3 p.m. to 11 p.m.) in order to fly all conferees to Sirte and back, with a lengthy delay in Sirt waiting for the Leader. Once the conference actually started, most delegations expressed satisfaction with Libya's role as host, though the Sirte misadventure and ever-shifting schedule could make many think twice before attending another conference in Libya. END SUMMARY.

CONFERENCE START DELAYED TO ACCOMMODATE SIRT DIVERSION

¶2. (C) Treki informed early-arriving delegates, including UN Special Envoy Jan Eliasson and AU Representative Salim Ahmed Salim, on April 27 that Libyan leader Muammar Qadhafi had invited visiting delegations to Sirte the following day. Treki told delegates that buses would leave from the Corinthia Hotel for the airport at 1030. When buses showed up at 1115, Protocol had to scramble to find the approximately 100 delegates. Delegates left the hotel around 1145, arrived at Tripoli airport at 1215, and eventually boarded a chartered Libyan Airbus A-300 named "Qardabia." (Note: The airplane was named after an early 20th century battle with the Italians that was coincidentally being commemorated in Sirte that day and was the proximate reason for the Leader's absence from Tripoli. The delegates had time to reflect on this historical coincidence as the sat on the tarmac for another hour before finally arriving in Sirte around 1400. End Note.)

¶3. (C) In Sirte delegates were shown two reservoirs and a variety of pipes belonging to the Great Manmade River Project, before being fed a large lunch in a reservoir-side tent. After lunch delegates discovered that while the Great Man Made River has many pipes, none in the vicinity of the reservoir led to toilet facilities. They then endured an additional two hour wait until the Libyan Leader arrived and gave a twenty minute talk to the attendees.

QADHAFI LECTURES FOREIGN DELEGATIONS NOT TO OVEREMPHASIZE DARFUR

¶4. (C) Qadhafi stressed familiar themes during his 20 minute lecture to the delegates, claiming that there are more serious conflicts in the world than Darfur, and questioning the motives of the international community for drawing so much attention to it. African problems require African solutions, said the Libyan leader. Qadhafi cast scorn on the Darfur rebels as well as on UN peacekeeping troops, alluding to reports of their sexual misconduct in other countries. He concluded by thanking the delegates for their interest. UN Special Envoy Jan Eliasson presented a five-minute response on behalf of the international community in which he pointed out that the Darfur conflict threatens both regional and global security.

STRONG LEADERSHIP FROM DIPLOMAT TREKI KEEPS CONFERENCE ON TRACK

¶5. (C) Though the delegates were clearly annoyed and exhausted by the Sirte delay, once the conference finally began at 2300 in Tripoli most delegations expressed satisfaction at the professional caliber of the proceedings. (Comment: Had the conference started at 1500 as originally planned, they might actually have been impressed by the Libyans' ability to organize the event. Instead they were left with the mixed impression of professionals like Ali Treki trying to run a serious conference, even as the Libyan Leader undermined efforts by capriciously inserting himself into the event in as time-consuming a way as possible. End Comment.) A detailed discussion of conference proceedings is reported ref A.

LIBYAN PRESS: QADHAFI URGES RECALCITRANT LEADERS TO HELP AFRICA

¶6. (C) Libyan press did their best to spin the Sirt meeting as Qadhafi's valiant attempt to urge recalcitrant foreign leaders to do more to stop the violence in Darfur. Press accounts hailed Qadhafi's leadership in keeping foreign troops out of Africa and criticized efforts by the international community to deploy UN peacekeepers to Darfur. The Libyan state-run press agency "quoted" a significantly mangled text of the conference conclusions, deleting a carefully negotiated mention of the transition to a UN/AU hybrid operation and adding repeated references to the international community's appreciation for "brother Leader's" leadership of the Africa dossier.

¶1. (C) SUMMARY. All signs indicate the six foreign health workers accused of intentionally infecting over 400 Benghazi children with HIV/AIDS in 1999 will be convicted on May 27 of defaming two Libyan police officers they accused of torture (a defaming two Libyan police officers they accused of torture (a separate case from the main criminal case). The Bulgarian Embassy reports that since the Supreme Court has yet to schedule a first hearing of the medics' appeal to their December 19, 2006 conviction in the criminal case, a Supreme Court verdict is still at least seven weeks away. (Libyan officials had originally predicted a Supreme Court decision by March.) The Bulgarian Embassy is cautiously optimistic that the Supreme Court delay coincided with a high-level May 10 EU meeting aimed at finding a political way for the medics to return home. The prosecution prepared a case file for Supreme Court review recommending the higher court confirm the guilty verdict, raise the court-ordered compensation for the victims' families, and order a new trial in the secondary charges of money laundering and alcohol consumption. Once the Supreme Court sets a date to hear the appeal, it can confirm or overturn the verdict or order a new criminal trial heard directly by the Supreme Court. Inflammatory press coverage continues and rose to a new level on May 9 when the GOL circulated a diplomatic note to foreign missions claiming that a Mossad agent developed a romantic relationship with one of the nurses and paid her to infect the children. END SUMMARY.

DEFAMATION VERDICT DELAYED UNTIL MAY 27

¶2. (C) Dmitar Dmitrov, point man on the nurses case for the Bulgarian Embassy in Tripoli told Poloff that Bulgaria expects a guilty verdict in the defamation case on May 27. (NOTE: This case is separate from the main criminal case against the medics.) Since two Libyan police officers filed suit in the Souq al-Juma'a municipal court in Tripoli on February 11 alleging that the medics intentionally made false statements accusing the officers of torture, the court has held seven hearings in the defamation case. All hearings have taken place at the maximum security Ayn Zara prison. (NOTE: The prison houses almost exclusively political prisoners. END NOTE.) At the latest May 6 hearing, the municipal court judge announced the court would delay its verdict on the defamation charges until May 27.

¶3. (C) While Bulgaria believes the police officers are at least partially concerned about their reputation, financial motives also underlie the defamation case. In addition, state prosecutors have successfully used the defamation case to introduce new evidence into the ongoing criminal trial; specifically, prosecutors have introduced a "Biotechnology Center of South Carolina" study reported reftel as new evidence of the medics' guilt in the criminal case.

¶4. (C) The five Bulgarian medics and Palestinian physician attended the first five defamation hearings; however, the medics were not provided with interpretation and were not allowed to address the court. At one point, the plaintiff's attorney asked the medics if they had intentionally lied that their confessions were obtained under torture. Several medics attempted to respond, but the judge quickly cut them off. Though the medics' defense attorney Othman Bizanti believes Libyan law requires the defendants to be present during a civil trial for the verdict to be valid, the court did not object to the medics' decision not to attend the last two hearings.

SUPREME COURT RULING AT LEAST SEVEN WEEKS AWAY

¶5. (C) According to Dmitrov, the Supreme Court ruling in the criminal case is at least seven weeks away. According to Libyan law, the prosecution must prepare a dossier for the Supreme Court containing arguments and evidence from the criminal trial, including statements from the prosecution, victims' families, and defendants. Once the prosecution completes the dossier, the Supreme Court will fix a date for a first hearing approximately three weeks later. During the hearing, lawyers for the prosecution, victims' families, and defendants will give oral arguments summarizing their cases but will not be allowed to present new evidence or call witnesses. The Supreme Court will then adjourn for four weeks to review the case.

¶6. (C) The Supreme Court can then accept the prosecution's recommendation and uphold the conviction, grant the medics' appeal and throw out the case, or order a new criminal trial at the Supreme Court level if it has any doubts about the prosecution's position. If the Supreme Court orders a new criminal trial, the Supreme Court would hear all the evidence and witnesses again, likely delaying the verdict for months. The Supreme Court does not have the legal authority to remand the case to a lower court.

¶7. (C) Dmitrov told Poloff the prosecution finished its dossier on April 15. The dossier contains the prosecution's recommendations to confirm the guilty verdict in the criminal case, increase the compensation figures to the victims' families noted in the December 19 verdict, and order a new trial on the secondary charges of money laundering and alcohol consumption. Almost a month has passed since the prosecution forwarded its document to the Supreme Court without the Court scheduling a hearing. Bulgaria sees the Supreme Court's delay as a positive sign that the GOL is waiting to see the outcome of ongoing high-level EU diplomatic efforts.

SUPREME COURT COULD RAISE COURT-ORDERED COMPENSATION PAYMENTS

¶8. (C) There are still two possible mechanisms for the victims' families to receive compensation -- a court-ordered judgment or an out-of-court settlement directly with the medics. The first option would see the Supreme Court, assuming it confirms the guilty verdict, either affirm or raise the compensation figures spelled out in the December 19 ruling. (NOTE: In its recommendation to the Supreme Court, which has not been made public, the prosecution recommends the Supreme Court revise upwards. END NOTE.) An out-of-court settlement between the defendants and the victims' families is also still possible. According to defense lawyer Othman Bizanti, Libyan criminal law allows for a "blood money" payment to reduce the medics' sentence from death to life in prison. The defendants' lawyer believes the law does not/not allow the medics to go free in exchange for blood money.

¶9. (C) According to Dmitrov, the criminal court's December 19 verdict specified compensation figures for 348 families, ranging from 350,000 LD to almost 1 million LD. Dmitrov estimates the total cost of the December 19 compensation package at 104 million LD -- a "reasonable figure" for Bulgaria and the EU to manage (i.e. via the Benghazi International Fund). While victims' families have at various points agreed to abide by court decisions on compensation, most families continue to campaign publicly for a larger settlement. They frequently cite the $10 million phased settlement to Lockerbie victims' families, although local press does not circulate information that the final tranche of the settlement was not paid when Libya was not removed from the State Sponsors of Terrorism List by the specified date.

BULGARIA UPBEAT ON EU DIPLOMATIC EFFORTS

¶10. (C) Bulgaria continues to hope for sustained, high-level EU pressure throughout the Supreme Court process. Dmitrov noted cautious optimism that the Supreme Court's refusal to set a date for its first hearing coincided with high-level talks sponsored by the EU Commission for External Relations on May 10. While the Bulgarian Embassy in Tripoli had no information about the specifics of the EU-led discussions, Bulgaria remains hopeful EU diplomatic efforts will find a political solution independent of the Supreme Court procedure. Nevertheless, Dmitrov noted the Supreme Court procedure. Nevertheless, Dmitrov noted constant GOL indignation over allegations its judiciary is not fully independent, therefore suggesting the Supreme Court will likely proceed with a hearing irrespective of European progress on the political front. In addition, Dmitrov noted the EU resident representative in Tunis and the UK Ambassador in Tripoli (acting on behalf of the UK's EU Presidency) visited the medics in prison on May 6 in a quiet show of support. (NOTE: The UK Ambassador in Tripoli also attended the May 10 Brussels meeting. END NOTE.)

INFLAMMATORY PRESS COVERAGE GAINS NEW LEGITIMACY

¶11. (C) As reported reftel, inflammatory press coverage of the medics trial continues, linking the case with a foreign intelligence plot against Libya and threatening that anyone who questions the integrity of the Libyan judicial process shares the medics' guilt. Widely circulated conspiracy theories gained new legitimacy on May 9 when the GOL distributed a particularly vitriolic article to foreign Embassies under cover of a diplomatic note. The article, reportedly from the "Al Madar" weekly newspaper, alleges that Bulgarian intelligence services and Mossad collaborated to seduce one of the medics in an unnamed Mediterranean capital "not far from Libya." The article says that a Mossad agent developed a romantic relationship with the medic and paid her to infect the Benghazi children.

¶12. (C) According to the dipnote, "Al Madar" is a weekly Iraqi newspaper operating under British license but distributed in Syria. Ali Al Jafal, a "Shiite Iraqi," is listed at the newspaper's editor, while Syrian journalist Moeen Ibrahim is the managing editor. The dipnote also mentions two other names: "Mohamed al Miah, Shiite, he was formerly the Editorial Manager of the Iraqi Revolution Newspaper during Saddam Hussein era, and Abdul Mohsin Attiah, an Iraqi Journalist, Shiite." The note also states that the newspaper is "supportive to the Iraqi resistance."

BULGARIAN EMBASSY STRATEGY FOR DIPLOMATIC ENGAGEMENT

¶13. (C) Dmitrov advised that any visible U.S. role in the last weeks of the defamation case, including attendance at the May 27 verdict, would only allow the GOL to spin U.S. presence to bolster the trial's legitimacy. The Bulgarian Embassy expects the GOL might bus the diplomatic corps to the Supreme Court verdict as it did with the December 19 verdict announcement. Bulgaria said that the EU Ambassadors were supporting its efforts and noted UK Ambassador's May 6 visit official prison visit to the medics. Dmitrov asked for the U.S. to continue raising the medics case as part of its bilateral engagements with Libya.

infection rate, including methods of prevention, treatment, and increasing education and awareness about the disease. While the UK-based moderators aimed to discuss a national plan of action, the session was highly unstructured and served to give participants a venue to voice any and all thoughts relating to HIV/AIDS, including views on the Bulgarian medics court case.

Intravenous Drug Use Identified As Primary Risk Factor Among Libyans

¶3. The more technical conference session, including a presentation from Al-Fateh University on the epidemiology of the HIV infection in Libya, was not as widely attended, with roughly 25 Libyans in the audience. The Faculty of Medicine of Tripoli's Al-Fateh University presented research conducted on 360 HIV patients receiving out-patient care at NCIDCP. Intravenous drug usage was found to be the primary risk factor in contracting HIV in Libya. Of the patients studied, 87 percent were males from 21-40 years of age. The study found that 89 percent of the 360 patients were tobacco smokers, 52 percent hashish smokers, and 45 percent of patients reported alcoholism. The research group concluded that social work is essential to HIV/AIDS patient care and should be implemented in Libyan hospitals.

¶5. COMMENT. Aside from presentations on HIV/AIDS, the conference put on sessions related to practices of hygiene and sterilization in hospitals, tuberculosis, hepatitis, and avian influenza. The conference included a modest exhibition of medical equipment and a side workshop on human infectious disease surveillance put on by visiting Trilateral Steering and Cooperation Committee's Bio SubCommittee members (US, UK, and Libya). While conference proceedings were not highly-technical or well-attended outside of the Libyan health community, it was a professional first attempt at openly addressing issues of public health. END COMMENT.

SUBJECT: QADHAFI HOSTS SARKOZY FOLLOWING DEPARTURE OF BULGARIAN NURSES

¶1. (SBU) SUMMARY. Just one day after six foreign health workers accused of intentionally spreading HIV left Libya for Bulgaria, French President Nicholas Sarkozy arrived in Tripoli on July 25 for wide-ranging discussions with Libyan leader Muammar Qadhafi. Sarkozy and Qadhafi reportedly discussed construction of a nuclear water desalination plant, as well as enhanced cooperation in immigration, border security, health care, and defense procurement. Unconfirmed press reports claim the two leaders also broached the subject of Darfur. END SUMMARY.

LIBYA-FRANCE MEMORANDUM ON CIVILIAN NUCLEAR POWER

¶2. (U) President Sarkozy arrived the day after six foreign medics accused of infecting over 400 Libyan children with HIV departed the country in a French jet accompanied by Mrs. Sarkozy, who reporteldy brokered their release. According to press accounts, Sarkozy and Qadhafi signed an MOU concerning the peaceful uses of nuclear power, committing France to finance construction of a long sought-after nuclear water desalination construction of a long sought after nuclear water desalination plant in Libya. (NOTE: Senior GOL officials have long lobbied for U.S. financing for a similar project, arguing such a "tangible reward" is necessary to convince the Libyan people of the utility of Libya's renouncing its WMD program. Diplomatic sources in Tripoli say that the Libyans have approached many governments, including France, Russia, China, and South Korea, with requests for both a nuclear desalination plant and a nuclear medicine center. END NOTE.)

¶3. (U) In addition, the two reportedly discussed cooperation to limit the number of illegal migrants across the Mediterranean, including a head of state conference to be held in early 2008. Sarkozy and Qadhafi also discussed French assistance to Libya's health sector, echoing promises contained in a July 23 memorandum (signed by EC Commissioner for External Relations Benita Ferrero-Waldner) that the EU would upgrade a Benghazi hospital to a regional center of excellence.

¶4. (SBU) Libyan press also reported that Sarkozy and Qadhafi discussed Darfur, just days after Sarkozy reportedly dispatched FM Kouchner to New York to lobby for quicker UNSC action on peacekeeping deployment.

QADHAFI HOLDS MEETING AGAINST BACKDROP OF U.S.-DAMAGED TRIPOLI PALACE

¶5. (SBU) Qadhafi -- accompanied by Prime Minister Al-Mahmoudi, Foreign Minister Shalgham, U/S for European Affairs Obeidi, and U/S for African Affairs Treiki -- met for several hours with Sarkozy and his delegation (which included FM Kouchner and diplomatic adviser Levitte, but not Mrs. Sarkozy) at Qadhafi's Bab Azziziya compound in Tripoli. (NOTE: Part of the compound was damaged by U.S. fighter planes during the April 1986 Operation El Dorado Canyon bombing campaign, and the GOL has kept it in its damaged state and erected a statue in front of it displaying a fist crushing a US fighter plane. Libyan media -- and Qadhafi himself -- refer to Operation El Dorado Canyon as "the failed U.S.-Atlantic aggression on the Great Jamahiriyah." END NOTE.) The GOL bussed foreign ambassadors to the compound to meet Qadhafi and Sarkozy and join the state dinner, which was held outside in front of the damaged building. Local papers gave front-page coverage to the Sarkozy visit, including one with the headline: "The Brother Leader Welcomes President Nicolas Sarkozy in front of the House that Remained Standing in the Face of the Failed American-NATO Enmity" (referring to the 1986 bombings of Tripoli). ¶1. (S) Summary: According to French diplomats, a civilian nuclear deal concluded between Libya and France during President Sarkozy's visit to Tripoli constitutes only a "very general" framework for future cooperation, with no clear financial commitment from the French side and little expectation from commitment from the French side and little expectation from either the French or Libyan side that it will be completed soon. President Nicholas Sarkozy is sensitive to and fully engaged on non-proliferation concerns surrounding a nuclear desalinization project discussed within the framework of the MOU. Libyan leader Muammar Qadhafi focused on plans for a 2008 "Mediterranean Union" head of state conference during two private meetings with Sarkozy, and only briefly raised the case of the Bulgarian medics. High-level Libya-France consultations on Darfur will be reported septel. End summary.

CIVILIAN NUCLEAR MOU: A "VERY GENERAL" FRAMEWORK

¶2. (C) French PolCouns Pierre-Antoine Molina described a civilian nuclear MOU August 1, signed by FMs Kouchner and Shalgham July 25, as only a "very general" framework for future cooperation on civilian nuclear power programs. He stressed that the MOU is in line with previous French policies and emphasized that the impetus for the agreement came directly from President Sarkozy's office, with only marginal involvement by the French MFA. MFA Americas Desk Office Director Muhammad Matari echoed Molina's characterization in a meeting with Pol/Econ Chief August 1, saying the deal was "not very detailed" and provided only a "general roadmap" for cooperation on nuclear programs, to include a nuclear-fueled water desalinization plant.

¶3. (S) Molina described Sarkozy as actively engaged on non-proliferation concerns and recounted steps the French President took to ensure any French involvement in a nuclear-powered water desalinization plant could not be used to help reconstitute Libya's WMD program. Molina said no dual-use technology was under discussion and that the reactor France envisions powering the desalinization plant would include safeguards that prevent it from being reconfigured to produce plutonium. In addition, Sarkozy reportedly insisted on and received assurances that the reactor could be shut down remotely from France.

¶4. (S) Contrary to Libyan press reporting, Molina said the July 25 MOU does not/not commit France to fund construction of the nuclear desalinization facility. Details of France's financial commitment will be resolved during upcoming negotiations involving (on the French side) the MFA, energy officials, and the Areva company, the majority of which is French-owned. The French team does not yet know who will negotiate modalities on behalf of the GOL, although the MFA's Muhammad Matari said it would be MFA Secretary for European Affairs Abdulati Obeidi. The GOL expressed interest in completing the facility and initiating operations by 2009, but France views this timeline as unrealistic. (Note: 2009 will be the 40th anniversary of the 1969 revolution that brought Qadhafi to power. A slew of high profile infrastructure projects, including new power plants and a major overhaul of the Tripoli International Airport, are underway to help augment the visible benefits of the revolution. End note.) Privately, some GOL officials also acknowledge that completion by 2009 is overly ambitious. Matari conceded to Pol/Econ Chief that "no one realistically expects this to move very quickly." He noted that the deal is "a very complicated subject" that requires "much study" by both sides, and added that the GOL is aware that there are serious European sensitivities involved that could limit France's ability to deliver on the project.

¶5. (C) Molina acknowledged European concerns, chiefly German, about the nuclear agreement, but noted that France's understanding is that Siemens, a 28% stakeholder in Areva, does not have the authority to stop the investment from moving forward. He dismissed publicly-reported calls by German parliamentarians for Siemens to move to block the deal as "grandstanding," but conceded that the nuclear MOU had become a political issue for France and Germany that goes beyond the mechanics of the July 25 Libya-France deal.

QADHAFI, SARKOZY DISCUSS MEDITERRANEAN UNION, IGNORE BULGARIAN MEDICS

¶6. (C) According to Molina, Qadhafi and Sarkozy spent much of their time together discussing Sarkozy's plans to convene a Mediterranean head of state conference in spring 2008 to discuss migration and water management concerns (Reftel contains further details on Sarkozy's visit). The French delegation described Qadhafi as very interested in the Mediterranean Union proposal, but said he voiced serious reservations about inviting Israel's head of state to participate in the proposed conference. Beyond an opening line expressing "anger" at Bulgaria's decision to immediately pardon the six medics upon their return to Sofia July 24, Qadhafi did not discuss the case with Sarkozy. Claiming that the GOL considers the case of the medics to be closed, the MFA's Matari said the GOL tried to focus "exclusively on the positive" during Sarkozy's visit.

¶7. (C) Qadhafi and Sarkozy held two, separate meetings on the night of July 25-26 -- one at Qadhafi's Bab Azizia compound in Tripoli attended by Tripoli's diplomatic corps and a second, more private meeting the same evening at the Corinthia Hotel. According to French diplomats, Sarkozy decided on July 20 to visit Libya. Initially, the Libyans planned to host the visit in Sirt, Qadhafi's desert home about 400km east of Tripoli. The GOL changed the venue four times in five days between Tripoli and Sirt, greatly frustrating Sarkozy's 20-person security advance team.

¶8. (C) Comment: GOL interlocutors at all levels have routinely stressed that "average Libyans" need to see tangible rewards from the U.S. and Europe in response to Libya's 2003 decision to renounce WMD and terrorism. Most have focused on two infrastructure projects -- a nuclear-powered water desalinization plant and a regional nuclear medicine center. Last week's Libya-France agreement to move forward with the water desalinization project will allow the GOL to boast to its domestic audience that it has finally secured one of these long-sought "tangible rewards." Apart from a well-timed public relations coup, though, it remains unclear how much tangible benefit the GOL will actually garner from the agreement. End comment.

¶1. (C) SUMMARY. A lavishly-funded treatment facility constructed exclusively for the 426 infected Benghazi children remains off limits to hundreds of other Libyans in Benghazi currently living with HIV/AIDS, according to a team of American HIV/AIDS experts who visited Libya in mid-September. Though Benghazi doctors are capable of providing a high level of medical care, years of GOL propaganda and an over reliance on treatment abroad have created a lack of public confidence in Libya's ability to treat HIV/AIDS cases at home. Most of the 426 infected Benghazi children have traveled abroad for European government-subsidized medical care, many in the months before the medics' departure as a way to "prevent [the families] from raising their voices." Benghazi professionals criticized Europe's handling of medical assistance, claiming they have offered nothing concrete to Libya's healthcare system and are not willing to work cooperatively with their Libyan counterparts. Most Benghazi doctors still stand by the belief that the six medics are guilty of intentionally infecting 426 children with HIV/AIDS in 1999. END SUMMARY.

¶2. (U) A team from the Baylor College of Medicine Pediatric AIDS Program -- Dr. Mark Kline, Dr. Mike Mizwa, Dr. Gordon Schultze, and NP Nancy Calles -- visited Tripoli and Benghazi on September 16-18 as part of Baylor's ongoing implementation of an MOU concluded with the GOL in 2006. Kline, the U.S. representative on the Benghazi International Fund, and Calles briefed DCM and Poloff on their visit on September 18.

GOOD TREATMENT -- IF YOU CAN GET IT

¶3. (C) According to Kline, a lavishly funded facility designed to provide state-of-the-art care to the 426 Benghazi children, the Benghazi Children's Center (BCC), operates in parallel to the city's health system. The facility houses diagnostic equipment on par with that available in better European hospitals. Medical staff, drawn largely from the larger Benghazi Medical Center or al-Fatah Children's Hospital, receive large GOL stipends to do weekly rounds at the BCC. The BCC's staff include specialists in dentistry and optometry -- disciplines unrelated to the HIV/AIDS cases -- because "other medical facilities have made it clear they won't take the Benghazi children," forcing them to seek all medical care in this high-quality yet segregated facility.

¶4. (C) Though Kline is optimistic that the 1999 Benghazi outbreak will eventually spark some positive spillovers into the larger medical community, there is little evidence to suggest such spillover yet. Access to the BCC is restricted to the 426 Benghazi children. An additional 420 individuals, including 20 children, known to be infected with HIV in Benghazi must seek treatment at the sub-standard Benghazi Medical Center. Asked about the HIV/AIDS situation in Tripoli, Benghazi medical professionals told Kline and Calles that HIV/AIDS in Tripoli stems primarily from intravenous drug use and that no one in the GOL has suggested either opening the BCC to patients nationwide or training doctors from Tripoli as part of U.S.-EU-Libya's ongoing medical cooperation. In Benghazi, they said, the virus has spread primarily through heterosexual contact, with the large number of sub-Saharan African immigrants playing a significant role.

RELIANCE ON EUROPEAN HOSPITALS BREEDS LACK OF CONFIDENCE IN BENGHAZI DOCTORS

¶5. (C) According to Kline, a lack of confidence in Libyan doctors to effectively manage HIV/AIDS cases is a major impediment. Victims' families, spurred on by GOL promises of "quality care" at European hospitals, have no confidence in Benghazi doctors' ability to treat the infected children. The Libyan doctors, frustrated with seven years of the families' doubts, have internalized a lack of self-confidence. Kline criticized European governments for emphasizing treatment in European hospitals as part of the "compensation deal," noting that France and Italy especially have compelling commercial reasons (i.e., the prospect of lucrative contracts in the arms and petroleum sectors) to accept the Benghazi children for expensive, months-long stays with accompanying elaborate tests and drug therapies.

¶6. (C) He emphasized that all of the children could receive quality care in Benghazi if the families were willing to try -- but they are not. According to Baylor's Benghazi contacts, as many as 400 of the children, with GOL encouragement and financing, have sought medical care outside of Libya. They noted that from April to July 2007 -- in the run-up to the medics' departure -- several hundred families were sent off to Europe for months at a time to "prevent them from raising their voices" as the GOL worked to find a solution to the criminal case. On September 17, the Baylor team was scheduled to examine 50 patients at the BCC, but only 15 showed up. Hospital staff told the team the children's families had mostly left Libya since the July compensation payments (families received about USD $1 million for each infected child), some moving permanently to Egypt and Saudi Arabia.

¶7. (C) According to the Baylor team, Benghazi hospital staff were unusually critical of European efforts in Benghazi. Addressing three European representatives -- a British psychiatrist, an Italian physician, and a Dutch database management expert, the director of the BCC said, "You have done nothing for us." The director went on to praise Baylor for its concrete proposals and eagerness to work directly with the Benghazi medical community. The leader of the European team, UK psychiatrist Rafik Hosni, told Kline that the Europeans do not have an MOU analogous to Baylor's and have little clear direction for their medical engagement in Benghazi.

BENGHAZI DOCTORS STAND BY MEDICS' GUILT

¶8. (C) Kline noted that, almost without exception, Benghazi doctors refer to the 426 cases as the "injected children" rather than the "infected children." Though the Baylor team steered well clear of politics during their September 16-18 visit, every Benghazi doctor they spoke with maintains the Bulgarian medics were guilty of intentionally infecting the 426 children with the HIV virus in 1999.

SUBJECT: A SUCCESS?: ENI'S DEAL WITH LIBYA'S NATIONAL OIL CORPORATION

¶1. Summary: Italian energy firm Eni has struck a major deal with Libya's National Oil Corporation that will significantly extend its concession contracts and launch an ambitious series of exploration and development activities. While trumpeted by Eni as a success, the deal carries serious negatives for the company, and may pave the way for the imposition of similar, not altogether positive arrangements with other foreign oil and gas concession holders. End Summary.

¶2. Leading Italian energy firm Eni announced a 25-year extension to its oil and gas contracts with Libya's National Oil Corporation (NOC) October 16. Press reports indicate that some of Eni's most important oil and gas concessions were to expire over the next two years; the new agreement extends all of its concessions until 2042 and 2047, respectively. Eni will invest $14 billion in related infrastructure (a total matched by the NOC for a total of $28 billion). Eni will also expend at least $800 million for additional exploration activities, a sum approaching the mammoth $900 million exploration plan unveiled following British Petroleum's May 2007 deal with the NOC. Eni and NOC will also reportedly embark on a limited program of enhanced oil recovery (EOR) in some of Eni's existing fields.

¶3. The new deal paves the way for a potential doubling of Libya's gas exporting capacity to 16 billion cubic meters (BCM). Eni is Libya's partner for the "Greenstream" gas pipeline, which runs from the Libyan coast to Sicily and which handles its extant gas export capacity. The new contract envisages expanding Greenstream's capacity to 11 billion BCM and constructing a new liquefied-natural-gas (LNG) plant at the Mellita gas export hub with a capacity of BCM a year.

STEEP HIDDEN COSTS

¶4. While cast in most press accounts as a triumph for the Italian firm, the deal also carries substantial costs. Eni officials are reportedly far from enthralled with the new arrangements. The terms of the new agreement take Eni out of a true concession agreement, under which they derived a relatively healthy margin on the product that they lifted (exported) from Libya, and into a production sharing agreement. Under its previous terms, Eni was responsible for tax and royalties on lifted product, but was compensated by the NOC for substantial portions of its exploration and development costs, including well-drilling. Under the new arrangements, which are governed by the general terms of the current round of Exploration and Production Sharing (EPSA IV) agreements, Eni is responsible for all of these costs. Eni thus has a lower cost recovery factor in line with recent concession "winners" (who have won with bids as low as 7%). The result is that the NOC takes a larger cut of produced oil and Eni books a lower quantity of reserves, negatively affecting the company's share price. On top of this, Eni will reportedly pay a $1 billion bonus to NOC as part of the deal, and has agreed to retire an outstanding $500 million debt to the NOC by year's end.

A WORRYING SIGN OF THINGS TO COME?

¶5. Representatives of international oil companies (IOCs) operating in Libya have expressed grave doubts about the Eni deal. One executive described it as "scary," adding that it raised serious questions about NOC adherence to the sanctity of existing contracts. Post has learned that the NOC has approached several IOCs, including TOTAL (France), Wintershall (German) and Repsol (Spain), to explore renegotiating the terms of their current operations. There is widespread worry among the IOCs that the NOC may expand this effort and open discussions with other concession holders in an effort to extract more favorable terms. The use of the EPSA IV bidding round model of production sharing agreements would most damage companies operating under concession agreements, such as Wintershall. Those agreements were concluded during the sanctions period, when low spot market prices and Libya's limited options resulted in the granting of more favorable terms. The IOCs that have been approached about renegotiating are irked that the NOC is coming after them now, particularly since their companies took substantial risks to do business in Libya when UN sanctions were in place.

¶6. Comment: Post's contacts have expressed acute annoyance with Eni for conceding to the NOC's initiative, particularly given Eni for conceding to the NOC's initiative, particularly given the company's past record of similar behavior. Contacts point to Eni's agreement on a $150 million "social development package" with the NOC in September 2006 as another example of the firm's having given in to pressure from the NOC. With Eni's new deal on the books, the NOC will now have greater leverage to force other companies to conclude similar agreements. At the same time, the quality of parcels offered under the auspices of Libya's latest EPSA rounds has been increasingly marginal in economic terms. The confluence of increasingly difficult hydrocarbon reservoirs and an increasingly avaricious NOC could curb further interest by major IOCs in new EPSA agreements, leading to greater participation by smaller, less capable operators in Libya's oil and gas sector. End comment.

¶1. (SBU) On the eve of the Darfur peace conference, Libyan leader Mu'ammar Qaddafi presided over the signing of a separate peace agreement October 25 in Sirte between the Chadian peace agreement October 25 in Sirte between the Chadian government and four Chadian rebel groups. The agreement was signed by chief Chadian negotiator (and Infrastructure Minister) Adam Younousmi and the leaders of rebel groups RFC, CNT, UFDD and UFDD Fondamentale, including the UFDD's Mahamat Nouri and the RFC's Timan Erdimi. Also witnessing the signing were the presidents of Chad and Sudan, delegations from their respective governments, about 100 individuals associated with the rebel groups, and P-5 heads of mission (DCM stood in for Charge', who was meeting S/E Natsios that day in Tripoli; the Chinese were invited but skipped the event).

¶2. (SBU) In a lengthy, extemporaneous speech after the signing, Qaddafi praised the rebel leaders for taking the path of peace, chastized them and other would-be rebels for resorting to violence ("I am your friend and brother but I am not with you if you take up arms"), asserted the right of sovereigns to forcefully quell uprisings (citing with approval the California National Guards' quelling of riots in Los Angeles in the early 1990s), and emphasized that it is in the interest of Africans and the world community that peace and unity prevail in Africa.

¶3. (C) Comment: It was apparent by virtue of the presence of international press and P-5 ambassadors that the GOL, particularly now that it has been voted onto the UN Security Council, wants to highlight its increasingly active diplomacy in Africa. The Libyans' key players on Africa were of course all present: the MFA's Ali Treiki, CEN-SAD's Madani, and intelligence chiefs Musa Kusa and Abdullah Sanussi. Despite recent rumors of health problems including a possible stroke, Qaddafi appeared healthy if somewhat slow-moving and delivered lengthy, coherent remarks without reference to notes.

¶1. (C) Summary: UN/AU-led Darfur mediation talks began as announced on October 27 in Sirte, Libya, even in the absence of major political and military leaders from the Darfur rebel movements. The UN/AU leadership is slowly proceeding with a plan to dispatch teams to Juba and Darfur to encourage rebels not in attendance to sign a ceasefire agreement and move their internal consultations to Sirte. Libyan leader Muammar Qadhafi's chilling comments that the international community should leave the Sudanese alone to resolve the Darfur crisis and affirming the GOS's "sovereign right" to use violence against the Darfurians have encouraged some rebel groups to stay away from Sirte. While welcoming Sudanese Presidential Advisor Nafie Ali Nafie's unilateral ceasefire declaration, international observers cautioned that a meaningful ceasefire agreement must include mechanisms to identify violations and delimit concrete penalties for parties that broach the ceasefire. With the Sirte meeting looking increasingly precarious, international observers cautioned the UN/AU against boxing themselves in with unrealistic timetables or overly optimistic projections that the Sirte meeting will conclude with a final political settlement for Darfur. End summary.

KEY PLAYERS BOYCOTT SIRTE MEETING

¶2. (U) Most key rebel leaders and military commanders, including SLM faction leader Abdulwahid Mohammad al-Nur and JEM leader Khalil Ibrahim, made good on their threats to boycott the Sirte meeting. Factions in attendance included JEM/Collective led by Bahar Idriss Abu Gharba and Abdullah Banda and SLA/Khamis Abdullah (although Khamis himself is not in attendance). An Arab faction led by Abu Sarra and Fur leader Ahmed Ibrahim Diraige also participated.

¶3. (U) By contrast to the movements, representation from the Government of Sudan and the international community was strong. Libyan leader Muammar Qadhafi and MFA Secretary for Africa Affairs Ali Treiki hosted the meeting. A large GOS delegation, headed by Sudanese Presidential Advisor Nafi Ali Nafi and intelligence chief Salah Gosh, consisted entirely of top NCP officials and vowed to be the last delegation to leave the Sirte talks. SLM/Minawi did not attend -- the GOS vowed to block his participation unless he came as part of Nafi's GNU/GOS delegation. Special Envoys and top MFA officials from the U.S., U.K., France, China, Italy, the Netherlands, Norway, Canada, the European Union and Japan also participated. The three regional governments -- Egypt, Chad, and Eritrea -- were represented at the FM level. Arab League Secretary-General Amr Moussa also participated. Representatives from the SPLM's Taskforce on Darfur, Reverend Clement Janda and Edward Lino, were on hand in Sirte. Thirteen tribal and civil society representatives attended as well, but the GOS prevented 15 from attending who had been invited by the UN/AU.

NO CLEAR PLAN TO BOOST REBEL PARTICIPATION

¶4. (C) Recognition that the absence of major rebel leaders threatened serious discussions on either a ceasefire or a political settlement was widespread in all but the UN/AU camps, with UN S/E Eliasson characterizing the conference both publicly and privately as "off to a good start" and "relatively on schedule". The UN/AU leadership has been slow to entice key rebel figures into the Sirte meeting. In a meeting October 29 with international observers, UN S/E Eliasson announced, and international observers endorsed, plans to send mid-level teams to Juba and Darfur to encourage rebels to sign a draft ceasefire agreement as a confidence-building measure to facilitate forward movement of the political process. SPLM criticized the proposal, and two JEM splinter groups currently in Sirte threatened to walk out if the UN/AU dispatched the teams. By October 30, working level UN/AU staff conceded that UN/AU envoys were considering shifting the conference venue outside of Libya in the hope more rebels might attend if the conference were held at a less objectionable venue. Sources, however, indicate that UN SYG Ban is firm on continuing to hold the talks in Libya.

U.S. ENCOURAGES FLEXIBILITY IN THE SIRTE PROCESS

¶5. (C) S/E Natsios embraced the proposal to send out teams, encouraging the UN/AU to pursue the Darfur peace process in the field rather that at the 4,000-seat Sirte convention center if necessary. S/E Natsios encouraged the UN/AU to clearly define the endgame of the current meeting and suggested an enforceable ceasefire might be a more realistic short-term goal necessary to ceasefire might be a more realistic short term goal necessary to build confidence among the rebel movements before real political dialogue could begin. He cautioned the UN/AU not to box themselves in with an inflexible process and unmovable dates. Detailed written reports on progress every 2-3 weeks would help sustain support for UN/AU process in national capitals.

¶6. (U) In addition, in public remarks at the October 27 plenary session, S/E Natsios told delegates that a meaningful peace in Darfur requires both a robust peacekeeping force and an inclusive political settlement. Peacekeeping and the political track are mutually re-enforcing and should be pursued simultaneously. S/E Natsios stressed that preconditions for negotiations are illogical -- if everything has already been agreed upon, what would be the point of negotiations? There are five significant issues for discussion: security, disarmament, compensation, reconstruction / development, and land rights. A meaningful discussion on these issues requires participation by parties with significant military and political strength in Darfur. According to S/E Natsios, the Sirte meeting is the beginning of a process that will eventually lead to a political settlement. A cessation of hostilities would be a welcome first step.

QADHAFI HARANGUES INTERNATIONAL PARTICIPATION IN PEACE PROCESS

¶7. (C) In a rambling, 45-minute speech delivered in a monotone at the October 27 plenary session, Qadhafi told assembled rebel movements, Sudanese officials, international envoys, and a large press contingent that the absence of key rebel leaders in Sirte confirms that the international community, including Libya, should let the Sudanese and Darfurians resolve this conflict for themselves. He singled out Abdulwahid Mohammad al-Nur and Khalil Ibrahim as the "essential" leaders without whom "we cannot conclude a peace." Expressing disappointment that more rebel movements opted not to attend the Sirte talks, Qadhafi -- speaking several feet from UN S/E Eliasson -- said he had hoped "to salvage the prestige of the United Nations and the UN's efforts" to further the Darfur peace process.

¶8. (C) Qadhafi also referenced traditional Fur tribal hierarchies, claiming that "had the international community not gotten involved, the people of Darfur would have resolved the conflict already". Reiterating his view that the Darfur conflict is strictly tribal, the Libyan leader said the crisis has no implications for regional or international security and does not/not fall within the purview of a UN Chapter 7 intervention. In addition, Qadhafi gave an impassioned defense of the GOS's "sovereign right" to use violence against the Sudanese people, referring to a state's use of violence to quell perceived insurgency as "legal and legitimate". Qadhafi reietered his familiar refrain that the world faces "graver threats" than the Darfur crisis.

NICE CEASEFIRE -- IF THEY CAN KEEP IT

¶9. (C) Sudanese Presidential Advisor Dr. Nafi Ali Nafi announced (to polite applause) October 27 that the GOS declared a unilateral ceasefire in Darfur. "The Government of Sudan will not be the first to fire arms in Darfur", said Nafi. (Note: In an meeting October 30 reported septel, CEN-SAD Secretary-General Mohammad al-Madani told S/E Natsios that Nafi had agreed in consultations with the GOL to offer a longer list of concessions, only to revert to "the one thing (a ceasefire) they agreed on before he left Khartoum". End note.) Nafi reiterated that a sustainable peace in Darfur requires tackling poverty and underdevelopment in the region, calling on international observers to increase reconstruction assistance grants for Darfur. Nafi identified three obstacles to peace: the impossibility of consulting with the rebel movements, limited international commitments to reconstruction, and the lack of clear punishments for individuals or movements who step outside the UN/AU peace process.

¶10. (C) Virtually all attendees in Sirte agreed that for a ceasefire to be credible, it must include a mechanism to identify and punish violators. In a private meeting on October 27, Treiki told S/E Natsios that Libya would consider a regional travel ban on rebel movements and individuals that signed a ceasefire and reneged. Treiki praised U.S. unilateral sanctions on JEM leader Khalil Ibrahim, but conceded U.S. sanctions are strictly symbolic and incapable of raising the political costs of violating the ceasefire. Though Treki offered to broach the subject with Chad and Eritrea, the Eritrean FM spoke publicly against the proposal later that day.

NON-MILITARY LOGISTICAL SUPPORT PROPOSAL

¶11. (C) S/E Natsios proposed a non-military logistical support package, involving both food and medical supplies, financed by international donations and aimed at those rebel groups and militias that signed and respected a cessation of hostilities, including SLM/Minawi. The U.K., the Netherlands, the European Union, and Norway endorsed the plan in principle and agreed to investigate logistics and funding options should the UN/AU choose to pursue the plan in the future. After international observers presented the plan to the UN/AU on October 29, UN S/E Eliasson asked for more time for internal UN deliberations about the non-military logistical support plan. The Italian delegation leader offered generous funding for the idea in a private conversation with S/E Natsios.

DISCUSSIONS UNDERWAY TO EXPEL ABDULWAHID FROM FRANCE

¶12. (C) Treiki told S/E Natsios on October 27 that French FM Bernard Kouchner said France is prepared to expel SLM faction leader Abdulwahid Mohammad al-Nur in December when his French residency permit expires. According to Treiki, Senegalese President Abdallah Wade is ready to accept Abdulwahid if France expels him. In a separate meeting October 30, CEN-SAD SYG al-Madani told S/E Natsios that both the French government and President Wade have spoken with Abdulwahid about relocating him to Senegal, but Abdulwahid refused. Al-Madani said it was "preferable to convince Abdulwahid to bless the peace or attend the talks" than to expel him from France, but acknowledged expulsion was a viable option. He recounted a meeting between Chadian President Idriss Deby and Abdulwahid in Paris in July in which Abdulwahid promised that he would attend the final UN/AU negotiations.

AN EMBARASSMENT FOR LIBYA

¶13. (C) Libya's failure to deliver major rebel leaders -- despite repeated promises to the UN and AU that "everyone except Abdulwahid" would come -- is a clear embarassment to the conference's hosts. A/S Treiki was conspicuously silent throughout the plenary sessions, often sitting in the audience alongside other international observers but refraining from any public comments throughout the Sirte meeting. In a private meeting with S/E Natsios, Treiki was clearly embarassed by Qadhafi's comments that the international community had no role in the resolution of the Darfur conflict and cautioned that Qadhafi's harsh message was "not what brother leader intended". The GOL's low profile throughout the conference suggests that, were the conference to collapse, Libya -- like the rest of the international community -- would lay the blame squarely at the UN/AU's doorstep.

¶1. (C) SUMMARY. In an October 30 meeting with S/E Andrew Natsios, Secretary-General of the Community of Sahal-Saharan States, Mohammad al-Madani, briefed S/E Natsios on Libyan efforts in support of the UN/AU Darfur political process, including extracting an agreement from Sudanese President Advisor Dr. Nafi Ali Nafi to announce concessions behind a ceasefire in his October 27 speech and securing a promise from Eritrean President Isaias Aferwerki to support the UN/AU-led Sirte meeting. As in previous meetings, al-Madani praised U.S. involvement in the Darfur peace process at length. END SUMMARY.

¶2. (C) According to al-Madani, the GOL met with Sudanese Presidential Advisor Nafi Ali Nafi in Sirte prior to his October 27 speech announcing a unilateral ceasefire. Al-Madani said Nafi agreed on a range of unilateral concessions beyond the ceasefire that he would unveil in his speech to the plenary session, but subsequently ignored the discussion and only announced the ceasefire. Top NCP officials in the Sudanese Government, including Ali Othman Taha, Salah Gosh, and Nafi Ali Nafi "think themselves capable of deceiving the whole world," said al-Madani. Noting that he knew leading Sudanese personalities well, al-Madani said the GOL regularly encourages the NCP to stop lying to the international community.

¶3. (C) Al-Madani recounted two meetings with Eritrean President Isaias Aferwerki -- one during his October 8-9 visit to Tripoli and one during an October 20 visit to Sirte -- in which Aferwerki pledged to Libyan leader Muammar Qadhafi that he would "support peace efforts [for Darfur] and the Sirte negotiations". Aferwerki also told Qadhafi October 20 that he would use his influence to encourage rebel movements to attend the Sirte talks. According to al-Madani, all groups supported by Aferwerki were in Juba by the October 20 meeting.

¶4. (C) Al-Madani again praised U.S. involvement in the Darfur peace process, acknowledging that coordinated international pressure on both the GOS and the rebel movements is necessary to move the process forward. The U.S., like all countries, has pressing humanitarian and economic interests in Darfur. Al-Madani encouraged the U.S. to continue following the Darfur portfolio as a permanent member of the UN Security Council and to eliminate all obstacles to peace in the region, including sanctions on parties to the conflict.

¶1. (C) Summary: At a recent GOL-hosted conference on management, Libya's Minister of Labor-equivalent Matuq Matuq sharply criticized a suggestion by one Libyan participant that international standards be used to measure the level of corruption in Libya, calling instead for Libyans to assess their own system on their own terms. His remarks are indicative of both the pressure Libya's halting reform efforts are putting on some regime insiders and the opposition this inner circle is attempting to muster to block genuine reform. End summary.

¶2. (U) Deputy Prime Minister-equivalent Dr. Abdulhafid Zlitni hosted the first National Conference on Management Development in Tripoli October 29. Experts from Germany, Austria, Tunisia, Egypt, Syria and Libya took part in the event, along with the Arab Organization for Management Development and the Egyptian Central Authority for Management Organization.

¶3. (U) During the first session of the conference, Dr. Abubakr Bayyra, a professor at Benghazi's Garyounis University, presented a paper that touched on management training, modern international indicators and the way forward for the development of Libyan management skills. His recommendations focused on the need for accountability, rule of law, transparency and the will to fight corruption. The paper also offered a strategy to enhance Libya's anti-corruption efforts, focusing on the civil service and reforming the laws and policies that underpin the government system.

¶4. (U) According to a quasi-independent Libyan website (Libya-AlYoum), long-time Minister of Labor-equivalent Matuq Matuq rose and objected vehemently to the use of international indicators to assess Libya' record of management reform and anti-corruption efforts. He specifically rejected the findings of Transparency International as "unrealistic and unreal". (Note: In its 2007 Corruption Perceptions Index, Transparency International ranked Libya 131st in the world, placing it on par with Iran and slightly better than Syria. End note.) Matuq insisted that the Transparency International report be ignored and called for a special transparency report on Libya written by Libyans, whom he said alone possess the requisite perspective to comment on the local environment. He closed by stating that "no consideration should be given to issues such as corruption and good management, because they are irrelevant and unimportant to Libya".

¶5. (C) Comment: Matuq's outburst reportedly shocked the conference attendees and prompted speculation as to whether his comments represent GOL policy or only his own views. The highest echelons of GOL leadership, including Moammar al-Qadhafi (reftel) and his oldest son, Seif al-Islam, have frequently spoken publicly about the need to address corruption, albeit with little follow-up action. The exception in terms of follow-up has been the use of corruption charges to punish wealthy insiders who have fallen out of favor with the regime, a practice referred to locally as "the black hand". The Libyan public has viewed calls for anti-corruption efforts with skepticism, in part because the Qadhafi family and its fellow travelers are among the biggest beneficiaries of graft. Nonetheless, Matuq's intervention at the conference and his stature as a long-time crony of the Leader suggest that at least some of Libya's "old guard" feel threatened by the reformist camp and may seek to blunt any anti-corruption efforts. End comment.

Americas Dr. Ahmed Fituri and reiterated Post's request for timely access to returned Guantanamo detainee ISN-194 (Muhammad Abdallah Mansur al-Rimi) to follow up on ref A and B requests for further information on when and how al-Rimi sustained an injury to his left arm and suffered the loss of several teeth.
The CDA also requested access to ISN-557 (Ben Qumu Abu Sufian Ibrahim Ahmed Hamouda), who was returned to Libya September 26, to assess his condition.

¶2. (S/NF) Fituri stressed that it has been made clear that the ostensibly non-governmental Qadhafi Development Foundation (QDF), headed by Saif al-Islam al-Qadhafi, has the lead on facilitating access to returned detainees. He implied that the MFA was not in a position to offer further assistance and recommended that the CDA contact directly the QDF's Executive Director, Dr. Yusuf Sawani, and possibly ESO Chief Musa Kusa to follow up on the request for access to ISN-194 and ISN-557. The CDA pushed back, acknowledging that while the QDF has been designated as the organization responsible for facilitating Watchdog Committee access to returned detainees, the GOL's MFA also has a role to play in helping to ensure that such access is granted. Fituri offered no substantive rejoinder. Post has not been successful in its subsequent attempts to reach Dr. Sawani or our other QDF interlocutors. (Note: Sawani and other Libyan contacts are typically only reached by mobile telephone as many of their offices lack functioning landlines. Post suspects, but cannot confirm, that Sawani and his QDF colleagues are not taking our numerous calls to avoid having to discuss this issue. End note.)

¶3. (S/NF) Comment: CDA met with Dr. Sawani in mid-September to request access to ISN-194 to follow up on ref B request for further information on the nature of his left hand disability and tooth loss. Sawani said QDF employees (NFI) conducted a "pre-interview" of ISN-194 in mid-September in anticipation of a second visit by Emboffs (first visit reported ref E) and were told by the detainee that he sustained an injury to his left arm during interrogation at GTMO. Post notes that the first (and only) visit to ISN-194 came after two and a half months of negotiation with the GOL and the QDF. Post notes that the GOL has expressed a strong desire for access to all/all Libyan national detainees remaining in GTMO (ref D), and recommends that such access be explicitly conditioned on the GOL's facilitation of the requested visits with ISN-194 and ISN-557. End comment.

¶1. (C) Summary: Reaction to the November 3 announcement by al-Qaeda's second-in-command, Ayman al-Zawahri, that the Libyan Islamic Fighting Group (LIFG) had joined forces with al-Qaeda (AQ) and was calling for the overthrow of Qadhafi's regime has been relatively muted. The GOL has not yet issued a public statement and its leadership is reportedly divided over the wisdom of doing so. Regime insiders are concerned that the wisdom of doing so. Regime insiders are concerned that the LIFG/AQ announcement could presage a period of political violence that could hurt their personal economic interests, while the reaction of average Libyans has ranged from concern about instability and adverse economic consequences to enthusiasm for the merger. End summary.

GOL: NO PUBLIC REACTION (YET)

¶2. (C) In a conversation with P/E Chief November 4, MFA Secretary for the Americas Dr. Ahmed Fituri characterized the announcement as "a serious threat". He indicated that senior levels of the GOL's leadership, including FM Shalgham, ESO Chief Musa Kusa and Prime Minister Baghdadi al-Mahmoudi, were discussing whether the GOL should issue a public statement reacting to the announcement. He suggested that there was disagreement within the GOL as to whether it was prudent to react publicly, saying some favored a statement while others feared it would lend further credibility to AQ-LIFG in the eyes of the Libyan people. Fituri expressed the belief that the GOL would ultimately issue a statement of some kind, but cautioned that it might not occur "right away".

SIPDIS

ELITES CONCERNED ...

¶3. (S/NF) Mohamed Elobeidi (strictly protect), country manager for the Decameron hotel group and a well-connected insider from a prominent Benghazi tribe (his nephew is MFA Secretary for European Affairs Abdulati Obeidi), told P/E Chief November 5 that Libyans' reactions to the announcement varied depending on their socioeconomic status. The elite, he said, remember the LIFG's insurgency in the 1990's and its attempts to assassinate Moammar al-Qadhafi, and are concerned that a call to topple the regime premised on an explicitly religious message akin to that of Zawahri and LIFG leader Abu Laith al-Libi, would find a receptive audience among the many Libyans who have not benefited from recent economic liberalization and development, regardless of whether they share al-Qaeda and the LIFG's stated desire for an Islamic caliphate.

¶4. (S/NF) The elites' principal concern, according to Elobeidi, is to protect the sanctity of their personal economic fiefdoms in the event the LIFG makes a serious run at toppling al-Qadhafi's regime. Mentioning that he had been at a dinner party with Qadhafi's wife, Safia Farkash, the night after the AQ-LIFG announcement, he said she was "concerned" that economic reforms championed by her son and heir apparent, Saif al-Islam al-Qadhafi, had exacerbated resentment of the Qadhafi family and other elites who had profited disproportionately from recent initiatives to open Libya's economy. Much of the dinner conversation apparently centered on how to balance calls for economic reform against the fact that attendant inflation and increased living costs were hurting average Libyans, many of whom depend on static state salaries.

... BROADER REACTION MORE VARIED

¶5. (S/NF) By contrast with the elite, who viewed news of the merger with concern, Elobeidi said "a significant number" of Libyans welcomed the announcement. He cautioned against interpreting such support as a sign that most Libyans are fundamentalist Muslims or are sympathetic to the idea of establishing an Islamic caliphate, although he conceded that more conservative iterations of Islam were enjoying a resurgence in Libya. Rather, the level of dissatisfaction with Qadhafi's family and regime is such that some Libyans are willing to support any alternative perceived to be viable in the hope that the next regime will be less oppressive. Elobeidi mentioned in particular the perceived hypocrisy between Qadhafi and Saif al-Islam's remarks condemning corruption and the fact that the Qadhafi family is the biggest beneficiary of graft in the country.

¶6. (C) A sampling of non-elite Libyans revealed a variety of opinions. A hotel employee expressed concern that political violence would adversely affect Libya's oil and gas industry, impacting government revenues and the state's ability to pay its many public sector employees, and then whispered that Qadhafi's government was "terrible". A bus driver who plies inter-city routes and the Tripoli-Tunis run noted that while Qadhafi's regime had been the cause of "deprivation" for many Libyans for a long time, the economic situation -- particularly with respect to the availability of consumer goods -- had recently begun to improve. He expressed concern that an Islamist government under AQ-LIFG auspices would roll back recent economic changes, saying that while the (political) reasons would be different, the effect would be to drag Libya back to the stagnation of the sanctions era. The assistant imam at the Sidi Bou Kameisha mosque in the Abu Sita area of Tripoli, who declined to give his name, told P/E chief November 6 that the announced merger had been the subject of much discussion on the margins of prayer times. He would not offer his personal views on the news, but conceded that "some" (NFI) congregants had received word of the announcement "with enthusiasm".

¶7. (C) Comment: Like many things in Libya, reaction to news of the AQ-LIFG merger has been an exercise in slow-motion. While regime insiders are predictably concerned, the more varied reaction of average Libyans underscores the existence of a certain degree of support for AQ-LIFG. The more difficult question is the extent to which that support derives from genuine affinity for an Islamist agenda as opposed to a desire to be rid of Qadhafi's regime, whatever the cost. End comment.

¶1. (C) Summary: Recent media reports suggest that Rome may be close to finalizing an agreement to compensate Libya for damages incurred during Italy's colonization of the country; however, Italy's ambassador to Tripoli expressed doubt that such would occur soon. Pointing to the GOL's demands for compensation and its reluctance to consider Italy's requests for revised commercial/travel policies and resolution of sanctions-era debts to Italian companies, he criticized Libya for failing to adopt policies that would encourage the greater trade ties and foreign investment it claims to seek. In his view, Qadhafi and the GOL's senior leadership lack real strategic vision and instead do themselves a disservice by insisting on tactical linkages between "concessions" and "compensation". End summary.

¶2. (C) Open-source media reported October 29 remarks by Italian Foreign Minister Massimo D'Alema to the effect that Italy and Libya may be close to signing an agreement designed to settle the longstanding question of compensation for damages sustained by Libya during Italy's colonization of the country. Tripoli's rumor mill has been rife with speculation that movement towards an agreement, which has been under discussion for some time, was a Libyan pre-condition for granting Italy's Eni an ostensibly lucrative oil/gas exploration and production sharing agreement. (Note: Ref A reports on the deal, trumpeted by Eni as a success, and explains that drawbacks in details of the arrangement may have serious repercussions for other foreign oil and gas concession holders operating in Libya. End note.)

¶3. (C) In a conversation with P/E Chief November 4, Italy's Ambassador to Tripoli, Francesco Trupiano, dismissed the idea of a linkage between Eni's deal and the recent resurgence of interest in a colonial compensation agreement. Noting that Italian commercial interests were pressuring Rome to accommodate Libya's desire for symbolic remuneration, he offered that the agreement was further fueling what he described as the GOL's "inherently corsair mentality". In return for signing an agreement designed to bring the contentious issue of colonial-era abuses to a close, Libya has insisted that it is "owed" a highway that former Italian prime minister Silvio Berlusconi pledged to finance during a 2004 visit to Tripoli. The 1,900 kilometer highway, to be built to European standards, is to span Libya's coastline from the Tunisia-Libya border in the west to the Libya-Egypt border in the east.

¶4. (C) Trupiano said that some in the Italian government hope that Eni's deal will lend impetus to efforts to conclude a colonial compensation treaty to help facilitate trade, but cautioned that the GOL has balked at agreeing to Italy's three conditions. The first is facilitating easier registration of Italian companies by removing the requirement that the Libyan Prime Minister provide "political" approval to Italian entities seeking to do business in Libya in addition to the commercial approval that must be obtained from the Minister for Economy and Trade. Companies from other countries only have to obtain approval from the Minister of Economy; the requirement for political approval applies only to Italian firms. The second condition is revoking Libyan legislation that prohibits Italian "Fourth Shore" immigrants who resided in Cyrenaica and Tripolitania, and who were expelled in the early 1970's, from visiting Libya. Trupiano noted that some of those individuals had family ties that stretched back three generations or more by the time they were expelled from Libya and said the Italian government has received "numerous" requests for assistance in recent years from elderly Fourth Shore immigrants who were born in Libya and hope to visit again before they pass away. Italy's final stipulation for a colonial compensation treaty is resolving the issue of some 647 million Euros worth of payment for products and services owed to Italian companies by the GOL performed in the late 1980's and early 1990's in the early sanctions period.

¶5. (C) Noting that the GOL and even the affected Italian companies were willing to demonstrate "considerable flexibility" on the issue of unpaid bills, Trupiano complained that the GOL has balked at lifting the political approval requirement for Italian companies and, more annoyingly, facilitating travel for "Fourth Shore" immigrants. On the latter, the GOL has proposed reviewing cases on a case-by-case basis, an arrangement Trupiano likened to an outright refusal in light of Libya's notoriously difficult visa practices. Trupiano attributed the GOL's "haughtiness" to soaring oil prices, its successful candidacy for a UNSC non-permanent seat and recent successes such as the slew of French-Libyan commercial agreements brokered during President Sarkozy's visit in connection with efforts to secure the release of Bulgarian medics accused of deliberately infecting Benghazi children with the AIDS virus (ref B and previous). The GOL complains that more European companies have not rushed to enter the Libyan market, he said, but consistently fails to take decisions that would facilitate greater commercial interest, let alone strike a grace note such as facilitating travel for Fourth Shore immigrants. He expressed pessimism about the possibility that an Italian-Libyan colonial compensation treaty would be finalized soon.

¶6. (C) Comment: Trupiano's frustration with the GOL's unwillingness to adopt policies that would invite the greater commercial interest and foreign investment it claims to seek is consistent with Post's observations. The GOL consistently expresses disappointment that more U.S. companies are not participating in Libya's current development efforts, but has been either unwilling or unable to make practical decisions on visa issuances or contract language that would help encourage greater U.S. commercial interest. Trupiano's summary judgment is that Qadhafi and senior GOL leadership lack real strategic vision on how to reestablish meaningful ties with the outside world in the wake of the lifting of sanctions, but instead approach issues from an inherently tactical perspective, directly linking each Libyan "concession" to "compensation". End comment.

CLASSIFIED BY: Chris Stevens, DCM, U.S. Embassy Tripoli, U.S. Department of State.
REASON: 1.4 (b), (e)

¶1. (C) Summary: Libya has a long history of resource nationalism linked to the policies and rhetoric of the Qadhafi regime. Beginning in the 1990's, many of these practices were scaled back; however, the removal of U.S. and UN sanctions and Libya's attendant opening to the world have prompted a resurgence of measures designed to increase the GOL's control over and share measures designed to increase the GOL's control over and share of revenue from hydrocarbon resources. End Summary.

INVESTMENT SURGE ...

¶2. (C) With the lifting of UN and U.S. sanctions, foreign investment has surged back in to Libya over the past three years.

-- U.S. companies adopted a number of return strategies, from buying back old concessions (Marathon and ConocoPhillips), winning bids for new blocs (Chevron and ExxonMobil), or a combination of both (Amerada Hess and Oxy). Since January 2005, there have been three Exploration and Production Sharing (EPSA) rounds, in which exploration areas have been competitively bid to foreign companies. These steps have produced a flurry of new work, as the more than forty international oil companies (exclusive of oil service companies) toil to discover marketable quantities of oil and gas.

-- Several new "one-off" deals have also been concluded, including massive deals with Shell and British Petroleum, and a 25-year extension of Italian company ENI's oil and gas EPSA's.

-- The GOL has also shown a growing interest in developing its natural gas capabilities; an EPSA round for gas will come to a close this December.

... SPARKS NATIONALIST RHETORIC, POLICIES

¶3. (C) With this inflow of capital, and in particular the return of international oil companies (IOCs), there has been growing evidence of Libyan resource nationalism. The regime has made a point of putting companies on notice that "exploitative" behavior will not be tolerated. In his annual speech marking the founding of his regime, Libyan leader Muammar Qadhafi in 2006 said: "Oil companies are controlled by foreigners who have made millions from them -- now, Libyans must take their place to profit from this money." His son, Seif al-Islam al-Qadhafi, said in March 2007 that, "We will not tolerate a foreign company to make a profit at the expense of a Libyan citizen."

¶4. (C) Beyond the rhetoric, there are other signs of growing resource nationalism.

-- Some IOCs with local subsidiaries have been forced to adopt Libyan names this year, including TOTAL (now officially titled "Mabruk"), Repsol ("Akakoss"), ENI ("Mellita") and Veba ("Al-Hurruj"), although these names have yet to catch on.

-- The Libyan National Oil Corporation (NOC) is currently in the process of reworking long-standing oil concessions with several different IOCs (Ref B), in an effort to wring more favorable terms. There is a growing concern in the IOC community that NOC, emboldened by soaring oil prices and the press of would-be suitors, will seek better terms on both concession and production-sharing agreements, even those signed very recently.

-- Libyan labor laws have also been amended to "Libyanize" the economy in several key sectors, and IOCs are now being forced to hire untrained Libyan employees. The Libyan National Oil Company (NOC) has recently begun insisting that deputy general managers, finance managers and human resource managers in local offices of IOC's be Libyan.

-- The enactment of Law #443 of 2006 obligated most foreign companies to form joint ventures with Libyan companies in order to operate in the country. (Note: This currently excludes IOCs, but includes all foreign oil and gas service companies. End Note).

¶5. (C) The latest EPSA rounds could well prove to be a testing ground for how far Libya will travel down this path. The intense competition of the bid rounds led to winning bids that are widely considered by hydrocarbon industry experts to be economically untenable. Chinese and Russian bids that allow companies to book only 7-10% of future production were hailed by NOC Chairman Shukri Ghanem as "very good for us...and "[clearly] also good for the companies, since they submitted the offer".

HARMFUL TO LIBYA'S OWN INTERESTS?

¶6. (C) There is widespread concern among industry experts, however, that Libya's zeal for deriving maximum financial benefit from oil/gas concessions will adversely impact its energy resource development in the mid- to long-term, as low-bidding companies will under-invest, under-perform and under-produce. The expectation is that some of the companies that submitted unfeasible bids will be forced to abandon their concessions, further delaying the development of Libya's energy infrastructure.

COMMENT

¶7. (C) Libya needs to exploit its hydrocarbon resources to provide for its rapidly-growing, relatively young population. To do so, it requires extensive foreign investment and participation by credible IOCs. Reformist elements in the Libyan government and the small but growing private sector recognize this reality. But those who dominate Libya's political and economic leadership are pursuing increasingly nationalistic policies in the energy sector that could jeopardize efficient exploitation of Libya's extensive oil and gas reserves. Effective U.S. engagement on this issue should take the form of demonstrating the clear downsides to the GOL of pursuing this approach, particularly with respect to attracting participation by credible international oil companies in the oil/gas sector and foreign direct investment.

SUBJECT: ANTI-ISRAEL BOYCOTT INCIDENT WITH LIBYAN NATIONAL PROCUREMENT AUTHORITY

REF: 10/07 MILLER-MASON-DAVISON EMAILS

CLASSIFIED BY: Chris Stevens, DCM, Embassy Tripoli, Department of State.
REASON: 1.4 (b), (d)

¶1. (C) Summary: A U.S. company was recently presented with a Libyan government contract containing Israel boycott language. The U.S. company refused to sign the contract and ultimately succeeded in having the language removed, facilitating completion of the deal. End Summary.
¶2. (C) In the process of negotiating a multi-million dollar spare parts contract with U.S. company Oshkosh Trucks (of Oshkosh, WI), Libya's National Procurement Authority (NPA) presented a draft contract containing language requiring a comprehensive boycott of Israel. The language was expansive comprehensive boycott of Israel. The language was expansive, barring any business contact with or investment in Israel, and calling on the U.S. company to abide by all laws and decisions related to the Arab League's (AL's) boycott action. Oshkosh representatives refused to sign the contract and walked away from the deal. After doing so, they contacted post and met with Econoff to discuss options. Econoff confirmed Oshkosh's judgment that it could not legally sign a contract containing such language, nor could it empower an agent do so on its behalf. Econoff also reminded Oshkosh of its obligation to report the incident to the Department of Commerce.

¶3. (C) In the end, Oshkosh's hard line did not scuttle the deal. Just hours before they were due to depart the country, the team was called back to the bargaining table by the NPA and was informed that the offensive language had been removed in its entirety. To reinforce the decision and avoid potential for subsequent misunderstanding, the parties agreed on and signed only an English-language version of the contract (i.e., without a signed Arabic translation).

¶4. (C) Charge d'Affaires subsequently raised the issue with MFA Secretary for the Americas Dr. Ahmed Fituri, stressing that such contract stipulations would undermine GOL efforts to attract U.S. business. (Note: Senior GOL officials have repeatedly expressed disappointment that more U.S. firms are not rushing to re-enter the Libyan market. End note.) Fituri responded that the GOL and private entities are compelled by Libyan law stemming from the AL resolution to include such language. Drawing a comparison between the "unilateral" American imposition of sanctions on Libya in the 1980's and 1990's, he argued that it would be "hypocritical" of the USG to insist that Arab states not enforce implementation of the anti-Israel boycott.

¶5. (C) Comment: This is the second instance of GOL boycott enforcement we have heard of in the past month. (The earlier case involved two German firms that were reportedly asked to sign letters attesting that they were in compliance with the Israel boycott as a pre-condition for securing required stamps on export documents from the Libyan People's Bureau in Berlin.) The fact that the Libyan government partner in the Oshkosh deal ultimately relented and removed the offensive language suggests that the GOL is willing to be pragmatic when seeking products or services that it deems to be particularly important. Post will continue to be alert to new incidents, and will remind U.S. companies of their obligations under U.S. law, as well as continue to impress upon the GOL the desirability of ending this practice.

SUBJECT: EXXONMOBIL ADDS NEW OFFSHORE ACREAGE

¶1. (SBU) ExxonMobil has clinched a deal with Libya's National Oil Corporation to increase its acreage in the country by about fifty percent. The soon-to-be announced deal is for a giant offshore bloc adjacent to another it secured in the December 2006 Exploration and Production Sharing Agreement (EPSA) bidding round. The latest move marks another step for ExxonMobil towards regaining a major share in the Libyan market, which it dominated before it left the country in 1986.

¶2. (SBU) Econoff learned on November 20 that ExxonMobil will announce soon that it was awarded today a vast new offshore area to explore for hydrocarbon resources. The area in question covers more than 2.5 million square acres, and is located roughly 100 miles off the central Libyan coast. The new area is said to be in deep water, requiring world-class deepwater operations that are performed by only a handful of international oil companies. The parcel, referred to as Area 21, is adjacent to another identically-sized concession awarded to ExxonMobil as part of the Exploration and Production Sharing (EPSA) bid round process that concluded in December 2006. ExxonMobil had previously secured another large offshore parcel (area 44), located along the Egyptian-Libyan maritime border, in the EPSA bid round that concluded in October 2005.

¶3. (SBU) Post has learned that the workplan for this area will be substantial, to include 4,000km of 2D seismic, 2,000km of 3D seismic and the drilling of at least one well. Terms of a signing bonus, production share and other features of the deal were not disclosed.

¶4. (SBU) Comment: While significant, particularly in terms of the quantity of more labor-intensive and costly 3D seismic, this set of requirements is significantly smaller in scope than that attendant to ExxonMobil's winning bid in the most recent EPSA round in December 2006 (20,000km of 2D, 1,000km of 3D, 4 wells, and a $10 million signing bonus). The formal EPSA bid rounds have become increasingly competitive since they were inaugurated in January 2005. The less demanding requirements for the Area 21 deal underscore the potential advantages for IOC's of concluding deals outside the EPSA rubric. Securing Area 21also places ExxonMobil in the top tier of offshore operators in Libya and marks the company's return to the head of the pack in a market it first opened to oil and gas operations with the discovery of Libya's first viable oilfield in 1960. End comment.

SUBJECT: LIBYAN MARKET TESTS INTERNATIONAL OIL AND GAS COMPANIES

REF: A) TRIPOLI 511 B) TRIPOLI 912

¶1. (SBU) Summary: Although an alluring market for the oil and gas industry, Libya is an exceptionally difficult place in which to operate. In their daily operations, international oil companies (IOC's) face numerous challenges on visas, staffing and taxation issues, and their profit margins are comparatively and taxation issues, and their profit margins are comparatively narrow. The situation is likely to worsen in coming years, as Libyan authorities seek to extract additional concessions from energy companies operating in the country to maximize Libya's profits, even at the expense of continuing to attract further participation by reputable IOCs in the critical oil and gas sector that is the nation's lifeblood. End Summary.

¶2. (SBU) The results of Libya's latest Exploration and Production Sharing (EPSA) bid round, which is focused on natural gas, are due to be released December 9, and the country appears to be moving ahead with plans to develop its oil and gas industry. The National Oil Corporation (NOC) has implemented three successful EPSA bid rounds since January 2005, and has also concluded lucrative one-off deals with major international oil companies (IOCs) to develop new territories (ref A). The third (i.e., most recent) EPSA round, has attracted almost 60 companies from more than 25 countries as operators and investors. With more than forty IOCs already operating in Libya and oil prices at record highs, it would seem that the sector is the place to be in Libya; however, IOCs describe it as an extremely challenging environment that consistently tests their patience and financial limits. What follows is a summary of some of the most pressing difficulties they face; Post will outline challenges faced by oil service companies septel.

NOC TAKES A HARD LINE

¶3. (SBU) In addition to renegotiating existing agreements to extract additional concessions (ref B), the NOC is taking a hard line in a number of other areas. The general sense in the GOL appears to be that the NOC holds all the cards. NOC Chairman Shukri Ghanem put it a bit more diplomatically at the recent World Energy Congress in Rome, where he said the NOC is in a position to dictate policies that reflect "changing conditions" in energy markets. The fierce competition among IOCs to enter the Libyan market and book reserves has fed the NOC's perception that it is a seller's market. It has also led to the reality that Libya features some of the smallest profit margins in the world for IOCs. One senior IOC official, whose company produces oil in partnership with a state-run firm, recently said his firm makes the same profit in a neighboring country in which its production is only one-quarter that of its production in Libya. That dramatic difference underscores the comparatively high operating costs for oil/gas producers in Libya and raises grave doubts about the profitability of deals agreed in the last two EPSA bid rounds, which featured razor-thin production sharing factors, reportedly as low as 6.8 percent of future production in at least one case.

¶4. (SBU) The NOC appears to be actively looking for ways to extract additional concessions, or to cut services previously provided to the IOCs. Part of this may be the result of the fact that the NOC is unable to effectively stave off other players in the bureaucracy, particularly the powerful General People's Committee (GPC) for Manpower, Training and Employment. Led by long-time cabinet minister and regime insider Matug Matug, the ministry has been one of the most active in pressuring IOC's to hire greater numbers of Libyans, many of whom are unqualified, The NOC is striking hard bargains with thin profit margins at the same time that it is asking IOCs to absorb ever-increasing costs -- direct and indirect -- for work done in Libya. The end result is a substantially more difficult and less profitable operating environment that has given IOCs pause to consider how seriously they want to pursue further concessions.

HERE, HAVE A MANAGER ... BETTER YET, HAVE TWO

¶5. (SBU) The increasingly restrictive labor regulations for IOCs and service companies, mandated by the GPC for Manpower, Training and Employment are particularly onerous. The GPC for Manpower recently directed that for every new expatriate hired by an IOC, one Libyan must be added to the company payroll as well. It is required that certain key positions in IOCs' local offices - deputy country manager, finance manager and human resources manager - be staffed by Libyans. Companies have tried various ways to comply with these requirements, from hiring competent managers away from NOC-run companies to hiring and immediately marginalizing an "empty suit" employee. Other tactics include adding a lightly disguised expatriate layer atop the position encumbered by a Libyan and stalling with respect to encumbering positions designated for Libyan nationals. Expatriate IOC representatives consistently bemoan the time and training required to bring new Libyan hires up to speed; a lack of candidates with professional fluency in English and other basic skills is a persistent problem. IOC managers stress that they invest considerable time and resources training locally-engaged staff everywhere in the world; however, they describe Libyan employees as being less able upon hiring than most, necessitating longer, more costly training.

VISA WOES CONTINUE TO RANKLE

¶6. (SBU) At the heart of the IOCs' struggle to succeed in Libya's difficult operating environment is the constant difficulty of obtaining visas and work permits. The NOC has increasingly used visas and residency permits as a tool by which to enforce compliance with the "hire Libyan" policy, refusing to issue visas or residency permits to expatriates encumbering deputy manager, finance manager or HR manager slots. Expatriate employees often have to leave the country as their residency permit runs out and remain outside the country for weeks or months while their company works to get the permit renewed. Many companies are forced to use two-week business visas, which may be renewed twice, for up to six total weeks in country. The Byzantine visa requirements put a tremendous administrative burden on IOCs, which typically maintain up to a half-dozen locally-engaged employees to work on nothing but visas and residency permits. The GPC for Manpower's edict that a new Libyan employee be hired for each new expatriate hired has an additional, visa-related wrinkle: for each renewal of a one-year visa for an expatriate employee, an additional Libyan employee must be hired. An expatriate employee staying on for three years could be accountable for the addition of four Libyan employees (one counterpart at hiring plus one for each visa issued). The NOC reportedly opposes this requirement, but has been trumped by the GPC for Manpower.

THE TAX MAN COMETH

¶7. (SBU) Various arms of the Libyan government are also working to extract additional tax revenue from energy sector activities. This is reflected in the imposition of a two percent "Stamp Tax," which will be assessed on all contracts falling under the December EPSA round and all new contracts signed after that. This tax has been sporadically applied to other areas of the economy, specifically where foreign investment is involved, since it first appeared on the books in 1955. An effort by the Libyan Tax Authority to collect it on contracts under previous EPSA rounds was successfully contested by the affected companies, leading to the Tax Authority's announcement that all future contracts would be subject to it. There is also a move afoot to extract additional tax revenue from offshore exploration and drilling. The GOL had previously allowed the servicing of these activities out of Malta, but is now moving to curtail that and to require that they be based out of Libya. The relocation of onshore support services for offshore operations generates considerable income for the Tax Authority; offshore drilling operations can cost up to $750,000 per day for deep-water operations. In addition, the NOC recently decided it would no longer act as an intermediary between the IOCs and the would no longer act as an intermediary between the IOCs and the Tax Authority. IOCs have been forced to hire additional staff and devote considerable resources to parsing through Libya's amorphous tax system to determine what their obligations are and how to meet them.

RISING SALARIES GUTTING STATE-RUN COMPANIES

¶8. (SBU) Libya's state-owned companies continue to protest what they consider to be unreasonably high rates for expatriate labor, and have attempted to hold a line at the rate schedule employed in 2002 during the sanctions period. Overall salaries have risen about ten percent for each of the past two years, but the state-owned operator oil companies (e.g., Waha, Zeuitina) still lag well behind the IOCs in terms of compensation. They are accordingly hemorrhaging seasoned workers, who are taking advantage of high international demand for oil/gas worker to leave Libya for more lucrative opportunities in the Gulf and elsewhere. As the state-run firms fail to offer competitive wages for expatriate workers, they are unable to fill current vacancies. An example is the state-run firm Waha, which has at least 100 expatriate vacancies at present, constituting roughly one third of its expatriate workforce. The situation affects not only these companies and the NOC, but also the IOCs that depend on state-run firms as operating partners. This is the arrangement for almost all companies engaged in production and export activities. The GOL's decision (under Law No. 43 of 2006) to pull back the NOC's procurement offices in London and Dusseldorf (Umm Jawaby and Medoil, respectively) also creates problems for state-run firms, which have had their supply lines interrupted by the disruption of a long-established logistics system and the ongoing movement of more than two hundred state employees from Europe back to Libya.

¶9. (SBU) Comment: Libya's oil and gas sector is in many respects the bellwether for the rest of its emerging economy. The fact that IOCs, which successfully operate in some of the most forbidding environments in the world, are having such a difficult time underscores how far the GOL has to go in terms of reform if it is to achieve its stated goal of attracting greater foreign investment and commercial interest to Libya. We consistently hear expressions of disappointment from senior GOL officials that more U.S. firms have not rushed to enter Libya's market since sanctions were lifted and Libya was removed from the state sponsors of terrorism list. Pernicious requirements such as the "one expat-one Libyan" hiring policy and capricious visa policies, however, do nothing to encourage other U.S. and foreign companies with less international experience than the IOCs to enter the Libyan market. End comment.

¶1. Summary: U.S. energy company Occidental Petroleum is set to announce a 25-year extension of its existing contracts in Libya. This deal will include more than $13 billion in capital investment, and solidifies Occidental's position as a major player and top acreage holder in country. End Summary.

CEO is expected to travel to Tripoli during the week of November 25 to sign the new deal with the National Oil Corporation (NOC). Under the terms of the extension, which has been under negotiation between Oxy and the NOC since January 2007, more than a dozen contracts set to expire in the 2009-10 timeframe will be extended for 25 years past 2007. Oxy has agreed to pour more than $13 billion into exploration, field development and infrastructure upgrades as part of this arrangement. Oxy will also reportedly gain additional production rights with its current NOC-owned partner Zuetina, as well as Sirte Basin production from another NOC company, the Arabian Gulf Oil Company (AGOCO). The general terms of the new agreement will follow the NOC template used in the most recent Exploration and Production Sharing Agreement (EPSA) rounds, although there will reportedly be some flexibility on the terms of the production share of production that Oxy will receive from future discoveries.

¶3. This deal will solidify Oxy's position as one of the top, if not the top, international oil company (IOCs) in Libya. Oxy resumed operations in Libya in July 2005, nineteen years after departing the country following its conclusion of a "standstill" agreement with Libyan authorities. Thanks in part to its success in the January 2005 EPSA bid round (in which it won acreage in nine different areas), Oxy is the largest net total of oil and gas acreage in Libya, with a total exploration and production acreage in Libya of approximately 130,000 square kilometers. Oxy is both the largest holder of onshore acreage in Libya, with over 30 million acres, and also has whole or partial interest over more than 12 million acres of offshore territory, which it either controls outright or as a 35% shareholder in partnership with Australia's Woodside (55%) and UAE's Liwa (10%). Also, although it subcontracts all of its field operations, Oxy is one of the largest employers of American citizens in Libya, with anywhere from 15 to 20 employees at any given time. Libya is a critical market for Oxy. The company expended more than 70% of its worldwide exploration budget in Libya in 2006. The $13 billion work plan envisioned under this new deal will only increase Libya's importance to Oxy.

SUBJECT: LIBYA ESTABLISHES SPECIAL STATE SECURITY COURT TO TRY REGIME DISSIDENTS

REF: (A) TRIPOLI 158, (B) TRIPOLI 159, (C) TRIPOLI 160, (D) TRIPOLI 218, (E) TRIPOLI 657, (F) TRIPOLI 705

CLASSIFIED BY: Chris Stevens, CDA, AmEmbassy Tripoli, State.
REASON: 1.4 (b), (d)

¶1. (SBU) Summary: The GOL quietly established a state security court of appeals on/about August 13, apparently for the short-term purpose of hearing the case of twelve self-described regime dissidents detained since February 16 for planning a peaceful demonstration in Tripoli calling for multiparty elections. The new court held an additional hearing on the dissidents' case November 6. The dissidents, led by physician Idriss Boufayed, began a hunger strike on October 30 to protest their lengthy pre-trial detention. Opposition groups allege the twelve have faced "severe torture" in Libyan custody, including lengthy detention in small underground cells. End summary.

LIBYA ESTABLISHES STATE SECURITY COURT

¶2. (SBU) According to Libyan Human Rights Solidarity (LHRS), a Libyan opposition group operating in Europe that relies on the Internet to disseminate information inside Libya, the GOL-affiliated Higher Judicial Council announced the creation of a state security court of appeals on August 13. On October 17, LHRS posted on its site an apparently authentic order bearing the seal and letterhead of the Higher Judicial Council formally creating the state security court. According to the order, the court's bailiwick comprises hearing cases derived from three laws: a 1975 amendment to Law 80 of the penal code that introduced the death penalty for offences against the state; the 1972 law 71 which stipulates the death penalty for "any form of group activity based on a political ideology opposed to the principles of the September 1, 1969 revolution"; and a revolutionary committee decision from 1969 prohibiting peaceful instances of political opposition. According to LHRS, cases under the new court will be conducted in secret and lawyers will be denied access to clients before their trial. In a statement, LHRS likened the new court to the notorious People's Courts, an extra-judicial entity established to punish political crimes that was formally dismantled in 2005.

SECURITY COURT HEARS CASE OF TWELVE REGIME DISSIDENTS

¶3. (S) The state security court first heard the case against Idriss Boufayed, al-Mahdi Hameed, and ten other self-described regime dissidents November 6. As described ref A-D, the twelve dissidents were initially arrested on February 16 following a meeting with an officer at U.S. Embassy Tripoli and in advance of a planned peaceful demonstration in Tripoli calling for multiparty elections. They face charges of advocating the overthrow of the government, illegal weapons possession, and illegal contact with a representative of a foreign government, each of which potentially carries the death penalty. The GOL formally protested, claiming that Emboff's meeting with the dissidents constituted "inappropriate" behavior (ref E - NOTAL, and previous).

¶4. (SBU) According to witnesses at the November 6 hearing, two defendants -- Juma'a Boufayed (believed to be the brother of group leader Idriss Boufayed) and Abdulrahman al-Qataywi -- did not appear in court. An earlier hearing scheduled for August 4 was postponed indefinitely by a Tripoli criminal court without explanation (ref F). According to Libyan opposition groups resident outside the country, the court allowed the defendents to attend an opening session of the hearing and allowed Idriss Boufayed to make a statement attesting to the defendents' "mistreatment" in Libyan detention. Following Boufayed's statement, the defendants and public were removed from the courtroom while the session continued. A follow-up hearing was scheduled for November 20.

DISSIDENTS GO ON HUNGER STRIKE

¶5. (SBU) Opposition groups also report that on/about October 30, Boufayed and his co-defendents, divided between the Ayn Zara and Jadida prisons in Tripoli, began a hunger strike. As of November 17, the hunger strike was reportedly still ongoing. The purpose of the hunger strike is to protest against repeated delays in convening a meaningful hearing in the case against the fourteen defendants. One defendant, the popular opposition writer Jamal al-Hajj, told a website based in London that he was refusing to eat "because I am innocent~ nothing in Libyan law condemns me."

TRIPOLI 00000989 002 OF 002

OPPOSITION GROUPS CONTINUE TO ALLEGE TORTURE

¶6. (SBU) Opposition groups have continuously reported that the self-styled anti-Qadhafi dissidents have been tortured while in Libyan detention. On November 17, the popular UK-based opposition journal "Libya al-Mustaqbil" reported that the dissidents faced "severe torture" during the first five months (February to July 2007) of their detention, including being locked in pairs in extremely small (less than 4 cubic meters) underground cells.

¶7. (S) Comment: Apparently mindful of potential international condemnation of its imprisonment of peaceful dissidents, the GOL has sought to manage the trial quietly. An effort by the Swiss Ambassador in August to rally members of the diplomatic corps to press the GOL to allow foreign observers of the trial proceedings failed to gain traction, in part because the GOL strongly cautioned the diplomatic corps against pursuing such access. (Note: Idriss Boufayed is a Swiss permanent resident; one of the other detainees is a Danish-Libyan dual citizen. End note.) The GOL has generally refused to discuss the case with diplomats, claiming that it is a strictly internal matter. The regular Internet postings of LHRS and Libya al-Mustaqbil currently constitute the best source of information about developments in the case. The fact that LHRS was able to secure a copy of the presumably secret order establishing the state security court suggests that the dissident groups enjoy access to and the sympathies of at least some GOL officials. End comment.

Per reftel, Post requests that Libya be added to the list of invitees for the March 2008 Washington International Renewable Energy Conference (WIREC). The GOL has demonstrated keen interest in developing its renewable energy sector and could represent a sizeable market for renewable technologies in the future. In addition, scientific engagement and cooperation have constituted an important component of the re-establishment of formal U.S.-Libyan diplomatic ties; participation by the GOL in the WIREC 2008 event would represent another significant step in the re-establishment of regular government-to-government ties outside the strictly political sphere.

SUBJECT: LIBYAN ORGANIZATION ISSUES STATEMENT OPPOSING AFRICOM

¶1. On November 21, the Community of Sahel and Saharan States (Cen-Sad) issued a statement at its Tripoli headquarters "categorically rejecting" Africom and any foreign military presence in any Cen-Sad member country. The statement noted that Cen-Sad represents roughly half of Africa's territory and population. In the statement, Cen-Sad expressed its full support for a statement issued by the South African Minister of Defense rejecting any foreign military presence in Africa.

¶2. Comment: Created in the Libyan coastal town of Sirte in February 1998, Cen-Sad includes 25 members from Senegal to Somalia. Originally conceived to focus on infrastructure investments in northern Africa, Cen-Sad now serves as a Libyan-led political coordination mechanism operating in parallel to the African Union. Cen-Sad's opposition to Africom echoes long-standing GOL objections to the presence of foreign forces on the African continent and reflects Libya's experience under Italian occupation and Libyan leader Muammar Qadhafi's attendant anti-foreign rhetoric. End comment.

REF: A) STATE 8768, B) STATE 10444, C) TRIPOLI 55, D) TRIPOLI 90, E) TRIPOLI 93, F) JOHNSON-STEVENS EMAIL 02/05/2008

CLASSIFIED BY: Chris Stevens, CDA, Embassy Tripoli, Department of State.
REASON: 1.4 (b), (d)

¶1. (C) Summary: Echoing a letter posted on the Qadhafi Development Foundation's (QDF) website, the QDF's Executive Director, Dr. Youssef Sawani, told CDA February 7 that Fathi el-Jahmi's (FAJ's) family could take him home for treatment (but had so far declined to do so) and that NGO Human Rights Watch and an international, independent medical team may travel to Libya to assess FAJ's condition. He also offered to facilitate a visit by U.S. Emboffs to FAJ. Sawani maintained that FAJ is being held at the Tripoli Medical Center, where he receives "excellent" care, and is not/not being held at a prison detention facility. Sawani stressed that FAJ's brother, U.S.-based Mohammed el-Jahmi, has sought to exploit FAJ's case to embarrass the GOL. End summary.

¶2. (U) The Qadhafi Development Foundation's (QDF) Executive Director, Dr. Youssef Sawani, authored a response to a recent letter from NGO Human Rights Watch concerning Fathi el-Jahmi (FAJ), which was posted on the QDF's Arabic-language website February 6 (informal translation below at para 6). Main points of the letter are as follows:

- Contrary to media reports and allegations by some members of FAJ's family, FAJ has been held at the Tripoli Medical Center (not/not at a prison facility) since his conviction;

- The QDF has facilitated access to FAJ for members of his family, including a visit as recently as last week by his son, Mohammed;

- The QDF, pursuant to a personal suggestion by Saif al-Islam al-Qadhafi, told the family FAJ could be taken from the hospital to his home for treatment;

- The family has not accepted the offer, allegedly because some members of FAJ's family " ... wanted to exploit the case for political purposes";

- The QDF disputes the accuracy of HRW's report and invites the organization to verify FAJ's condition directly (i.e., invites them to Libya to do so).

¶3. (C) In addition to inviting HRW to visit Libya, Sawani said in a subsequent telcon with the CDA February 7 that the GOL was prepared to arrange a visit by U.S. Embassy officers to FAJ in hospital, and to facilitate a visit by an independent international medical team to assess FAJ's condition. He cautioned that Emboffs should not make their affiliation clear to avoid having the visit "misused" by FAJ family members eager to exploit his case for political purposes.

¶4.(C) Comment: The QDF's invitation to HRW and independent physicians to visit FAJ in Libya is a positive step. It seems that Saif al-Islam has concluded that addressing this case in a transparent manner is a better course of action than continued stonewalling (which has been the GOL's response so far). Saif told us that he has discussed the matter with his father, and therefore he presumably has the Leader's support. A successful visit by HRW and/or PHR would result in FAJ's return to his family with appropriate medical care. It would also potentially lay the foundation for future cooperation between HRW/PHR and the QDF on Libyan human rights issues. On the other hand, it would be easy for HRW/PHR to burn bridges here, i.e., through strident or unsubstantiated public statements or some other action (Saif's chief of staff told CDA, for instance, that when PHR last visited, one of the physicians had taped a conversation with FAJ that contained a political message and tried to take it out of the country; PHR, therefore, may not be the optimal choice for a medical team). Given the QDF's offer to allow HRW and physicians to meet with FAJ and facilitate his return to his family, we would not recommend pursuing a visit by an embassy officer at this time, which may risk further politicizing the case to FAJ's detriment. End comment.

¶5. (U) Informal translation of QDF letter follows:

(Begin text) HR groups and media outlest have published much information over thepast few days on Fathi el-Jahmi. The QDF, to clarify, confirms that FAJ has not been sentenced to prison since his trial began, but rather has been living in a house with full medical care.

TRIPOLI 00000104 002 OF 002

QDF notes that Physicians for Human Rights and the World Federation of Health Organizations have visited el-Jahmi and examined him medically. These groups expressed their thanks to the QDF for facilitating the visits.

After the verdict against el-Jahmi, which confirmed that he was not mentally balanced, el-Jahmi was hospitalized in the Tripoli Medical Center on court order. He has been there since the verdict to the present.

The QDF is committed to humanitarian principles and, owing to human rights concerns, enabled one of el-Jahmi's sons, Mohammed, to visit him many times, most recently last week; however, the QDF went even further. The QDF offered to the family that el-Jahmi return to his family home under medical treatment, but the family did not accept this suggestion, especially because some members of el-Jahmi's family wanted to exploit the case for political purposes.

At a time in which the QDF has shown continued interest in FAJ's health and psychological condition and maintained a continuing relationship with FAJ's family, QDF was surprised by the recently published Human Rights Watch report (on January 30) stating that FAJ is seriously ill and required independent medical care.

The QDF stresses the inaccuracy of the HRW report and calls on HRW to verify its claims directly. (End text of letter)

TRIPOLI 00000106 001.2 OF 002

CLASSIFIED BY: Chris Stevens, CDA, Embassy Tripoli, Department of State.
REASON: 1.4 (b), (d)

¶1. (C) Summary: The head of the foreign affairs committee of Libya's national parliament told CDA February 4 that he expects a "heated" debate during the General People's Congress' (GPC) a "heated" debate during the General People's Congress' (GPC) upcoming annual session, scheduled for February 20 - March 1, focusing on public sector employment, teachers, and foreign policy. Acknowledging widespread reports that a cabinet shuffle is likely, the GPC's Secretary for Foreign Affairs Suleiman al-Shahumi spoke out strongly in defense of FM Shalgham, rumored to be among those who may lose his seat, and Shalgham's role promoting good relations with the United States. Shahumi also provided a detailed overview of how Libya's unusual government operates, noting the "theoretically democratic" system struggles with an under-educated populace and enduring tribal rivalries. He told CDA the U.S. should do more to push bilateral relations forward, starting with providing full consular services for Libyans in Tripoli. End Summary.

SHAHUMI EXPECTS A "HARD" GPC SESSION

¶2. (C) Shahumi previewed for CDA the annual meeting of the General People's Congress, tentatively scheduled for February 20 to March 1. He expected a "hard session" based on the quantity of proposals put forward by the 468 Basic People's Congresses (BPC's). (Note: the BPC's, which are local-level councils, convened in mid January and put forward their proposals late last month. End note.) He singled out the Manpower and Basic Education Ministries for particular criticism, noting that many BPCs had referred to the GPC complaints about senior-level appointments, reductions in the number of public sector jobs, and changes to teachers' requirements that have dramatically reduced the number of qualified teachers in Libya.

¶3. (C) On foreign policy, Shahumi said he expected a "heated debate" but spoke out strongly in defense of FM Abdurrahman Shalgham. Stressing that the MFA has no policy-making role, he said the MFA, under FM Shalgham, has "correctly" implemented Libya's foreign policy as envisioned by the GPC and, ultimately, "the people." "We are very happy with Shalgham's performance," he said. Shahumi noted that Shalgham alone cannot speed up development of the U.S.-Libya relationship, and said the U.S. should do more, such as allowing Libyans to apply for visas in Tripoli. CDA responded that the U.S. hopes to offer full consular services by January 2009 at a temporary embassy site currently under construction.

AN OVERVIEW OF LIBYA'S POLITICAL SYSTEM

¶4. (SBU) Shahumi also briefed CDA on Libya's system of cascading People's Congresses. A single, national General People's Congress (GPC) is the highest policy formation body in the country, he explained. Membership consists of the heads of 468 municipal Basic People's Congresses (BPCs). The GPC has two functions: it debates and implements recommendations of the 468 BPCs, and it appoints and evaluates the national executive authority, the General People's Committee (i.e., the cabinet).

¶5. (SBU) BPC meetings have been on-going throughout Libya since mid-January, he said. The BPCs are distributed based on population -- Tripoli has 35 -- and differ in appearance from community to community; however, all have common responsibilities to debate the national budget, propose new legislation, and review the conduct of the national executive authority, the General People's Committee. BPCs cannot make final decisions, but they can refer notes for consideration by the national GPC.

¶6. (SBU) Shahumi spoke at length on the GPC's role in evaluating cabinet officials to ensure they are appropriately implementing the GPC's policies. On the basis of notes assembled from the 468 BPCs, the GPC, acting as the "prosecution," questions cabinet officials on their performance. Officials are given an opportunity to respond and individual members of the GPC are allowed to ask follow-up questions. If the GPC accepts the cabinet official's justification for his conduct, the official may remain in his position with or without some form of punishment short of termination. If not, the official can either resign or be involuntary terminated by the GPC. Pressed by CDA, Shahumi clarified that the GPC does not actually vote on individual cabinet appointments but arrives at decisions by consensus.

¶7. (SBU) In addition, the GPC elects an eight-member Secretariat to perform GPC functions between annual meetings of the full Congress. The Secretariat consists of a Secretary-General (the head of state equivalent), a Deputy

SIPDIS
Secretary-General, a Secretary for Foreign Affairs (Shahumi), a

SIPDIS
Secretary for the People's Congresses, a Secretary for the

SIPDIS
People's Committee, a Secretary for Legal Affairs, a Secretary for Women's Affairs, and a Secretary for Trade Unions. The Secretariat oversees the conduct of the General People's

SIPDIS
Committee when the GPC is not in session.

ADVANTAGES AND DISADVANTAGES TO LIBYA'S UNUSUAL SYSTEM

¶8. (SBU) Shahumi conceded Libya's unusual system has both advantages and disadvantages. The GPC system is "theoretically democratic, but there are shortcomings," he said. Shahumi cited a lack of political education and enduring personal and tribal rivalries has obstacles to the smooth functioning of the People's Congresses. Referring to the U.S. presidential primary, Shahumi joked, "at least it's better than parties."

POLITICAL DIFFICULTIES REMAIN IN U.S.-LIBYA RELATIONS

¶9. (C) On bilateral issues, Shahumi offered the GOL's familiar refrain that the U.S. has not sufficiently compensated Libya for its 2003 WMD renunciation; however, Libya had "exercised its sovereignty" in choosing to re-engage with the U.S. He said that, while political will within the Libyan leadership exists to move forward, "political difficulties" obstruct the restoration of "normal" relations. He cited the lack of full consular services for Libyan citizens in Tripoli, supposedly unfulfilled U.S. promises to support the treatment of HIV/AIDS, and the absence of major health equipment donations as examples of insufficient progress from the U.S. side. Shahumi opined that the GOL faces pressures from "inside and outside" (i.e., within Libyan political circles and from regional players) on the U.S.-Libya relationship and that it "shouldn't be this way;" however, he offered no further practical suggestions for improvement.

SUBJECT: REACTION TO VICTIMS OF TERRORISM LEGISLATION

TRIPOLI 00000113 001.2 OF 002

¶1. (SBU) Summary: Recent legislation making it easier for plaintiffs in terrorism-related lawsuits to seize foreign government-owned assets to satisfy U.S. court judgments has caused concern among U.S. firms partnered with Libyan companies (especially in the energy sector), and provoked a sharply negative reaction from the GOL. U.S. companies are attempting to clarify and reduce their potential exposure under section 1083 of the 2008 National Defense Authorization Act (aka, "the Lautenberg Amendment"). The Libyan National Oil Corporation (NOC) has informed American oil companies that it is "their problem" to solve, and has begun requiring U.S. and other companies to conduct all operations in non-dollar denominations. A senior MFA official warned the CDA that this law could set back US-Libyan relations. The MFA has pressed European governments not to cooperate with U.S. judicial efforts to attach Libyan assets in Europe under the law. End summary.

OIL PRODUCING & OIL SERVICES COMPANIES AT GREATEST RISK

¶2. (SBU) U.S. companies participating in joint venture partnerships with Libyan national oil companies assess themselves as being at greatest risk under section 1083 of the National Defense Authorization Act. This list includes Occidental, ConocoPhillips, Marathon and Amerada Hess. These companies are involved in jointly developing Libyan oilfields and in extracting and lifting crude oil. The three U.S. partners in the Oasis Group (Marathon, ConocoPhillips and Amerada Hess, who are partnered with Libyan state firm Waha) pay $2 million/month to the GOL in operating fees, and $100 million/month in taxes and royalties. Company reps assess that these payments -- as well as jointly-held facilities and equipment -- would be exposed to court-ordered attachment and seizure under section 1083. U.S. oil service companies, such as Halliburton, may also be exposed, according to local company reps, and most service companies have frozen further expansion until the risks are clarified. Company reps have expressed concern to us that their GOL partner companies would view any U.S. court-ordered attachments of payments or equipment as a breach of contract, potentially leading to termination of their work in Libya.

¶3.(SBU) U.S. companies engaged exclusively in the exploration (as distinct from production), such as Chevron and ExxonMobil, assess themselves to be subject to less risk for the moment, since they make no regular payments to the GOL that would be subject to attachment (the signing bonuses agreed in connection with winning their Exploration and Production Sharing (EPSA) agreements have already been paid to the GOL, and day-to-day exploration work is contracted out to largely non-GOL entities). Nevertheless, company reps say that they are concerned about the longer-term impact of this legislation on their future plans in Libya.

NOC REACTS SWIFTLY

4 (SBU) Libya's National Oil Corporation (NOC) has instructed all international partner companies to cease conducting transactions in U.S. dollars. U.S. oil company contacts have privately told us that the NOC's intent was to reduce its exposure to U.S. courts, since dollar transactions are routed through the U.S. financial system. The edict has disrupted the payments system in the energy sector, which has traditionally used the dollar.

¶5. (SBU) The NOC's chairman, Shukri Ghanem, informed U.S. firms in late January that they were "on their own" to resolve the problems caused by the new legislation, hinting that the firms would suffer the consequences for any U.S. court-ordered disruption of their operations in Libya. U.S. company reps have told us that they believe that the NOC could find them in breach of their contractual obligations if U.S. courts disrupt their monthly payment of operational fees to the NOC.

GOL NOT PLEASED

¶6. (SBU) Senior MFA adviser Abdelati Obeidi told CDA that the GOL viewed the Act as a potentially serious setback to US-Libyan relations. He said the GOL understood that the initiative had come from the Congress, but did not understand why the Administration failed to block it, or at least its application to Libya, as it had done in the case of Iraq.

¶7. (SBU) Separately, according to European and ex-Soviet bloc diplomats in Tripoli, the GOL has pressed their governments not to cooperate with any U.S. judicial efforts to attachment Libyan assets in Europe under the Act. One European diplomat expressed surprise at the sharp edge of the Libyan demarche, noting that their GOL interlocutor had threatened unspecified consequences for the country's commercial interests in Libya if the country facilitated seizure of Libyan assets pursuant to U.S. claims.

¶8. (SBU) Comment: The enactment of section 1083, together with the mid-January $6 billion U.S. court judgment against Libya in the UTA airliner case, has caused deep concern among U.S. energy companies operating in Libya and consternation within the GOL. The companies are analyzing their exposure; the GOL is misinterpreting these developments as deliberate slights or, in the words of Obeidi, "a return to the era of sanctions." Both are waiting to see how section 1083 will be applied, hoping, of course, that it will not be. End comment.

REF: A) STATE 9463, B) GODFREY-FERGUSON EMAIL 02/12/08

CLASSIFIED BY: Chris Stevens, CDA, Embassy Tripoli, Department of State.
REASON: 1.4 (b), (d)

¶1.   (S) Per ref A, post has been working with the General People's Committee for Foreign Liaison and International Cooperation (MFA-equivalent) to coordinate ISN DAS Mahley's proposed visit to Libya February 17-20, in conjunction with a parallel visit by a U.K. team, to discuss chemical weapons-related issues, including modification of the Rabta plant conversion proposal, and missile issues related to replacement of Libya's SCUD-B missile force.

replacement of Libya's SCUD B missile force.

¶2. (S) As reported ref B, post received a diplomatic note February 12 indicating the GOL's position that tri-lateral U.S.-U.K.-Libya talks undertaken during the visit be restricted to chemical weapons issues and not/not include discussions of missile issues. MFA Americas Desk Director Muhammad Matari subsequently called P/E Chief Feb 13 and said that MFA Secretary for European Affairs Abdulati Obeidi had instructed that the proposed visit to the Rabta site (which was to include U.S., U.K., Italian, French and Russian representatives) and related trilateral U.S.-U.K.-Libya talks be postponed altogether. Conveying points from Obeidi, Matari said the GOL's initial proposal had been for a site visit to Rabta; the GOL was "not ready" for discussions on other issues and preferred that DAS Mahley's be postponed. Post subsequently received a diplomatic note formally conveying the GOL's points (text below at para 5).

¶3. (S) U.K. Ambassador Sir Vincent Fean told CDA February 13 that in his meeting with Obeidi earlier the same day, Obeidi underscored that the GOL was "keen" to facilitate a technical visit focused on the Rabta facility and modification of the enclosure surrounding it. Obeidi told Fean the U.S. then requested that the scope of the visit be broadened to include other TSCC-related issues, which the GOL was not prepared to discuss at this time. (Note: The U.K. request to the GOL for trilateral meetings separate from the Rabta site visit actually pre-dated our request. End note.) Pressed by Fean, Obeidi said Libya was not ready to discuss WMD and missiles with the UK and U.S. "while other issues were still outstanding". Fean interpreted Obeidi's remark to be a reference to the terrorism-related legal claims against Libya in the United States and recent legislation (section 1083 of the 2008 National Defense Authorization Act, aka the "Lautenberg amendment") making it easier for U.S. plaintiffs to seize Libyan government assets in such cases.

¶4. (S) Comment: The GOL's cancellation of the ISN visit and Obeidi's remarks to Fean are a clear signal of dissatisfaction with U.S. terrorism-related lawsuits against Libya (i.e., La Belle, UTA, Pan Am 103) and the passage and signing into law of the "Lautenberg amendment." End comment.

¶5. (S/NF) Begin text of diplomatic note:

The General People's Committee for Foreign Liaison and International Cooperation (International Organizations Office) presents its compliments to the U.S. Embassy in the Great Jamahiriya and, referring to the Embassy's note #092/08 dated February 4, 2008 regarding a prospective visit to Libya by a U.S.-U.K. team February 17-19, 2008 to conduct trilateral talks on the implementation of the Chemical Weapons Prohibition Convention (CWPC) and to visit the Rabta plant, has the honor to inform the esteemed Embassy of the postponement of this visit to a later date that will be arranged in diplomatic channels.

The GPCFLIC avails itself of this opportunity to renew to the esteemed U.S. Embassy the assurances of its highest consideration.

Tripoli, Libya

¶1. (S) Summary: An Iranian delegation led by First Vice-President Davoudi, the highest ranking Iranian official to visit in 25 years, recently concluded a number of cooperation agreements in Tripoli. In public remarks, GOL officials expressed support for a peaceful Iranian nuclear program and characterized Iranian and Libyan views on Iraq, Israel-Palestine and Lebanon as "identical", apparently contradicting what Foreign Minister Shalgham told interlocutors during his recent visit to Washington. Private readouts suggest that both Leader Muammar al-Qadhafi and Foreign Minister Abdulrahman Shalgham told Davoudi that the GOL opposes a third sanctions resolution on Iran, contradicting Shalgham's assurances to Washington interlocutors. Public and private readouts suggest Iran is particularly focused on joint investment activity and cooperation between the two sides' central banks, a potentially worrying development. End summary.

HIGHEST LEVEL IRANIAN VISIT IN 25 YEARS

¶2. (U) Iran's First Vice-President, Pervez Davoudi, headed a high-level Iranian delegation that visited Tripoli December 26-27 under the auspices of the twelth session of the joint Libya-Iran Economic Commission. Press reports indicate that Davoudi is the highest ranking Iranian official to visit Libya in 25 years. Iran's Minister for Housing and Urban Planning, Mohamed Saidi Kia, and Minister of Economy and Finance, Davoud Danesh-Jafari, accompanied Davoudi.

PUBLIC SUPPORT FOR IRAN'S NUCLEAR PROGRAM; U.S. SHOULD WITHDRAW FROM IRAQ

¶3. (SBU) Libya's state-controlled media focused on Iran's nuclear program - emphasizing its right to pursue peaceful uses of atomic energy - and economic cooperation. In his public remarks, Prime Minister al-Baghdadi al-Mahmoudi stressed Libya's support for Iran's "legal and principled stands on its peaceful nuclear activities". Al-Mahmoudi noted publicly that Libya and Iran share the view that the U.S. "occupation" of Iraq has destabilized the region. Echoing Davoudi's remarks, he expressed support for Iraq's territorial integrity and its people and called for the prompt withdrawal of U.S. forces, a subject he said featured prominently in the two sides' private discussions. In remarks carried in the Libyan press, Foreign Minister Abdulrahman Shalgham said the GOL and Iran share "identical" views on Iraq, Israel-Palestine and Lebanon. (Note: Contradicting what we understand Shalgham conveyed to U/S Burns and NEA A/S Welch during his meetings with them January 3 in Washington. End note.)

QADHAFI FOCUSES ON UNSC SANCTIONS ON IRAN ...

¶4. (S) Citing a readout from Iranian DCM Mohammed Hossein Mirzaee, Egyptian Charge d'Affaires Ahmed Abdel-Halim told A/DCM January 6 that Davoudi's visit to Tripoli was a follow-on to Libyan PM al-Mahmoudi's stop in Tehran in May 2007. Mirzaee confirmed that Davoudi met with Leader Muammar al-Qadhafi, clarifying conflicting press accounts as to whether such had occurred. According to Mirzaee, al-Qadhafi and Davoudi discussed further possible sanctions on Iran in light of Libya's current UNSC Presidency. Al-Qadhafi reportedly assured Davoudi that Libya opposes a third sanctions resolution on Iran. According to Mirzaee, Shalgham took the same position in his discussions with Davoudi. (Note: Contradicting what we understand Shalgham told U/S Burns in Washington January 3, and agreeing with what we understand he told U.K. Foreign Secretary David Miliband in London January 7 (reftel). End note.)

¶5. (S) Mirzaee stressed to his Egyptian interlocutor that neither al-Qadhafi nor Shalgham had offered to play a role in mediating between Iran and the USG and international community on the nuclear file. (Note: Again, contradicting what we understand Shalgham told U/S Burns on January 3. End note.) According to Mirzaee, Libya's experience is not analogous to Iran's because Libya had WMD aspirations, while Iran maintains that it only seeks civilian applications of nuclear technology.

... AND ON IRAQ, ISRAEL-PALESTINE & IMAM MUSA SADR CASE

¶6. (C) Qadhafi reportedly spent considerable time denouncing the U.S. "occupation" of Iraq and continuing Israeli "aggression" against Palestinians. He apparently treated Davoudi to a lengthy discourse on his "Isratine" proposal for a one-state solution to the Israeli-Palestinian conflict. Echoing Shalgham's public remarks, Qadhafi reportedly assured Davoudi that the GOL shares Iran's views on Iraq, Israel-Palestine and Lebanon.

¶7. (C) Qadhafi reportedly raised with Davoudi the case of Lebanese Shi'a cleric Imam Musa Sadr, who disappeared during a visit to Libya in August 1978. Qadhafi reportedly complained that Lebanese officials had recently raised the case again and asked for Iran's assistance in smoothing over the issue. (Note: Lebanese-Libyan official relations have remain strained since Sadr's disappearance. End note.) Noting that Iran and Libya have a "separate channel" for dealing with the contentious issue of Sadr's disappearance, Mirzaee stressed to Abdel-Halim that Iran tries to limit the extent to which the matter bears on bilateral Iran-Libya relations. Mirzaee complained that Lebanon's insistence on pursuing the matter has periodically led to Iranian-Lebanese contretemps.

10 AGREEMENTS SIGNED; JOINT BANKING, INVESTMENT AGREEMENTS KEY

¶8. (U) During the visit, the two sides announced they would soon establish a joint political committee at the ministerial level and signed 10 agreements and memoranda of understanding (MOU's) covering investment, banking, higher education, maritime transport, fishing, tourism cultural exchanges and media cooperation. Two key MOU's provide a framework for cooperation between the central banks of Libya and Iran and the establishment of a joint investment entity by Libya's National Investment Promotion Office and its Iranian counterpart. Shalgham emphasized the expectation that the activities of the joint political committee would facilitate greater Iranian participation in Libya's economic development, particularly in the areas of finance and infrastructure development. Claiming that expansion of ties with African countries is a key Iranian foreign policy priority, Davoudi nonetheless stressed that economic and other, unspecified, Libyan-Iranian cooperation would also extend to Central Asia and Latin America.

INVESTMENT, FINANCE KEY FROM IRAN'S PERSPECTIVE

¶9. (C) Mirzaee told Abdel-Halim that from Iran's perspective the most significant agreement was that which established a joint Libyan-Iranian investment entity, to be capitalized with money via each country's central bank, for investments in Africa, Central Asia and Latin America. Iran also viewed increased cooperation between the two sides' central banks as an important development, in part because Iran's access to international banking and finance has become increasingly difficult.

¶10. (S) Comment: The apparent disconnect between Shalgham's public and private comments in Tripoli and what he said in Washington is troubling, the more so since the readout from his meeting with U.K. FS Miliband seems to corroborate reports here that the GOL opposes further sanctions against Iran. Iranian officials' emphasis on joint investment projects and central bank cooperation is an interesting and potentially worrying development that Post will continue to track. End comment.

SUBJECT: EXTREMISM IN EASTERN LIBYA

TRIPOLI 00000120 001.2 OF 004

CLASSIFIED BY: Chris Stevens, CDA, Embassy Tripoli, Dept of State.
REASON: 1.4 (b), (d)

¶1. (C) Summary: A U.S.-Libyan dual national who regularly visits family members in eastern Libya recently described for us social, political and economic factors that have contributed to and facilitated participation by a disproportionately large number of eastern Libya's native sons in "martyrdom acts" and other insurgency operations in Libya and Iraq. A reportedly deliberate GOL policy to keep the east poor as a means by which to limit the potential political threat to Qadhafi's regime has helped fuel the perception among many young eastern Libyan men that they have nothing to lose by participating in extremist violence at home and in Iraq. The prospect of financial compensation for their impoverished families motivates some, but local pride in eastern Libya's historical role as a locus of opposition to occupying forces of various stripes is also an important factor. The fact that eastern Libyan mosques are more numerous and remote, together with tight local social networks, has reportedly circumscribed the ability of GOL security organizations to monitor and control the activities of radical imams as effectively as elsewhere in Libya. Unlike the rest of the country, sermons in eastern Libyan mosques are laced with phraseology urging worshippers to support jihad in Iraq and elsewhere through direct participation or financial contributions. While senior regime figures, including Saif al-Islam al-Qadhafi, appear to have recognized that the east merits more attention and investment, the reported ability of radical imams to propagate messages urging support for and participation in jihad despite GOL security organizations' efforts suggests that claims by senior GOL officials that the east is under control may be overstated. End summary.

¶2. (S/NF) In a meeting February 5, U.S.-Libyan dual national Omar Turbi (strictly protect) told P/E Chief that eastern Libya remains a locus of extremist activity over which GOL security services have comparatively limited control. Turbi is a U.S.-based businessman who was born and raised in Libya, and who has visited Libya about a dozen times in each of the past four years. Much of his immediate and extended family live in and around Benghazi and Derna; he visited both cities four times during the past calendar year.

GOL KEEPS EAST POOR TO KEEP IT POLITICALLY DISENFRANCHISED ...

¶3. (S/NF) Turbi said eastern Libya suffers from a disproportionately high level of unemployment, particularly for young men between the ages of 18 and 34. "At least half" of the young men in that demographic are unemployed or only intermittently employed. The situation reflects in part the Qadhafi regime's belief that if it keeps the east poor enough, it will be unable to mount any serious political opposition to the regime. Explaining the rationale, he cited a Libyan proverb: "If you treat them like dogs, they will follow you like dogs".

... BUT RECENT VIOLENCE SUGGESTS GOL'S APPROACH FLAWED

¶4. (S/NF) Turbi said recent events in Benghazi and Derna suggest that the GOL's premise is flawed. Family members with whom he is in regular contact by email and telephone told him during his visit there in December that there were violent clashes between local extremists and GOL elements late last year. In one incident, extremists opened fire in proximity to a Benghazi hospital in connection with their attempts to secure medical assistance for a sick or injured comrade. In another, there was an explosion or an exchange of gunfire (accounts differed among his relatives) at a traffic circle in a Benghazi exurb in connection with an attempt by a police officer to stop a vehicle being used by extremists. (Note: Both incidents were reported late last year in other channels. This is the first mention we've heard of these events from other sources. End note.) Turbi's relatives also offered non-specific accounts of raids by extremists, whom they understood to be affiliated with the Libyan Islamic Fighting Group, on police and military installations to secure weapons.

"NOTHING TO LOSE"

¶5. (S/NF) Citing conversations with relatives, Turbi said the unemployed, disenfranchised young men of eastern Libya "have nothing to lose" and are therefore "willing to sacrifice themselves" for something greater than themselves by engaging in extremism in the name of religion. "Their lives mean nothing and they know it, so they seek to give meaning to their existence through their deaths", he said. The lack of jobs and dim prospects for future employment, together with increased costs of living, mean that many young men lack the means to marry, leaving them without a key measure of social status and stability in what remains a traditional society. As in parts of neighboring Egypt, the average age at which men marry has increased in many parts of eastern Libya. Many now marry in their early to mid-30's, which would have been considered "middle age" in the not too distant past.

COMPENSATION FOR MARTYRS' FAMILIES AN INCENTIVE FOR SOME

¶6. (S/NF) Turbi flatly stated that some young men, particularly those from more impoverished clans, are motivated by the promise of long-term financial compensation for their families should they complete "martyrdom acts" in Iraq or elsewhere. Noting that incomes in the east are low, he offered that extremist networks are able to incentivize young men to kill themselves by offering comparatively small payments of 150-200 Libyan dinar/month (approximately 120-160 USD/month) to families of "martyrs". (Note: As a point of reference, most government salaries range from 250 to 330 Libyan dinar per month. End note.)

"PERVERSE PRIDE" AS GEOGRAPHICAL LOCUS OF RESISTANCE A DRAW FOR OTHERS

¶7. (S/NF) The fact that the east has been comparatively disenfranchised, together with its historical role as a locus of opposition to the Ottoman and Italian occupations, contribute to a "perverse sense of pride" among eastern Libyans in their role as a main supplier of young men for jihad efforts in Iraq and elsewhere, Turbi said. He recounted a large dinner in Derna hosted by a family friend that he attended in summer 2007. Conversation among the mostly middle-aged male group of guests focused on news that two young men from Derna had recently killed themselves in suicide operations in Iraq. Dinner guests offered a mix of "condolences and congratulations" to the two young men's relatives.

¶8. (S/NF) Turbi said he was struck by the level sentiment against Coalition forces in Iraq, and by the obvious pride the dinner guests took in the fact that two of their native sons had "struck a blow" against "occupying Crusader forces in Iraq". He emphasized that the dinner was one of the relatively few occasions in Libya in which he felt uncomfortable by dint of having U.S. citizenship. In Turbi's view, eastern Libyans are not necessarily anti-American, but are strongly opposed to a U.S. military presence in Iraq or any other Muslim country. In the 1980's, the talk had been directed against the Soviet occupation of Afghanistan; now, it was focused on the U.S. presence in Iraq.

¶9. (S/NF) Noting that the leader of Libya's resistance against the Italian occupation in the early 20th century, national hero Omar Mukhtar, was from the eastern village of Janzour, Turbi cautioned that it would be a mistake to think that young men from Derna were motivated to undertake suicide operations in Iraq solely by unemployment and the chance to secure a stipend for their families The region had a long, proud history of opposing occupation forces of one stripe or another; its residents took pride in their willingness to "fight for justice and their faith" despite their relative poverty.

IRAQ SEEN AS A "LOCAL" ISSUE FOR YOUNG EASTERN LIBYANS

¶10. (S/NF) Turbi noted that for many young eastern men, jihad in Iraq was perceived to be a local issue. Among the factors fueling that perception, he pointed to the proselytizing influence of Libyan fighters who had fought in Afghanistan and now recruited young eastern Libyans for operations in Iraq, the influence of Arabic-language satellite television broadcasts, use of the Internet to exchange information and coordinate logistics, and the comparative ease of travel to/from Iraq. During his last visit to the east in December, relatives and friends cited media reports to the effect that Libyans, most of them from Derna and points east, comprised the second largest cohort of foreign fighters identified in documents seized during last September's Objective Massey operation on the Syria-Iraq border. Turbi noted that a majority of those in Derna who raised the issue appeared to take pride in the fact that their small city had contributed disproportionately to the jihad against coalition forces in Iraq.

"CODED" MOSQUE SERMONS MORE RADICAL IN EAST

¶11. (S/NF) Turbi partly attributed the fierce mindset in Benghazi and Derna to the message preached by imams in eastern Libyan mosques, which he said is markedly more radical than that heard in other parts of the country. Turbi makes a point of frequenting mosques whenever he visits Libya as a means to connect with neighbors and relatives and take the political pulse. Sermons in eastern mosques, particularly the Friday 'khutba', are laced with "coded phrases" urging worshippers to support jihad in Iraq and elsewhere through direct participation or financial contributions. The language is often ambiguous enough to be plausibly denied, he said, but for devout Muslims it is clear, incendiary and unambiguously supportive of jihad. Direct and indirect references to "martyrdom operations" were not uncommon. By contrast with mosques in Tripoli and elsewhere in the country, where references to jihad are extremely rare, in Benghazi and Derna they are fairly frequent subjects.

ARCHITECTURE, GEOGRAPHY COMPLICATE GOL CONTROL OF EASTERN MOSQUES

¶12. (S/NF) Part of the difficulty for GOL authorities in controlling eastern mosques is that the most zealous imams tend to preach in small suburban and rural mosques. He mentioned the almost festive atmosphere of one trip, when relatives gathered to travel to a remote rural mosque to hear a "controversial" imam's sermon. Unlike Tripoli, mosques in the east tend to be smaller and more numerous, making it harder to monitor all of them. Architecture and local heritage also play a role: many mosques in the east don't physically resemble traditional mosques elsewhere in the country, reflecting in part the pseudo-secret tradition of the Sanussi lodges that evolved in eastern Libya in the mid-19th century. The fact that many eastern mosques are less readily identifiable make it harder for GOL security organizations to identify them and easier to hold unobserved meetings and sermons, Turbi said. He claimed that it is "widely known" in the east that mosques in town centers are more closely monitored by GOL security organizations; however, it has been more difficult for security organizations to monitor smaller, more remote mosques in exurbs and towns around Benghazi and Derna.

AS DO TIGHT FAMILY, SOCIAL CIRCLES

¶13. (S/NF) Citing conversations with relatives, Turbi said it is "common knowledge" that GOL security organizations attempt to

"common knowledge" that GOL security organizations attempt to monitor mosque sermons and activities, particularly Friday 'khutba' sermons. (Note: In Tripoli and other parts of the country, an officially-sanctioned Friday 'khutba' theme and talking point-equivalents are distributed to mosques, often by facsimile. End note.) In addition to the proliferation of smaller, less visible mosques, the ability of security organizations to effectively monitor eastern Libyan mosques is circumscribed by the comparatively tight social and familial structure. Communities in the east tend to be smaller and more tightly knit; outsiders are easier to spot and families "watch out" for members who may have been turned by GOL security organizations to report on the activities of their relatives and neighbors.

¶14. (S/NF) Turbi related the story of a young man from Derna who was recently suspected of reporting to GOL security organizations on who attended his local mosque and what was said there. The alleged informant was ostracized by his fellow worshippers, townsmen and even family members. After losing his job, reportedly in part because of his "treachery", he fled to Egypt and has not been heard from since.

¶15. (S/NF) Comment: Turbi's account affords a relatively rare insider's look at the social, political and economic factors in eastern Libya that have contributed to and facilitated participation by a disproportionately large number of its native sons in "martyrdom acts" and other insurgency operations in Iraq. Conventional wisdom holds that the east is poorer and more disenfranchised in part by deliberate design; however, senior GOL officials have recently made a point of spending more time and investing more effort there. Saif al-Islam al-Qadhafi, the regime's most public face of political and economic reform, chose to hold the first and second meetings of his annual Youth Forum in Benghazi in 2006 and 2007, and gave important addresses to large crowds there. In the run-up to both events, he spent considerable time in and around Benghazi, promoting economic and social development projects under the auspices of the ostensibly non-governmental Qadhafi Development Foundation, which he heads. Among them was a billion dollar-plus "green" project for development of an environmentally-friendly tourism/business zone adjacent to the Graeco-Roman ruins at Cyrene, near Benghazi. Work on an extensive renovation of Benghazi's port, designed to help rejuvenate shipping volume and create local jobs, also continues. The most troubling and difficult aspect of Turbi's account is the pride that many eastern Libyans, particularly those in and around Derna, appear to take in the role their native sons have played in the insurgency in Iraq. The reported ability of radical imams to propagate messages urging support for and participation in jihad despite GOL security organizations' efforts suggests that claims by senior GOL officials that the east is under control may be overstated. End comment.

¶1. (SBU) In a move that adds momentum to Libya's promising banking reform efforts, the Libyan Central Bank announced that the Jordan-based Arab Bank won the tendering process to buy 19 percent of Libya's Wahda Bank. According to press reports, Arab Bank's winning bid of 210 million euros ($310 million) easily outstripped the second highest bid of 121 million euros ($180 million) by Bahrain-based Arab Banking Corporation. Other short-listed bidders falling short of the mark were Morocco's Attijariwafa Bank, Italy's Intesa Sanpaolo. and French bank Societe Generale (Note: Societe Generale announced its withdrawal from the competition on February 12 for undisclosed reasons; Econoff subsequently learned the bank was uncomfortable with elements of the shareholding agreement. End Note). According to a fact sheet issued by Libya's Central Bank, Wahda Bank is the country's second largest commercial bank in terms of total loan portfolio, with a market share of over 20%. It is the fifth largest commercial bank in terms of total assets, with 1.7 billion euros ($2.6 billion) and 71 branches throughout the country.

¶2. (SBU) The shares obtained by Arab Bank were previously owned by the Libyan Economic and Social Development Fund (ESDF), which held 73 percent of Wahda before the sale. With this sale, the ESDF still has a majority stake of 54 percent, but Arab Bank will assume management control of Wahda. The remaining Wahda shares are currently held by the Libyan Central Bank (14 percent) and a collection of Libyan investors and companies (13 percent). Under the terms of its purchase, Arab Bank will have the right to eventually raise its stake in Wahda Bank to 51 percent over the next three to five years.

¶3. (SBU) Comment: This sale marks the second successful privatization of a Libyan commercial bank, following a similar deal struck with France's BNP Paribas in its purchase of a 19 percent stake in Sahara Bank in September 2007 (reftel). The Central Bank continues to draw on foreign expertise for pushing through its banking reform strategy, with McKinsey and Company (strategic advisor), Rothschild (financial advisor), Baker and McKenzie (legal) and KPMG (accountants) all playing substantial roles. With the privatizations of Wahda and Sahara well in hand, the next target for the Central Bank will be solidifying its December 2007 merger of the state-owned Jamahiriya and Umma Banks into a single entity, the Libyan Bank. End comment.

REASON: 1.4 (B), (D)

\n¶1. (S) Summary: An Iranian delegation led by First \n
Vice-President Davoudi, the highest ranking Iranian official to \n visit in 25 years, recently concluded a number of cooperation \n agreements in Tripoli. In public remarks, GOL officials \n expressed support for a peaceful Iranian nuclear program and \n characterized Iranian and Libyan views on Iraq, Israel-Palestine \n and Lebanon as "identical", apparently contradicting what \n Foreign Minister Shalgham told interlocutors during his recent \n visit to Washington. Private readouts suggest that both Leader \n Muammar al-Qadhafi and Foreign Minister Abdulrahman Shalgham \n told Davoudi that the GOL opposes a third sanctions resolution \n on Iran, contradicting Shalgham's assurances to Washington \n interlocutors. Public and private readouts suggest Iran is \n particularly focused on joint investment activity and \n cooperation between the two sides' central banks, a potentially \n worrying development. End summary.

HIGHEST LEVEL IRANIAN VISIT IN 25 YEARS

¶2. (U) Iran's First Vice-President, Pervez Davoudi, headed a \n high-level Iranian delegation that visited Tripoli December \n 26-27 under the auspices of the twelth session of the joint \n
Libya-Iran Economic Commission. Press reports indicate that \n Davoudi is the highest ranking Iranian official to visit Libya \n in 25 years. Iran's Minister for Housing and Urban Planning, \n Mohamed Saidi Kia, and Minister of Economy and Finance, Davoud \n Danesh-Jafari, accompanied Davoudi.

PUBLIC SUPPORT FOR IRAN'S NUCLEAR PROGRAM; U.S. SHOULD WITHDRAW \n
FROM IRAQ

¶3. (SBU) Libya's state-controlled media focused on Iran's \n nuclear program - emphasizing its right to pursue peaceful uses \n of atomic energy - and economic cooperation. In his public \n remarks, Prime Minister al-Baghdadi al-Mahmoudi stressed Libya's \n support for Iran's "legal and principled stands on its peaceful \n nuclear activities". Al-Mahmoudi noted publicly that Libya and \n Iran share the view that the U.S. "occupation" of Iraq has \n destabilized the region. Echoing Davoudi's remarks, he \n expressed support for Iraq's territorial integrity and its \n people and called for the prompt withdrawal of U.S. forces, a \n subject he said featured prominently in the two sides' private \n discussions. In remarks carried in the Libyan press, Foreign \n Minister Abdulrahman Shalgham said the GOL and Iran share \n "identical" views on Iraq, Israel-Palestine and Lebanon. (Note: \n Contradicting what we understand Shalgham conveyed to U/S Burns \n and NEA A/S Welch during his meetings with them January 3 in \n Washington. End note.)

QADHAFI FOCUSES ON UNSC SANCTIONS ON IRAN ...

¶4. (S) Citing a readout from Iranian DCM Mohammed Hossein \n
Mirzaee, Egyptian Charge d'Affaires Ahmed Abdel-Halim told A/DCM \n
January 6 that Davoudi's visit to Tripoli was a follow-on to \n Libyan PM al-Mahmoudi's stop in Tehran in May 2007. Mirzaee \n confirmed that Davoudi met with Leader Muammar al-Qadhafi, \n clarifying conflicting press accounts as to whether such had \n occurred. According to Mirzaee, al-Qadhafi and Davoudi \n discussed further possible sanctions on Iran in light of Libya's \n current UNSC Presidency. Al-Qadhafi reportedly assured Davoudi \n that Libya opposes a third sanctions resolution on Iran. \n According to Mirzaee, Shalgham took the same position in his \n discussions with Davoudi. (Note: Contradicting what we \n understand Shalgham told U/S Burns in Washington January 3, and \n agreeing with what we understand he told U.K. Foreign Secretary \n David Miliband in London January 7 (reftel). End note.)

¶5. (S) Mirzaee stressed to his Egyptian interlocutor that \n neither al-Qadhafi nor Shalgham had offered to play a role in \n mediating between Iran and the USG and international community \n on the nuclear file. (Note: Again, contradicting what we \n understand Shalgham told U/S Burns on January 3. End note.) \n

According to Mirzaee, Libya's experience \n is not analogous to Iran's because Libya had WMD aspirations, \n while Iran maintains that it only seeks civilian applications of \n nuclear technology.

... AND ON IRAQ, ISRAEL-PALESTINE & IMAM MUSA SADR CASE

¶6. (C) Qadhafi reportedly spent considerable time denouncing the \n U.S. "occupation" of Iraq and continuing Israeli "aggression" \n against Palestinians. He apparently treated Davoudi to a \n lengthy discourse on his "Isratine" proposal for a one-state \n \n
TRIPOLI 00000012 002.2 OF 002 \n \n
\n solution to the Israeli-Palestinian conflict. Echoing \n Shalgham's public remarks, Qadhafi reportedly assured Davoudi \n that the GOL shares Iran's views on Iraq, Israel-Palestine and \n Lebanon.

¶7. (C) Qadhafi reportedly raised with Davoudi the case of \n Lebanese Shi'a cleric Imam Musa Sadr, who disappeared during a \n visit to Libya in August 1978. Qadhafi reportedly complained \n that Lebanese officials had recently raised the case again and \n asked for Iran's assistance in smoothing over the issue. (Note: \n
Lebanese-Libyan official relations have remain strained since \n Sadr's disappearance. End note.) Noting that Iran and Libya \n have a "separate channel" for dealing with the contentious issue \n of Sadr's disappearance, Mirzaee stressed to Abdel-Halim that \n Iran tries to limit the extent to which the matter bears on \n bilateral Iran-Libya relations. Mirzaee complained that \n Lebanon's insistence on pursuing the matter has periodically led \n to Iranian-Lebanese contretemps.

10 AGREEMENTS SIGNED; JOINT BANKING, INVESTMENT AGREEMENTS KEY

¶8. (U) During the visit, the two sides announced they would soon \n establish a joint political committee at the ministerial level \n and signed 10 agreements and memoranda of understanding (MOU's) \n covering investment, banking, higher education, maritime \n transport, fishing, tourism cultural exchanges and media \n cooperation. Two key MOU's provide a framework for cooperation \n between the central banks of Libya and Iran and the \n establishment of a joint investment entity by Libya's National \n Investment Promotion Office and its Iranian counterpart. \n Shalgham emphasized the expectation that the activities of the \n joint political committee would facilitate greater Iranian \n participation in Libya's economic development, particularly in \n the areas of finance and infrastructure development. Claiming \n that expansion of ties with African countries is a key Iranian \n foreign policy priority, Davoudi nonetheless stressed that \n economic and other, unspecified, Libyan-Iranian cooperation \n would also extend to Central Asia and Latin America.

INVESTMENT, FINANCE KEY FROM IRAN'S PERSPECTIVE

¶9. (C) Mirzaee told Abdel-Halim that from Iran's perspective the \n most significant agreement was that which established a joint \n Libyan-Iranian investment entity, to be capitalized with money \n via each country's central bank, for investments in Africa, \n Central Asia and Latin America. Iran also viewed increased \n cooperation between the two sides' central banks as an important \n development, in part because Iran's access to international \n banking and finance has become increasingly difficult.

¶10. (S) Comment: The apparent disconnect between Shalgham's \n public and private comments in Tripoli and what he said in \n Washington is troubling, the more so since the readout from his \n meeting with U.K. FS Miliband seems to corroborate reports here \n that the GOL opposes further sanctions against Iran. Iranian \n officials' emphasis on joint investment projects and central \n bank cooperation is an interesting and potentially worrying \n development that Post will continue to track. End comment. \n

SUBJECT: LIBYA: REQUEST FOR ACCESS TO REPATRIATED GUANTANAMO DETAINEES

REF: A) STATE 14270 , B) USG-GOL DETAINEE TRANSFER MOU DEC 11, 2006, C) TRIPOLI 1060, D) STATE 163691, E) TRIPOLI 723

CLASSIFIED BY: Chris Stevens, CDA, U.S. Embassy Tripoli, Dept of State.
REASON: 1.4 (b), (d)

¶1. (S/NF) The CDA and P/E Chief conveyed ref A points to Dr. Yusuf Sawani, Executive Director of the Qadhafi Development Foundation, February 19. CDA underscored that it is important that the GOL abide by the assurances it provided to the U.S. regarding treatment of and access to repatriated detainees under the rubric of the USG-GOL Detainee Transfer MOU (ref B).

¶2. (S/NF) Points below are keyed to ref A tasking points:

-- REGULAR VISITS: Citing the cultural difficulty of keeping any sort of regular schedule in Libya, Sawani threw cold water on the idea of establishing a schedule for regular visits. He stressed that Emboffs could meet with the two returned detainees (Muhammad Abdallah Mansur al-Rimi , ISN 194 , and Ben Qumu Abu (Muhammad Abdallah Mansur al Kimi, ISN 194, and Ben Qumu Abu Sufian Ibrahim Ahmed Hamouda, ISN 557) whenever it was "possible and appropriate". Clarifying, he assured the CDA that the QDF and GOL would facilitate timely access, claiming that visits could be arranged with as little as a day's notice.

-- FAMILY/COUNSEL ACCESS: Responding to the CDA's point encouraging access by counsel and family members to the detainees, Sawani noted that Hamouda (ISN 557) had enjoyed a lengthy family visit within 48 hours of the CDA's meeting with him in December (ref C).

-- LEGAL BASIS FOR DETENTION: Sawani said he was not sure what the legal basis for the continued incarceration of the returned detainees is. He explained that, in general, if a detainee was wanted on specific charges under Libyan law, he would be detained and debriefed by security organizations, and then transferred to judicial authorities to face legal charges. He suggested that if a detainee was not wanted on specific charges under Libyan law, he could be released. He agreed to request that designated Watchdog Committee counterpart Muhammad Tarnesh, Executive Director of the Human Rights Society of Libya, follow up with security officials at the facility at which the detainees are being held to query them regarding the charges against them. He further suggested that P/E Chief, Post's Watchdog Committee representative, contact Tarnesh directly to coordinate follow up. Post is in contact with Tarnesh, who is working to coordinate a meeting with security officials.

-- S/WCI TEAM VISIT: Sawani's comments strongly suggest that dispatching a team to assist in discussions concerning routine access to detainees would not/not be helpful. Post does not recommend such a visit.

SUBJECT: QADHAFI TELLS MUBARAK HE "MAY" SEEK TO ATTEND UNSC IN NEW YORK

TRIPOLI 00000014 001.2 OF 002

CLASSIFIED BY: John T. Godfrey, A/DCM, Embassy Tripoli, Dept of State.
REASON: 1.4 (b), (d)

¶1. (C) Summary: During a visit to Cairo January 1, Leader Muammar al-Qadhafi reportedly discussed his recent trip to Paris and Madrid, Darfur, the repatriation of 24 Egyptians currently on death row in Libya, and the possibility that he may seek to travel to New York to attend a session of the United Nations Security Council. End summary.

QADHAFI SEES EUROPEAN COMMERCIAL CONTRACTS AS POLITICAL SYMBOLS

¶2. (C) Egyptian Charge d'Affaires Ahmed Abdel-Halim told A/DCM January 6 that al-Qadhafi's visit was overdue, noting that President Mubarak had visited Libya three times in 2007 (in January, May and September) and three times in 2006. Qadhafi gave Mubarak a readout on his visits to Paris and Madrid in December. Abdel-Halim's information was that Qadhafi emphasized the importance of commercial contracts and agreements concluded during the trip, stressing their value as a tangible symbol of Libya's reintegration into the international community after the lifting of sanctions and removal from the list of state sponsors of terrorism.

DARFUR - INTERNATIONAL INVOLVEMENT HINDERS RATHER THAN HELPS

¶3. (C) Mubarak and Qadhafi also discussed the situation in Darfur at length. Reading from an Egyptian MFA report on the trip, Abdel-Halim said Mubarak had tried to persuade al-Qadhafi that the latter's recent remarks criticizing the "internationalization" of the conflict (a reference to external mediation and deployment of the hybrid AU-UN peacekeeping force) were not helpful. Al-Qadhafi apparently maintained his argument that the conflict was "merely tribal" and could be resolved more quickly absent international mediation. Mubarak and al-Qadhafi reviewed 1,200 Egyptian troops set to deploy to Darfur to join the AU-UN hybrid peacekeeping force.

GOL DRAGS FEET ON REPATRIATING EGYPTIAN PRISONERS

¶4. (C) Mubarak asked that 24 Egyptians sentenced to death by Libyan courts for various crimes be repatriated to Egypt. Abdel-Halim explained that families of the victims of crimes perpetrated by the 24 had accepted "blood money". Under Libyan law, their death penalty sentences were commuted to 25-year prison sentences; Egyptian-Libyan bilateral legal cooperation agreements provided for the return of such prisoners to their home country to serve out their sentences, but the GOL had balked at effecting their transfer. Abdel-Halim said the issue has been widely covered in Egyptian press and is seen by the GOL as a bilateral irritant. Mubarak raised it during his September 2007 visit to Libya and was assured that the GOL would follow up; however, Qadhafi denied knowledge of the issue during his recent trip and asked for more time to "study" it, angering Mubarak. Abdel-Halim noted the GOE's irritation with increased Libyan "arrogance" in bilateral dealings, which it attributes to increased oil prices and the GOL's perception that its hand has been strengthened.

BROTHER LEADER TO VISIT THE BIG APPLE?

¶5. (C) Reading again from a report from Cairo, Abdel-Halim said Mubarak and al-Qadhafi discussed UNSC issues, particularly a possible third sanctions resolution against Iran (NFI). According to Abdel-Halim, al-Qadhafi told Mubarak he "may" seek to travel to New York this month to attend sessions of the UNSC during Libya's month-long presidency. Post understands from Embassy Cairo that Arab League Chief of Staff Hisham Yousef told Poloff there that AL SYG Moussa urged al-Qadhafi in their meeting on January 1 to use Libya's seat on the UNSC to advocate for and represent broader Arab interests in the way Qatar had successfully done. Hisham expressed doubt that Libya would prove to be as dependable as Qatar in this regard. (Note: Consistent with Qadhafi's shift of attention from Arab to African issues, the GOL has stressed that it intends to focus on African, vice Arab issues, and will represent African consensus views. End note.)

¶6. (C) Comment: Post heard a number of rumors in the immediate aftermath of Qadhafi's visit to Cairo suggesting he might seek to travel to New York to attend sessions of the UNSC. Those seem to have diminished in the wake of Foreign Minister Shalgham's subsequent visit to Washington, suggesting that the mixed media reaction to Shalgham's visit may have given the GOL pause to consider whether now is really the right time for Qadhafi to seek to visit the U.S. End comment.

¶1. (C) In a meeting with MFA Americas Desk Director Muhammad Matari February 20, P/E Chief noted that there had so far been no official GOL reaction to Kosovo's recent announcement of independence and, echoing our previous demarches on the subject (refs B and C), urged the GOL to recognize Kosovo's independence. Matari confirmed that the GOL had made no public statement concerning Kosovo's independence. Matari said the GOL had deliberately delayed any public reaction, in part because Russia had, in its demarches on the subject (ref B), linked future cooperation on Russia-Libya arms sales to the GOL's position on Kosovo. (Comment: Russia is a major supplier of weapons to Libya. The GOL has often commented favorably on the ease with which it has been able to acquire Russian weapons systems by way of criticizing the comparatively labor-intensive process attendant to purchasing systems from the U.S. End comment.)

¶2. (U) Separately, Post translated into Arabic and forwarded to the MFA a copy of the White House press release containing the President's letter to the Kosovar president recognizing Kosovo's independence.

REASON: 1.4 (b), (d)

¶1. (C) Summary: An Embassy officer met with Libyan human rights activist Fathi el-Jahmi on February 20 at the government-run hospital in Tripoli where he has been held since July 2007. El-Jahmi said that he had suffered from a number of serious ailments when he was transferred from prison to the hospital ailments when he was transferred from prison to the hospital, and that his condition began to improve markedly only after doctors began providing the full range of medical care he required in December 2007. In January 2008, his son was permitted to visit him on three occasions -- the first family visitation he had been allowed in four years. He said he was not aware of any offer to release him to the care of his family, and underscored that he would not agree to remain silent about his political views as a condition for his release. The Embassy visit was arranged by the Qadhafi Development Foundation. End summary.

¶2. (C) Following up on CDA's request earlier in the week for Embassy access to Fathi el-Jahmi, Qadhafi Development Foundation (QDF) Executive Director Youssef Sawani called a meeting with P/E Chief February 20 to inform the Embassy that it could have a "quick, discreet visit" with el-Jahmi later that day. Noting that the decision to facilitate Embassy access to el-Jahmi was hotly debated within the GOL, Sawani stressed that Saif al-Islam al-Qadhafi, son of leader Muammar al-Qadhafi, personally intervened to argue that it would constitute an important gesture to the USG. The visit should be interpreted as "a clear reflection" of Said al-Islam's desire to keep U.S.-Libya bilateral relations on a positive course, he said.

MEETING WITH EL-JAHMI

¶3. (C) P/E Chief, together with Muhammad Tarnesh, Executive Director of the QDF-affiliated Human Rights Society of Libya, met briefly with el-Jahmi's treating physician, Dr. Abdulrahman Mehdy, and then spent nearly an hour with el-Jahmi at the Tripoli Medical Center (TMC) February 20. (Note: The TMC is considered one of the best hospitals in the country. Care at the facility, which features better-trained physicians and more diagnostic and laboratory equipment than other hospitals, is good by comparison with the relatively low standards of other medical facilities in Libya. End note.) Present in the room with el-Jahmi were Tarnesh, Mehdy and an individual who was identified as his nurse, Abdullah Bashir.

¶4. (C) El-Jahmi is housed alone in a clean, single-bed room that features a wash basin and private toilet facilities. The room was located in what appeared to be a less heavily-trafficked section of the hospital; however, other than a lock on the room door, there were no guards or other visible indications of extra security. El-Jahmi said he had been in the same room since being admitted to the TMC in late July 2007. Other than trips to the lab and other diagnostic centers in the TMC, he has not been allowed to leave his room. Noting that he has not been allowed to raise the blinds in his room, he complained that he has not seen natural sunlight since his admission.

INITIAL MEDICAL CONDITION AND TREATMENT

¶5. (C) Dr. Mehdy indicated that the el-Jahmi's condition was "severe" when he was transferred from the Abu Salim prison facility on Tripoli's outskirts to the TMC in late July 2007. At that time, el-Jahmi was hypertensive, had congestive heart failure and severe difficulty breathing, suffered from severe edema and diabetes, and had urological complications attendant to prostitis. El-Jahmi was unable to lie down because of his breathing difficulties (he could only sleep in a sitting position) and could not urinate because his groin had swelled so much due to edema. Mehdy stressed that he performed diagnostic exams and prescribed treatment (catheterization to alleviate the urological problem) immediately after el-Jahmi's admission. El-Jahmi received no further treatment until late December/early January.

CURRENT MEDICAL CONDITION AND PROGNOSIS

¶6. (C) El-Jahmi was clear-eyed, alert and lucid during the meeting. While clearly advanced in age and somewhat limited by his medical conditions (his breathing was observed to be a bit labored), he was animated and verbose. (Note: Muhammad el-Jahmi, Fathi's brother, described the latter as being virtually unable to speak during a family member's visit in January. End note.) El-Jahmi said treatment at the TMC, once administration of his prescribed medication commenced in late December/early January, had been very good and assessed that his condition had improved a great deal. Dr. Mehdy concurred, explaining that el-Jahmi's breathing has improved dramatically (he is now able to lie down), his edema has abated considerably (there is still some swelling in his legs), his blood sugar levels have normalized, and EKG tests show his heart function has improved significantly. (Note: Muhammad el-Jahmi, Fathi's brother, described the latter's legs as being extremely swollen during a family member's visit in January. End note.)

¶7. (C) Assessing el-Jahmi's prognosis, Dr. Mehdy said another EKG will be performed in several weeks to determine whether a coronary angiography will be needed to correct diminished capacity in the left ventricle of el-Jahmi's heart. He cautioned that el-Jahmi's overall condition, particularly his heart pumping capacity, is not strong enough at present for the procedure to be performed; at least two to three months of further treatment and recovery are needed. El-Jahmi is on a restricted, low-salt and low-sugar diet to moderate the effects of his diabetes; that condition appears to have stabilized but will require continued monitoring. Regarding el-Jahmi's urological issues, Dr. Mehdy has twice recommended to el-Jahmi that he have surgery for his prostate condition (once at the time of admission, and again in January). El-Jahmi has so far refused to consent to the procedure. (Note: Dr. Mehdy speculated that part of el-Jahmi's reluctance may be due to the fact that he has not been able to consult with his family. End note.) Dr. Mehdy clearly indicated that the TMC has the resources to provide all care needed to stabilize and/or treat el-Jahmi's conditions.

FAMILY VISITATION LIMITED

¶8. (C) El-Jahmi said he his eldest son had visited him three times on three consecutive days in January. Before that, it had been more than four years since his wife, four daughters and two other sons had been able to visit him. He complained that he does not have access to radio, television or reading materials, either at the prison at which he was previously detained or at the TMC. He complained that even his copy of the Koran had been confiscated in late January for reasons that were unclear to him.

LEGAL STATUS UNCERTAIN

¶9. (C) El-Jahmi said he had not been advised, formally or informally, that the GOL might release him to return home for further treatment, but said he "sensed" that the GOL's attitude concerning his case might be changing. (Comment: The QDF's Sawani emphasized to the CDA February 21 that the QDF has made it clear to the family that Fathi could be released to their care, but so far the family has not followed up on the offer, nor on the QDF's requests that they return to the hospital to visit Fathi. End comment.) El-Jahmi did not know whether the son who visited him or other family members have received any further information concerning his possible release. He did not know whether he would be able to travel abroad for treatment if he were released and noted that the GOL holds his passport. El-Jahmi said he understands he has been convicted under a Libyan law that criminalizes advocating a political position inconsistent with the 1969 revolution, and for defaming leader Muammar al-Qadhafi.

¶10. (C) Asked by P/E Chief whether [illegible] as has been suggested by ¶10. (C) Asked by P/E Chief whether -- as has been suggested by QDF -- he would be willing to agree to an "understanding" that he would remain silent about his detention or any political issues in exchange for the opportunity to return to his home, El-Jahmi repeatedly made it clear that he is not/not prepared to agree to that stipulation, or any other condition, to secure his release. He described himself as "a democratic man" and said he was unwilling to sacrifice his political beliefs to gain his release. Saying that his principal offense had been to criticize Qadhafi and his regime, he said the Libyan courts had ruled that he was mentally incompetent. Joking, he said the prevailing mentality in Libya is such that to criticize Qadhafi was considered the act of a madman.

COMMENT

¶11. (C) While we lack the expertise to comment on the adequacy of el-Jahmi's medical treatment, El-Jahmi himself reported that, at least as of December 2007, he has been receiving care that has led to an improvement in his health. As for his future, El-Jahmi, who appeared to be in full possession of his mental faculties, clearly expressed his intention to reject any deal the GOL might offer to allow him to return home in exchange for his silence. End comment.

¶1. (C) CDA delivered reftel demarche regarding the proposed US listing pursuant to UNSCR 1267 of Syria-based Badran al-Mazidih et al. to Deputy FM Mohamed Siala February 27. CDA requested that the GOL lift its hold on the US request, and asked for clarification of apparent GOL policy to place holds on any proposed listings with Arab names. Siala said the US request was clear, and took the point that a general GOL policy of placing holds in such cases would be odd, given that most al-Qaida-related listings would involve individuals with Arab names.

¶2. (C) Comment: Siala did not offer a substantive response to either request. We believe he will check with FM Shalgham, who is in Sirte this week in connection with the upcoming annual People's General Congress. End comment.

TRIPOLI 00000166 001.2 OF 004

CLASSIFIED BY: Chris Stevens, CDA, Embassy Tripoli, Department of State.
REASON: 1.4 (b), (d)

¶1. (C) Summary: The results of this year's General People's Congress (Parliament-equivalent), which commenced in Sirte on March 2, will be closely watched for signs that the Libyan leadership remains committed to economic reform and reengagement with the international community. Observers will also carefully weigh the expected new government's composition to gauge the relative positions of Saif al-Islam al-Qadhafi and his recently ascendant brother, Muatassim al-Qadhafi, the two sons of Leader Muammar al-Qadhafi who are widely considered to be rivals to succeed their father. Among the cabinet officers rumored to be candidates for replacement are the Prime Minister, the Foreign Minister, and several ministers in charge of domestic portfolios. End summary.

¶2. (C) Public media reports and private speculation among observers in Tripoli have focused considerable attention on the annual session of the General People's Congress (GPC - Parliament-equivalent), which commenced in Sirte on March 2, and the cabinet change expected to be announced at the event's conclusion. Leader Muammar al-Qadhafi launched this year's session with a lengthy speech in which he directed strong criticism at the government for failing to address the needs of the people. The last cabinet change, in January 2007 (ref A), was the second such shuffle in less than a year and was perceived to have shifted reform-minded individuals into key positions.

ECONOMIC REFORM AND POLITICAL SUCCESSION KEY ISSUES

¶3. (C) While changes of government are common, the expected upcoming shuffle will be parsed closely for two principal reasons. First, it will be viewed as a sign of senior GOL leaders' commitment to economic and limited attendant political reform. Appointment of a cabinet perceived to be "reformist" (in the Libyan context) would be seen as an important signal that the leadership intends to support a program of reform and further reintegrating of Libya into the international community after two-plus decades of relative isolation. Second, the shape of the new government may help define the relative influence and position of two of Leader Muammar al-Qadhafi's sons - putative heir-apparent Saif al-Islam al-Qadhafi and recently appointed National Security Advisor Muatassim al-Qadhafi - whom press reports and some contacts have argued are in de facto competition to succeed their father.

EASY ECONOMIC REFORM HAS BEEN DONE

¶4. (C) This year's annual GPC session comes at an important juncture. Initial announcements of economic initiatives and reform that followed Libya's December 2003 decision to abandon its WMD program and renounce terrorism have given way to the hard reality that considerable economic and administrative work remains to be done if Libya is to realize its development aspirations. A local business contact noted that the GOL has "already picked the low-hanging fruit" in terms of easy reform by allowing importation of more consumer products, privatizing banks, easing enforcement of draconian currency regulations and creating a legal framework (of sorts) for partnership with foreign investors and commercial entities.

PERCEIVED LACK OF REFORM COMMITMENT "KILLING" BUSINESS

¶5. (C) Recent developments like the imprisonment of well-connected businessmen last year, changes in commercial codes that effectively rolled back key reforms, and the increasingly apparent disconnect between the GOL's anti-corruption message and the business practices of senior apparatchiks have underscored the dissonance between the GOL's message and the reality on the ground. Husni Bey (strictly protect), scion of a leading business family, characterized the prevailing "confusion" among senior GOL officials about the country's direction as "a crisis" for the business community. The lack of clear commitment to and, critically, implementation of, announced reform measures were "killing" new projects while investors waited to see how the perceived reform struggle plays out.

QUESTIONS ABOUT SAIF'S COMMITMENT, INFLUENCE

¶6. (C) Much of the debate centers on the role of the reformist camp's public face and purported champion, Saif al-Islam al-Qadhafi. Basem Philip (strictly protect), Nestle's Country Manager, told P/E Chief in early January that events in the second half of 2007 had "seriously eroded" the business community's confidence in Saif as a serious proponent of reform, and had raised questions about the real extent of his influence. Referring to the case of the local BMW franchise holder, who was banned from importing vehicles last fall for several months in connection with murky tax issues, Philip said someone "very close to Saif" told the dealer in late January that he would have to give 40 percent of his profits to Saif al-Islam to "facilitate" the re-initiation of trouble-free vehicle imports. The case was seen as an important step backward after importers had made some progress earlier in 2007 in importing and distributing products without having to pay "exorbitant" bribes to Qadhafi family members and their affiliates.

THE OLD GUARD DIGS IN

¶7. (C) In addition, senior officials brought in by Saif al-Islam to help implement reform measures have encountered serious opposition from regime figures skeptical about the strategic decision to re-engage with the West (and particularly the U.S.) and concerned that their livelihoods, which depend on the old, kleptocratic way of doing business, will be directly threatened by reform. Dr. Mahmud Jibril, Chairman of the National Planning Council and head of the affiliated Economic Development Board, was personally wooed back to Libya by Saif al-Islam to help implement reforms recommended in a Monitor Group report developed under the direction of Harvard University's Dr. Michael Porter. (Note: Jibril holds a PhD from the University of Pittsburgh and owns a successful business consultancy firm with offices in Cairo and London. End note.) Omar Turbi (strictly protect), a U.S.-based, businessman with dual U.S.-Libyan nationality, told P/E Chief in early February that Jibril was "profoundly disappointed" by his limited ability to effect change and had submitted letters of resignation three times in the second half of 2007, but had been dissuaded from leaving.

LEADER'S HEALTH THROWS SPOTLIGHT ON SUCCESSION ISSUE

¶8. (C) As important as economic and reform equities is the political import of the expected cabinet shuffle. Media reports and local observers have dwelled in the past eight months on whether the perceived recent rise of Muatassim al-Qadhafi, Muammar al-Qadhafi's third son by his second wife, represents a threat to Saif al-Islam's previously uncontested role as heir-apparent. (Note: Saif al-Islam is Qadhafi's eldest son by his second wife. End note.) Citing conversations with unspecified members of Qadhafi's family, France's former Ambassador to Tripoli, Jean-Jacques Beaussou, told the CDA and P/E Chief in early December that Muammar al-Qadhafi suffered a series of strokes in May 2007, calling into question how much longer the Leader would be able to rule and focusing attention on the critical issue of succession (see ref B for further reporting on complications related to Qadhafi's reported stroke).

MUATASSIM & SAIF: RIVALS OR ALLIES?

¶9. (C) Zahri Muntasser (strictly protect), head of a wealthy, well-known family whose ancestral ranks include a former Prime Minister, told P/E Chief in early February that Qadhafi deliberately tapped Muatassim as National Security Adviser to create an alternate locus of power to Saif al-Islam and to "strategically stir the political pot". (Note: Muntasser is a close personal friend and business partner of Deputy Foreign Minister-equivalent Muhammad Siala, whom he cited as the source of some of his information. End note.) Muatassim can act as an ally to Saif al-Islam or, if he demonstrates sufficient capability, could emerge as a viable alternative successor.

MUAMMAR AL-QADHAFI: HEDGING HIS "STRATEGIC BET"

¶10. (C) Saif al-Islam's publicly reformist message endears him to Western observers and would-be Libyan reformists, said Muntasser, while Muatassim is perceived to be a more traditional figure who appeals to important military and tribal leaders. By advancing both simultaneously and perpetuating ambiguity about their places in the pecking order, al-Qadhafi is able to better balance two key constituencies - pro-Western reformists and traditional old guard elements - while the struggle over reform and change plays out. The problem, Muntasser noted, is that al-Qadhafi's approach is fundamentally tactical and not strategic; in typical fashion, al-Qadhafi has effectively hedged his December 2003 "strategic bet" to give up WMD and terrorism by fostering the perception that a traditional "strong man" (Muatassim) may take the reins of power. Two influential, longtime members of the Revolutionary Committees - Khuwaydi al-Humeida and Mustafa Kharubi - who are peers of Muammar al-Qadhafi, recently told Muntasser they had been "extremely dissatisfied" with reforms attributed to Saif al-Islam, but were cautiously optimistic that Muatassim could become a leader they could live with.

HANDICAPPING THE FIELD

TRIPOLI 00000166 003.2 OF 004

¶11. (C) Among the cabinet officers, the Prime Minister-equivalent, Foreign Minister-equivalent, Secretary for Education, Secretary for Public Security (MinInterior-equivalent), Secretary for Economy, Trade and Investment and the Secretary for Manpower, Training and Employment are widely rumored as candidates for replacement. As reported ref C, a considerable portion of the GPC will be devoted to televised interrogation of cabinet officers by GPC members, who will ostensibly determine whether cabinet members have faithfully carried out the GPC's policies and effectively served the interest of the Jamahuriya. Recalling his experience as Prime Minister in 1979-1981, MFA Secretary for European Affairs Abdulati Obeidi told the CDA and P/E Chief on February 24 that the GPC usually "closely consulted" Leader Muammar al-Qadhafi about any proposed cabinet changes. Qadhafi -- ever Delphic -- sometimes, but not always, offered opinions about the proposals. Post notes that cabinet changes have in the past transpired in stages, with some positions left unencumbered and new appointments made in subsequent tranches.

PRIME MINISTER TO BE SACKED?

¶12. (C) There is wide consensus that al-Baghdadi al-Mahmoudi, Secretary of the GPC (Prime Minister-equivalent), will be removed and may face corruption charges immediately thereafter. Zahri Muntasser told P/E Chief that al-Mahmoudi's home was raided in early February as part of an effort to build a corruption case against him. In what some observers have interpreted as an attempt to bolster his popular image and blunt the GOL's ability to press charges, al-Mahmoudi recently toured the country and gave a number of public speeches. Speculation centers on three candidates to succeed him: AbuzaidDorda, Chairman of the Housing and Infrastructure Board; Dr. Mahmud Jibril, Chairman of the National Planning Council; and Dr. Muhammad Siala, Deputy Foreign Minister.

¶13. (C) A number of well-place contacts say Dorda is the leading candidate for the job. Dorda has been the very public face of candidate for the job. Dorda has been the very public face of Libya's massive infrastructure development program, barnstorming provinces to announce housing and infrastructure programs. He is genuinely popular, so much so that Qadhafi - concerned that Dorda was becoming "too popular" - allegedly started rumors in December 2007 that he would lose his HIB position in the upcoming cabinet shuffle. A schoolteacher by training, Dorda is a longtime apparatchik who has ridden a reputation as an anti-corruption crusader up the ranks (see ref D for his remarks at a recent contract signing). Contact Omar Turbi, who has known Dorda since grammar school and considers him a friend, described him as "an unreconstructed socialist" who is "intrinsically suspicious" of capitalism. Former U.K. Commercial Counselor Trevor Hines characterized Dorda as being "among the worst" regime figures because he "claims to be supportive of economic reform and is forever announcing new reform measures, but in the end is as corrupt and obstructionist as any of them". Confident, popular and given to sanctimony, Dorda could be a difficult interlocutor for the U.S.

¶14. (C) Saif al-Islam al-Qadhafi reportedly asked Dr. Mahmud Jibril in mid-December whether he would accept the position. Jibril, citing former PM and fellow would-be reformer Shukri Ghanem's disappointing experience as a cautionary tale, told Omar Turbi (whom he's known for 25 years) that he does not want the job; however, rumors persist that he'll be tapped as "window dressing" for the reformist camp. Explaining his reluctance, Jibril described the job as more titular than functional, and said the higher profile only brings greater risk. Zahri Muntasser dismissed the likelihood that Jibril would be named PM, saying it is understood that he "does not want it" and "is not committed enough" to do the job. Nonetheless, a member of Post's locally-engaged staff who was personally interviewed and hired by Jibril told the CDA on February 28 that Jibril would/would be tapped as next PM. Smart, cosmopolitan and one of the most strategic thinkers among Post's interlocutors, Jibril would be pro-reform and would likely favor continued re-engagement with the U.S.

¶15. (C) The names of Deputy Foreign Minister Muhammad Siala and Saif al-Islam al-Qadhafi have also been connected with the PM's post. Zahri Muntasser describes his friend, Siala, as "a good man" and "an able technocrat", but says he is widely perceived as being "not strong enough" for the job. Rumors that Saif al-Islam could be tapped peaked late last year, but recent consensus has it that it would be "too early" for him and that he may be tapped to encumber a new, non-Cabinet level, economic development coordinator position.

FOREIGN MINISTER - TOUGH TO CALL

¶16. (C) Foreign Minister-equivalent Abdulrahman Shalgham has been widely rumored to be on the way out since last summer's denouement of the long-running Bulgarian medics' case. There were reports after his early January visit to Washington that he had fallen further out of favor over the perception that he had been sufficiently tough in arguing Libya's position in his dealings with USG officials. Shalgham's departure could mean the departure of his pro-U.S. Secretary for the Americas, Dr. Ahmed Fituri. Fituri told the CDA recently that if Shalgham goes, he will, too. MFA Americas Desk Director Muhammad Matari told P/E Chief February 20 that perceptions of Shalgham's Washington trip were "mixed", but nonetheless argued that there was "a 90 percent chance" that Shalgham would remain as FM. Stressing the importance of the U.S. account, he said that if Secretary Rice had visited Libya before the GPC, as had been originally planned, it would be a certainty that Shalgham would keep his job.

¶17. (C) If Shalgham goes, the consensus in most quarters is that Deputy FM Muhammad Siala would move up to take the FM post. Siala is a smart, cosmopolitan, technocrat who understands and appears to be genuinely committed to economic reform; he also favors reengagement with the U.S. and the West. Although not the politician that Shalgham is, he is in some respects more thoughtful and would likely be a capable and sympathetic interlocutor. Husni Bey told P/E chief in late December/early January that he had heard reports from unspecified senior RevComm members that External Security Organization Chief Musa Kusa could be moved up to become FM; however, more recently he said the idea seemed to have died and that Kusa could be sent abroad as ambassador to a large western country.

AND ROUNDING OUT THE FIELD ...

¶18. (C) On other portfolios, Zahri Muntasser told P/E Chief that if an associate of Saif al-Islam is tapped to be PM, Muatassim's camp could be given the position of Speaker of the Parliament, with RevComm figure Abdallah Othman replacing Ahmed Ibrahim. To balance out the RecComm cadres' influence, Secretary for Education Dr. Abd al-Kader al-Baghdadi, a RevComm fixture, would lose his seat. The Minister for Public Security, Brigadier General Salleh Muhammad Rajub al-Messmari, will almost certainly lose his seat thanks to the corruption and unseemly behavior of his adult son. He will likely be replaced by his deputy, Omran Hmeid, who has effectively been the acting Minister since al-Messmari fell from grace late last summer. Minister for Manpower, Training and Employment Matuq Matuq, a regime fixture who has held numerous cabinet positions and who has been the bane of international oil and gas companies - one contact described him as "a troglodyte" - may be pushed to the Housing and Infrastructure Board - technically a non-cabinet post - if Abuzaid Dorda moves up to become PM. Secretary for Economy, Trade and Investment Dr. Ali al-Essawi has been mentioned as being on the way out; however, reviews of his performance are mixed and we've heard no informed speculation as to who might replace him.

¶1. (S) Post conveyed reftel points to the General People's Committee for Foreign Liaison and International Cooperation (MFA-equivalent) via diplomatic note February 26. P/E Chief followed up with MFA Americas Desk Officer Muhammad Ayab February 27, underscoring that any information concerning Libyan nationals whose cases will be considered by the Administration Review Board at GTMO must be channeled through the GOL to Post. We also stressed that the GOL will be notified of the Designated Civilian Official's final determination concerning the two Libyan detainees scheduled for review.

¶2. (S) Ayab took our points on board, noting that Libya was familiar with the ARB rubric and stressing that the GOL is eager to have its nationals detained at GTMO repatriated to Libya.

(C) P/E Chief delivered reftel demache points to MFA Americas Desk Officer Muhammad Ayab February 28, stressing the need for positive movement to facilitate Lebanese presidential elections, early Arab League recognition of Kosovo's independence and pressuring Syria to take active steps to prevent foreign fighters from transiting its territory en route to Iraq. Ayab said he would convey the points to the Secretary for the General People's Committee for Foreign Liaison and International Cooperation (Foreign Minister-equivalent) Abdulrahman Shalgham. He said the GOL would refrain from any public statement on Kosovo's independence until the Arab League had made clear its position. SUBJECT: QADHAFI DEVELOPMENT FOUNDATION ON NEGOTIATIONS FOR RELEASE OF LIFG MEMBERS

CLASSIFIED BY: Chris Stevens, CDA, Embassy Tripoli, Dept of State.
REASON: 1.4 (b), (d)

¶1. (C) Media reports and a statement posted on the quasi-governmental Qadhafi Development Foundation (QDF) website February 24 said Saif al-Islam al-Qadhafi, who heads the organization, had personally conducted negotiations with members of the Libyan Islamic Fighting Group (LIFG) about the possible release from prison of approximately one-third of the cohort of LIFG members currently imprisoned in Libya. In a meeting with P/E Chief March 3 on other issues, QDF Executive Director Dr. Yusuf Sawani confirmed the report, noting that negotiations had Yusuf Sawani confirmed the report, noting that negotiations had been ongoing for more than a year. He attributed the impetus for the negotiations to a desire by the GOL to effect "genuine reconciliation" with those imprisoned members of the LIFG whom it judged to have undergone a "sincere ideological revision". Saying that "no one" wanted to see fellow Libyans incarcerated indefinitely, he claimed that reconciliation among former enemies was a "natural part" of Libya's tribal culture.

¶2. (C) Sawani put the total number of prisoners known to have LIFG affiliations at 93 and confirmed media reports that about one-third of those could be released if an agreement is reached. Saying further rounds of negotiation, with the personal involvement of Saif al-Islam, were expected to begin "soon", he stressed that the QDF and the GOL are keen "not to force unwelcome conditions" on the individuals being considered for release. Emphasizing that the individuals being considered had been judged to have "sincerely" renounced violence as a political adjunct, he said terms of monitoring and rehabilitation were key features of the negotiations. The shared goal of the QDF and GOL is to gain voluntary agreement by the prisoners to the terms of their release. It is expected that prisoners would return to their homes and resume their lives after release, Sawani said. There would be a program for monitoring their activities and the QDF would play "an active role" in promoting their reintegration into society; however, it is not envisioned that they would be under house arrest.

¶3.(C) Noting that the QDF realized the planned release will generate controversy in some quarters, including among foreign powers concerned about possible counter-terrorism implications, Sawani said the QDF understood it had to have "the highest degree of confidence" in the genuine ideological rehabilitation of those being considered for release. He stressed that candidates had been closely vetted over a considerable period of time before their names were added to the list used in Saif al-Islam's negotiations. He added that it had been agreed that those released would endorse a public statement renouncing political violence and disassociating themselves from the LIFG and al-Qaeda. (Note: The merger of the LIFG with al-Qaeda in the Lands of the Maghreb (AQIM) was announced in November 2007. End note.)

REASON: 1.4 (b), (d)

¶1. (C) Summary: Qadhafi Development Foundation (QDF) Executive Director Dr. Youssef Sawani agreed to try to facilitate a second Embassy meeting with ailing human rights activist Fathi el-Jahmi to help clarify the apparent dissonance between the QDF's characterization of el-Jahmi's condition and that of some members of his family. The specific goals of an Embassy visit would be to assess el-Jahmi's current medical condition, confirm that his treating physicians believe he can safely return home, and solicit his views regarding options for his medical care were he to be released. Stressing that the GOL has "no interest" in seeing el-Jahmi's condition deteriorate, Sawani said el-Jahmi would not/not be under house arrest and would be able to seek medical treatment at any facility, which the QDF could, if needed, help facilitate. A complicating factor is el-Jahmi's family's refusal to take him back, despite repeated requests by the QDF and more recently GOL security personnel. Travel abroad for treatment was not an immediate possibility, but could be in the future if el-Jahmi honored a tacit agreement to remain silent after his release. Sawani said Human Rights Watch and Physicians for Human Rights would be allowed to visit Libya but the timing was still in question. End summary.

FOLLOW-ON VISIT FOR EMBASSY REQUESTED

¶2. (C) P/E Chief met with Qadhafi Development Foundation (QDF) Executive Director Dr. Youssef Sawani on March 3 to follow up on the case of detained human rights activist Fathi el-Jahmi. Thanking the QDF for its facilitation of the Embassy's visit to el-Jahmi February 20 (ref A) and a visit by el-Jahmi's family shortly thereafter, P/E Chief noted that there appeared to be some disagreement between the QDF's characterization of el-Jahmi's condition and that of some members of his family. After their visit, some members of his family had apparently communicated with USG officials in Washington, expressing concern that el-Jahmi's serious condition meant that his release could pose a threat to his medical prognosis. They also expressed concern that, if released, he might not enjoy access to medical care. A follow-on visit by Post to el-Jahmi in the near future - the goals of which would be to assess el-Jahmi's current medical condition, confirm that his treating physicians believe he can safely return home, and solicit his opinion regarding options for medical care - would be useful to help resolve conflicting accounts.

¶3. (C) Expressing "disappointment" with statements attributed to el-Jahmi's family in the wake of their recent visit, Sawani agreed that another visit by Post could be helpful and said he would try to arrange same with relevant GOL security organizations. He noted that recent statements by el-Jahmi's U.S.-based brother, Muhammad el-Jahmi, were viewed by some quarters of the GOL as evidence that he was motivated by "political opportunism"; the QDF's ability to secure Embassy access to el-Jahmi on short notice may have been circumscribed by that perception and by the fact that el-Jahmi's family had still not responded to the offer for them to take him home. (Note: Sawani phoned CDA later that night to convey a message from QDF Chairman Saif al-Islam to the USG that GOL security personnel had approached the family to request that they agree to take their father home, but the family had again refused. The QDF and the GOL, he said, were now at a loss as to what to do with him, for if they released him now and his family did not accept their responsibility to care for him, he could become destitute. Saif al-Islam asked that this message be conveyed to Senator Biden, as well, since he had written to Leader Muammar al-Qadhafi asking for the Leader's personal intervention to effect el-Jahmi's release from detention. End note.)

QDF, GOL HAVE "NO INTEREST" IN SEEING EL-JAHMI'S CONDITION WORSEN

¶4. (C) Responding to statements by international human rights NGO's to the effect that releasing el-Jahmi from the Tripoli Medical Center could pose a threat to his health, Sawani said the QDF had carefully assessed el-Jahmi's condition based on input from his treating physicians and had determined that he could now safely return home provided that he receive follow-on medical care. Such had not been the case earlier in the year, but el-Jahmi's condition continued to improve. Stressing that the QDF and GOL had "no interest" in seeing el-Jahmi's condition worsen, Sawani reiterated that a condition for el-Jahmi's release was an understanding that he would continue to receive release was an understanding that he would continue to receive medical treatment after his release (see text of the QDF's letter, reported ref C).

"NO IMPEDIMENT" TO CARE AT OTHER LIBYAN MEDICAL FACILITIES

¶5. (C) Turning to treatment options, Sawani said he "did not foresee any impediment" to el-Jahmi receiving medical care at other medical facilities if he were released. The court did not formally sentence el-Jahmi during his 2004 trial; it found him mentally incompetent and recommended that he receive appropriate medical care. (Note: el-Jahmi told us his understanding was that he had/had been convicted under a Libyan law that criminalizeds advocating a postioin inconsistent with the 1969 revolution, and for defaming leader Muammar al-Qadhafi. End note.) El-Jahmi would not/not be subject to house arrest or its equivalent and there would be no restrictions against him seeking care at any medical facility if he were released. He would enjoy the rights "of any Libyan citizen" to come and go as he pleased, provided that he acceded to the tacit understanding that he would refrain from speaking about his detention or engaging in political discourse.

QDF MIGHT HELP FACILITATE ALTERNATIVE CARE

¶6. (C) Noting that some medical facilities, particularly private clinics, might be reluctant to provide care to el-Jahmi given sensitivities attendant to his case, P/E Chief asked whether treatment at facilities such as the private Libyan-Swiss Clinic and St. James Hospital would be possible, and whether the QDF might help facilitate same if such were necessary. Sawani agreed that the QDF might, if needed, play a positive intermediary role in facilitating care at those facilities or others. Saying the physician currently treating el-Jahmi at the Tripoli Medical Center (TMC) had been el-Jahmi's physican for more than five years (pre-dating his trial and incarceration), Sawani suggested that an option could be continued treatment at the TMC on an outpatient basis. (Note: Dr. Abdulrahman Mehdy and el-Jahmi both told P/E Chief during the latter's visit to the TMC that Mehdy had been el-Jahmi's physician for over five years. End note.) Conceding that local measures were perhaps wanting in some regards, Sawani noted that the TMC was nonetheless "a center of medical excellence" by Libyan standards.

TREATMENT ABROAD POSSIBLE "DOWN THE ROAD", WITH STIPULATIONS

¶7. (C) Asked whether el-Jahmi might travel abroad for treatment, Sawani said his understanding was that el-Jahmi does not currently possess a passport. Emphasizing that he was offering his "personal opinion", he said he believed that if el-Jahmi were released and honored the conditions for that release, he could be permitted to travel outside Libya for treatment "down the road". Pressed for clarity, Sawani demurred, saying his comment did not represent an "official position" on the issue of travel abroad, but was rather offering his sense of future possibilities based on conversations concerning el-Jahmi's case to which he had been privvy. Reitarating earlier points about the political sensitivies of Muhammad el-Jahmi's perceived exploitation of the case, he stressed that Fathi el-Jahmi and the family would need to demonstrate commitment to the agreement to refrain from public commentary for "a reasonable period of time" to secure permission for el-Jahmi to travel abroad for treatment, but said he believed such would be possible.

PHR/HRW VISIT

¶8. (C) Asked whether the QDF expected to be able to facilitate a visit on/about March 12 by Physicians for Human Rights (PHR) and Human Rights Watch, Sawani conceded that he wasn't certain. He believed that the visit would happen, but remarks by the family after their recent visit to el-Jahmi, together with public statements by international human rights NGO's and the proposed visit's proximity to the General People's Congress (currently underway), had made it difficult for the QDF to push for the trip to happen in the immediate future. Pressed, he agreed to follow up on the issue with relevant GOL decision-makers to see whether there might still be some possibility of facilitating on/about March 12.

COMMENT

¶9. (C) Sawani clearly understands that the QDF and GOL face a potential credibility gap in terms of the dissonance between the QDF's characterization of the case and the family's purported observations (as reported by Muhammad el-Jahmi). His remarks concerning the GOL's neuralgia about Muhammad el-Jahmi's public statements and outreach to international human rights NGO's suggest that quiet engagement in the Embassy-QDF channel remains the best current option for maintaining positive momentum. Treatment abroad in the near term does not currently appear possible, but Sawani took pains to emphasize it could be in the future. The focus for now should be on assessing el-Jahmi's current medical condition, determining whether he wants to return home under the stipulated conditions and whether his family will agree to take him back and care for him, and ascertaining where and how he would obtain necessary medical treatment in future if he were released. End comment.

¶1. (C) P/E Chief conveyed reftel invitation and message from NEA A/S David Welch to MFA Americas Desk Director Muhammad Matari March 6, stressing that a decision by Libya to participate in the U.S.-AMU technical working group on youth de-radicalization would be an important positive gesture. Matari said Foreign Minister Shalgam, in Cairo for the Arab League Ministerial meeting, was due back in Tripoli later that evening and that he would convey the invitation with him immediately with a recommendation that Libya send a delegation.

¶2. (C) Noting that many Libyan foreign fighters identified in last September's Objective Massey operation along the Syrian-Iraqi border were young men from eastern Libya, P/E Chief said GOL participants in the U.S.-AMU workshop should expect questions about what "soft power" measures might help blunt the appeal of extremist messages there. In that regard, it would be helpful if the GOL chose to include in their delegation officials conversant with the GOL's counter-ideological initiatives and efforts to de-radicalize youth through education and development programs. Matari took the point on board and said he would recommend to FM Shalgam that Libya's delegation include individuals empowered to speak to those issues.

¶1. (C) Summary: Leader Muammar al-Qadhafi, National Oil Corporation Chairman Shukri Ghanem and Deputy Foreign Minister Siala stressed to American interlocutors in recent meetings that the GOL views the recent confluence of the UTA bombing case judgment against Libya and a new U.S. law intended to assist victims of terrorism as serious threats that could jeopardize further development of U.S.-Libya bilateral ties and prompt Libya to expel U.S. oil and gas companies and reduce oil production. End summary.

U.S. OIL COMPANIES TREATED TO BROWBEATING

¶2. (C) ConocoPhillips CEO Jim Mulva was summoned to Sirte for a half-hour "browbeating" by Leader Muammar al-Qadhafi during his visit to Libya on/about February 24. Country manager Page Maxson told P/E Chief that the entire conversation focused on al-Qadhafi's "personal ire" about the so-called "Lautenberg Amendment" (section 1083 of the National Defense Authorization Act of 2008) and the USD 6 billion award against Libya in the UTA bombing case, and al-Qadhafi's view that Libya had not been sufficiently compensated for its decision to give up WMD and renounce terrorism. Al-Qadhafi passed a copy of his recent letter to the President on the subject (ref B) to Mulva. Telling Mulva that he and his fellow U.S. oil company CEOs needed to engage members of the U.S. Congress and the Administration on the matter, al-Qadhafi threatened to dramatically reduce Libya's oil production and/or expel out U.S. oil and gas companies. Al-Qadhafi claimed Libya would rather "keep its oil in the ground" and wait for a more favorable overseas investment climate than continue high levels of production in an environment in which sizeable portions of its oil-related assets could be seized.

¶3. (C) In a related development, Exxon-Mobil Country Manager Phil Goss told P/E Chief that Shukri Ghanem, Chairman of Libya's National Oil Corporation, had chastised him during a meeting on February 25 for nearly an hour on the "dire political signal" represented by the Lautenberg Amendment and the UTA judgment. Ghanem told Goss that U.S. oil and gas companies should "tell Washington" that Libya was serious in its threat to "significantly curtail" its oil production as a means to "penalize the U.S." for Lautenberg and UTA. According to Goss, Ghanem -- a U.S.-educated former Prime Minister -- was emotional in insisting that Libya "would not tolerate" Lautenberg and UTA without taking some retaliatory measures. Privately, Goss questioned whether the GOL could really afford to significantly curb oil output at a time when it is making massive investments in infrastructure as part of the run-up to the 40th anniversary of the military coup that brought al-Qadhafi to power on September 1, 2009. Stressing the erratic nature of decisionmaking in the GOL, Goss was careful not to rule out the possibility that Libya could choose "to do something stupid".

DFM SIALA: LAUTENBERG & UTA JUDGMENT "THREATEN EVERYTHING"

¶4. (C) In a meeting February 27 on other matters, Deputy Foreign Minister-equivalent Muhammad Siala stressed to CDA the seriousness with which the GOL views the UTA bombing case damages judgment and Lautenberg Amendment. Siala expressed concern that the confluence of the two developments was " ... destroying everything the two sides have built since 2003". U.S. judicial and legislative branch decisions were "pushing Libya into a corner", forcing it to take measures to protect assets that could be exposed to seizure under the Lautenberg Amendment to satisfy terrorism-related claims such as that in the UTA bombing case. In addition, such actions bolstered the position of GOL elements suspicious of re-engagement with the United States.

¶5. (C) The GOL, Siala said, was urgently examining ways to protect its oil revenues from seizure by U.S. plaintiffs. Claiming that payments to the GOL by U.S. oil and gas companies alone totaled $1 billion per month, Siala said the GOL recently decided to require that these payments be made in Euros rather than in dollars. (Note: ConocoPhillips country manager Page Maxson told P/E Chief total payments by U.S. companies were more likely in the range of $500-750 million per month. End note.) U.S. oil and gas company country managers confirmed that all payments for services must now be in non-dollar currencies; they must also pay their monthly revenue share to the GOL in Euros. In addition, Siala said the GOL was considering whether to require U.S. oil and gas companies to establish wholly-owned European subsidiaries through which financial transactions could be funneled, creating an additional firewall against asset seizure. Stressing that senior GOL leaders viewed Lautenberg and claims issues as "serious threats" to Libya, Siala cautioned that unless some mechanism for mitigating both issues were identified soon, Libya could be forced to slow its oil exports, likely prompting further price spikes in an already jumpy spot market.

¶6. (C) Siala said the GOL's understanding is that there are 26 outstanding cases before U.S. courts, including Pan Am 103, LaBelle and UTA. The GOL could not afford to be "bled" continuously by high-dollar awards in such cases. Unless the U.S. "took positive steps" to to resolve the Lautenberg and UTA judgment issues, Libya would be forced to divest itself of all investment and assets in the U.S. financial system. (Note: Mustafa Zarti, Deputy Chairman of the Libyan Investment Authority (LIA), Libya's sovereign wealth fund, subsequently told CDA and P/E Chief that the LIA had all but completely divested itself of U.S. holdings totaling some $9 billion. Conceding that it was difficult for any fund manager not to have a position in the U.S. market, he stressed that it made "no sense" for the LIA to continue to invest in the U.S. if its assets could be attached. End note.) Noting that he had personally played a key role in negotiating the release of Libyan assets frozen in U.S. banks in the sanctions era, Siala said Lautenberg was "much worse" because courts, not the executive branch, could seize assets and held them without paying interest. Because the Lautenberg Amendment provided for seizure before a final judgment had been reached, assets could be held for years without interest.

COMMENT

¶7. (C) Comment: Elements of the GOL remain convinced that the confluence of the Lautenberg Amendment and the UTA judgment constitute a political signal about limits on the bilateral relationship. There is genuine confusion among some about why such a signal would have been sent so soon after FM Abdulrahman Shalgam's January visit to Washington and in the course of a good patch of bilateral programmatic cooperation, with some perceiving the timing as a deliberate insult. The threat to curb oil production seems unlikely to be carried out in light of Libya's current budget obligations and absolute dependance on oil revenues. The regime has demonstrated in the past, however, that it is prepared to take sizeable risks and incur significant short- to mid-term costs if it feels it has been politically slighted. End comment.

leave his room for exercise and home visits remains the subject of negotiations with the QDF. According to his doctor, el-Jahmi's medical condition has improved and he could be released to his home for continuing treatment on an outpatient basis. El-Jahmi and his family are concerned that access to medical treatment might be curtailed if he were released from the hospital. Representatives of Human Rights Watch and Physicians for Human Rights have arrived in Tripoli and are scheduled to visit el-Jahmi today for independent assessments of his status and medical condition. FATHI EL-JAHMI "RELEASED"

¶2. (C) Citing statements by Qadhafi Development Foundation (QDF) human rights director Saleh Abdulsalam, international media reported on March 11 that detained human rights activist Fathi el-Jahmi (FAJ) was "released", but remained at the Tripoli Medical Center for treatment. (Note: El-Jahmi has been in the GOL's custody since his re-arrest in early 2004. End note.) P/E Chief spoke with QDF Executive Director Dr. Yusuf Sawani on March 12. Sawani carefully stressed that el-Jahmi had been "transferred" from the custody of the GOL to the custody of his family, noting that since he had not been in detention (from the GOL's perspective), he could not have been "released". Referencing the el-Jahmi family's delay in responding to the QDF's earlier offers to allow el-Jahmi to return home (ref A), Sawani said the family had "finally" agreed to take custody of him. A March 12 Reuters report quoted el-Jahmi's son, Muhammad, as saying: "We ~ are very happy with the improvement in his health, particularly now that he can see us continuously. I am now responsible for his needs -- food, drink and everything."

BUT REMAINS AT TRIPOLI MEDICAL CENTER

¶3. (C) Sawani said the QDF had proposed transferring el-Jahmi to his family home in Tripoli or to a private clinic. The family told the QDF they could not accommodate el-Jahmi at home and raised concerns about the cost of private clinic care, suggesting the QDF underwrite those expenses. After consulting with FAJ's treating physicians at the Tripoli Medical Center (TMC) and, according to Sawani, with the family, it was decided that the best course of action was to keep el-Jahmi at the government-run TMC, where the state pays for his treatment "as it would with any Libyan citizen".

¶4. (C) Asked whether Emboffs could visit el-Jahmi, Sawani stressed that the GOL no longer has custody of FAJ. As such, neither the GOL nor the QDF had any mandate to facilitate access to el-Jahmi, who was ostensibly free to come and go as he pleased. Sawani cautioned that "as with any patient in hospital", Emboffs would have to coordinate a visit with el-Jahmi's family, who were now responsible for him. "It is for the family alone to decide whether a visit would be appropriate", he said.

FAMILY VISITS

¶5. (C) P/E Chief spoke by telephone March 12 with el-Jahmi's eldest son, Muhammad, and daughter, Lamia, who said access to el-Jahmi for the family had recently improved. A number of el-Jahmi's immediate family were able to visit about one week ago. In the last three days, Muhammad el-Jahmi and his mother visited daily for long periods (his wife stayed seven hours on March 11), and were able to bring him food and sundry items. Muhammad el-Jahmi said that on March 10 he had to coordinate their visit with the QDF; however, on March 11 and March 12 he and his mother only had to telephone the hospital before visiting. Muhammad asked the QDF on March 12 whether el-Jahmi could exit his room regularly for exercise to alleviate edema in his legs, and whether he might be able to make a visit home. The QDF "agreed in principle", but details of those arrangements are still being sorted out.

¶6. (C) Asked whether Emboffs could visit el-Jahmi, Muhammad and Lamia stressed that the family was not in a position to sanction or coordinate visits, and suggested that Post contact the QDF. Standing permission for access to him at this point extends only to Muhammad and his mother. The family had no objection to a visit by Emboffs if the QDF agreed.

MINDERS STILL PRESENT

¶7. (C) P/E Chief visited el-Jahmi on March 12 in his TMC hospital room, located directly across from a nurse's station. When the duty nurse was asked which room el-Jahmi was in, two plainclothes security officers standing in front of el-Jahmi's room approached and asked who wanted to see him and why. The hospital's "security director," after determining that the visit had been coordinated with the QDF and the family, said P/E Chief could see al-Jahmi after el-Jahmi finished his evening prayers and supper.

TREATING PHYSICIAN SAYS IMPROVEMENT IN MEDICAL CONDITION CONTINUES

¶8. (C) While waiting, P/E Chief spoke by phone with el-Jahmi's treating physician, Dr. Abdulrahman Mehdy, who said el-Jahmi's condition had continued to improve since Emboffs last visited el-Jahmi on February 20. El-Jahmi's EKG readings were close to normal, his breathing was less labored, he tired less easily and the edema in his legs had begun to ease. Mehdy said el-Jahmi could, in his judgment, be released from hospital immediately and could continue treatment on an outpatient basis with visits to clinic once every week or two, a significant improvement since just three weeks ago. El-Jahmi had undergone a complete battery of tests, to include EKG and CBC, blood sugar and lipids profile blood tests on March 12, and would undergo a sonogram on March 13. Doctors had discovered that el-Jahmi's vision had deteriorated when he was recently allowed reading material again; el-Jahmi's eyes were tested and new spectacles prescribed on March 12.

EL-JAHMI IN GOOD SPIRITS

¶9. (C) After a wait of about an hour, P/E Chief saw el-Jahmi, who was accompanied by his wife, son Muhammad and a man described as his nurse, Abdullah Bashir. El-Jahmi was visibly tired, but was alert and appeared to be in good spirits. He made his first walk of any distance earlier that day to have his eyes tested in a clinic located in a different wing of the hospital. Excited about having left his room for the first time in long while, he expressed frustration that the edema in his legs had not subsided more quickly. (Note: His physician said he had started el-Jahmi on a different analgesic medication about one week ago to help ease swelling in his legs, and that the initial signs were good. End note.)

¶10. (C) El-Jahmi said his condition had improved recently. He was permitted to raise the blinds in his room about one week ago, allowing him a view and some sunlight. His Koran had been returned to him, although reading had been difficult until his new spectacles had been prescribed. He had been allowed trips outside his room more regularly, and understood that he would be allowed to begin regular walks soon to help his heart and edema. Most importantly, his family had been able to visit regularly. Asked whether he needed anything, he stressed two things: continued medical treatment and his freedom. His medical condition had improved considerably since treatment began in December 2007; however, further treatment was needed. He and his family were concerned that access to treatment might be curtailed - directly or indirectly - if he were released from the hospital. Unbidden, el-Jahmi stressed that while he wants the hospital. Unbidden, el-Jahmi stressed that while he wants to go home, he remains unwilling to enter into a tacit agreement to refrain from criticizing al-Qadhafi's regime or speaking publicly about his detention as the price for his release. He was unaware until told by P/E Chief that representatives of Human Rights Watch (HRW) and Physicians for Human Rights (PHR) were, with the QDF's facilitation, scheduled to visit him in the coming days. He expressed relief that the international community remains focused on his case, saying he felt he had been "walking alone in the wilderness" for a long time.

¶11. (C) Comment: While we lack the expertise to comment authoritatively on el-Jahmi's medical condition, he appeared to have improved since our last visit with him in February (ref B). Unfettered access and, should he choose, the ability to: 1) leave his room, and: 2) leave the TMC are important measures of whether he has in fact been "transferred" from GOL custody to that of his family. Security officials remain outside his room and effectively control access to him, and his ability to leave his room regularly for exercise and/or home visits is apparently being negotiated with the QDF, suggesting he remains for practical purposes under GOL custody. The distinction between el-Jahmi having been at the TMC in the GOL's custody and his being there now in the custody of his family is at best a subtle one. It is hard to avoid the conclusion that the QDF's announcement of el-Jahmi's "release" was orchestrated as window dressing on the eve of the visit by HRW and PHR representatives. An important component of any agreement for his release will be specific agreement on the terms of his continued medical treatment. End comment.

¶1. (C) Summary: Reports by the Qadhafi Development Foundation (QDF) that detained human rights activist Fathi el-Jahmi was "released" to the custody of his family appear to be premature. Security officials continue to effectively control access to el-Jahmi at the Tripoli Medical Center. His family's access has improved but is not unconditional, and his ability to regularly leave his room for exercise and home visits remains the subject of negotiations with the QDF. According to his doctor of negotiations with the QDF. According to his doctor, el-Jahmi's medical condition has improved and he could be released to his home for continuing treatment on an outpatient basis. El-Jahmi and his family are concerned that access to medical treatment might be curtailed if he were released from the hospital. Represenatives of Human Rights Watch and Physicians for Human Rights have arrived in Tripoli and are scheduled to visit el-Jahmi today for independent assessments of his status and medical condition. LEGAL CLAIMS

¶1.  (C) In a meeting on March 16, MFA U/S-equivalent for European Affairs Abdulati Obeidi passed CDA and P/E Chief a copy of a note proposing a meeting with USG officials "at the earliest possible date" to begin discussions regarding a comprehensive settlement of all legal claims pending in U.S. and Libyan courts.  (Note: Post's translation is at para 4; original Arabic language text has been scanned and sent to NEA/MAG via email.
End note.)  Noting that the Libyan proposal stemmed from discussions in February in Europe between NEA A/S David Welch, Saif al-Islam al-Qadhafi and Obeidi, he said the GOL also transmitted the note and instructions to Libya's CDA in Washington, Ali Aujali, on March 15.  It was expected that Aujali would convey the note to the Department on March 17. The offer by the GOL to negotiate a comprehensive settlement represented an important "political decision" by the GOL, he

¶2. (C) Obeidi suggested that initial discussions could focus on the three major outstanding claims cases in U.S. venues: Pan Am 103, LaBelle, and UTA. Emphasizing his desire to avoid "surprises", he said that the GOL team would also raise judgments in Libyan courts related to the 1986 Operation El Dorado Canyon bombing of Tripoli and Benghazi. Obeidi said the Libyan team would consist of himself, Deputy Foreign Minister-equivalent Dr. Muhammad Siala, attorney and head of the GOL's litigation committee Ahmed Mselati, attorney Azzam al-Dib, attorney Dr. Ali Dawi, attorney Azza al-Maghour, and Qadhafi Development Foundation official Munther Ramadan. (Note: DFM Siala's position was formally abolished, together with all deputy minister-equivalent positions, in the wake of Leader Muammar al-Qadhafi's March 2 speech to the General People's Congress; however, Siala remains in his office at the MFA. Obeidi said a "reorganization" would occur, but suggested Siala may remain at the MFA in some as-yet undetermined capacity. End note.) Obeidi said discussions to date on a comprehensive settlement had been at the political level; Obeidi suggested the time was now right for the two sides to include legal experts who could help formulate modalities of a possible settlement mechanism.

¶3. (C) Noting his understanding that positive movement on claims - particularly high-profile cases - could lend impetus to efforts to find a mechanism to mitigate the effects of section 1083 of the 2008 National Defense Authorization Act (the "Lautenberg Amendment"), Obeidi stressed that the GOL would like to meet with the U.S. team as quickly as possible. The GOL's preference is that the venue be either in Tripoli or in Europe (London, Rome and Geneva were suggested). Citing what he said was the decision of the U.S. judge in the Pan Am 103 case to suspend legal proceedings in the case while negotiations were underway, Obeidi said the GOL hoped proceedings could be similarly suspended in the LaBelle and UTA cases.

¶4. (C) Begin informal translation of note:

A Proposal to the U.S. State Department Regarding Settlement of Pending Issues Between the Two Countries

Recalling the cases filed against the Great Jamahiriya and a number of its nationals in U.S. courts and Amendment 1083 of the 2008 U.S. Defense Authorization bill, and recalling verdicts pronounced by Libyan courts for compensation of victims of the American raid on Libya in the year 1986 of the Christian calendar; and recalling the intensive contacts between the two sides at the political and legal levels regarding the desire to reach a comprehensive settlement of all pending issues.

We wish to inform you of our agreement to reach a settlement that would include all pending isues and would put a definitive end to all judicial disputes and permit forward movement in the development of bilateral relations in all areas of cooperation serving the interests of the two countries:

We therefore propose the following:

- Within the framework of implementing the above-referenced settlement, a fund shall be established for the purpose of compensating victims of both countries, to be funded directly or indirectly in accordance with a mutually agreed mechanism that is to be specified in detail within the framework of the proposed settlement.
- To suspend legal proceedings of cases currently before U.S. courts, to suspend implementation of verdicts issued in both countries and to commence negotiations regarding a comprehensive settlement.
- To hold an official meeting between representatives of both countries at the earliest possible date to discuss a comprehensive settlement agreement. We propose that the venue for such a meeting be either Tripoli or any European country.

Awaiting your reply, we offer assurances of our respect and highest consideration.

Date: March 11, 2008.

Signed: Abdulati Obeidi, Secretary for European Affairs, General People's Committee for Foreign Liaison and International Cooperation

¶1. (C) Summary: In a recent speech given at the opening of the annual General People's Congress, Leader Muammar al-Qadhafi roundly criticized the existing Libyan government structure for having failed to distribute oil wealth to the Libyan people. Decrying inefficiency and corruption, he called for the system of General People's Committees that have formed the basis of government since the late 1970's to be completely dismantled by year's end and replaced with an as-yet undetermined structure. He also advocated the direct transfer of oil revenues - he suggested the amount of 5,000 Libyan dinar per month - to Libyan families and radical privatization. Virtually all social services - health care, education, pensions and retirement funds, and utilities - would be privatized, and government salaries would be eliminated. Qadhafi's plan for restructuring the GOL and privatizing the majority of state-owned and operated services could represent his most radical experiment in governance since the introduction of the GPC's and subsequent establishment of the Revolutionary Committees in the late 1970's. Business leaders, hopeful that the Congress would offer clear signs of the regime's commitment to continued economic reform, are troubled that the GOL is biting off more than it can chew by taking on wholesale structural reform in tandem with privatization. The proposed changes would strike a direct blow at the tacit pact - cradle-to-grave subsidies financed by oil revenues in exchange for political quiescence - that has undergirded the regime for decades and could signal political turbulence fomented by old guard elements already uneasy about the extent and pace of change in Libya. End summary.

OIL WEALTH A MIXED BLESSING THAT NECESSITATES CHANGE

¶2. (U) In a speech delivered on March 2 to the annual session of the General People's Congress in Sirte, Libyan leader Muammar al-Qadhafi decried the failure of the General People's Committees to effectively distribute Libya's oil wealth to its people. While the 1969 revolution was initially successful in reclaiming Libya's oil wealth for ordinary Libyans, widespread corruption and failed implementation at all levels of government had engendered widespread dissatisfaction with public services, especially education, health, and infrastructure development. Qadhafi, claiming Arab governments in oil-rich states that failed to fairly dispense oil wealth risk being toppled by their own people in the near future, said increased oil prices made the cost of the General People's Committees' (GPC's) failure to effectively distribute the nation's oil wealth increasingly untenable.

(ANOTHER) RADICAL RESTRUCTURING OF GOVERNMENT IN THE OFFING

¶3. (C) Qadhafi called on the Congress to abolish by year's end the system of the GPC's, which has constituted the de facto government structure since the late 1970's, and to instead directly transfer Libya's oil revenues "to the people". Contacts at the MFA and Central Bank recently told us that five GOL committees - responsible for the budget, economy, administrative structure, wealth distribution and legal reform - were quickly constituted after Qadhafi's speech to formulate plans for dismantling the GPC's, standing up alternate structures and implementing direct distribution of oil wealth. Final plans for shifting from the GPC's to an as-yet undetermined structure are due by September 1. Central Bank Governor Bengdara told the CDA March 12 that restructuring of the GOL would precede privatization of government-owned entities and services such as health, education and utilities.

SECURITY, FOREIGN POLICY APPARATUS TO REMAIN UNCHANGED

¶4. (U) Citing common practice in other countries, Qadhafi identified five key authorities - defense, foreign affairs, interior, internal security and external security - that would remain unchanged, but should report directly to the head of state (formally the Secretary of the General People's Congress) instead of through the existing structure. He noted that, in instead of through the existing structure. He noted that, in practice, the Libyan Prime Minister-equivalent does not and should not exercise oversight over these areas, proposing that they instead be considered as "sovereign ministries" that would report directly to the head of state and not/not through the GPC's and the Secretariat of the General People's Congress. He proposed an alternative form of military conscription in which all eligible Libyans would be required to do two-month rotations in the armed forces in lieu of maintaining a standing army.

DIRECT REDISTRIBUTION OF OIL WEALTH PROPOSED

¶5. (U) Citing the inability of GPC's to effectively distribute Libya's oil-generated wealth to its citizens, Qadhafi proposed a redistribution scheme by which half a million Libyan families, totaling some three million people, will receive monthly stipends representing their share of Libya's oil revenues. Subsidies for gasoline, food, commodities, health care and education would be eliminated. Qadhafi proposed a stipend figure of 5,000 Libyan dinar (LD) per month (about $4,000). Ironically, the GPC system whose elimination he advocated will be responsible for developing a mechanism to transfer oil wealth before its demise. The GPC's annual budget had steadily increased to a peak of $32 billion (37 billion LD) in 2007; budgets under the new distribution system should settle at about 30 billion LD per year according to Qadhafi. (Note: State-owned media subsequently reported that the 2008 budget would total 49 billion LD, about $39 billion. End note.) Saying he had advocated a similar reform package for years, the Libyan leader argued that if only the Libyan people had taken his advice in the past, they'd be rich already.

WITH CORRESPONDING PRIVATIZATION OF STATE-OWNED/OPERATED SERVICES

¶6. (U) Once the GPC system is dismantled, all spending decisions will devolve to the private sector. In lieu of the GPC structure, Qadhafi suggested the Libyan people would spontaneously establish "real committees" of around 100 individuals for the purpose of managing private sector economic activity. He cautioned that while oil prices are high now, they would not always remain so. While acknowledging that most Libyans would not do so, he encouraged them to save and invest some of their monthly allotment. Qadhafi called for the abolishment of all loans, criticizing the Libyan financial sector both for discriminatory lending practices based on personal and tribal affiliation and for a poor track record on non-performing loans. He hinted at the establishment of an individual income tax system. Qadhafi spoke at length about the ways in which he perceives the GOL to be oversized and overextended, citing services such as HIV/AIDS testing, avian bird flu detection and veterinary care as issues that are beyond the competence of most governments. He noted approvingly (and incorrectly) that the U.S. government does not fund cultural programs. He focused on radical privatization, stressing health care and education, as the means by which to trim the public sector bloat and further empower the private sector.

EDUCATION, HEALTH CARE ARE KEY AREAS

¶7. (U) Qadhafi spoke at length about education, saying Libyans will be solely responsible for financing their children's education, either within Libya (by funding school construction and paying teachers' salaries) or abroad. "No one [in the Libyan government] is responsible for [a child's] education, whether locally or abroad," he said. Lamenting the fact that most Libyan schools lack computers and sufficient numbers of psychiatrists and social workers, he suggested that privately-funded and operated schools might do better. He encouraged Libyans to pay for their children to study abroad if their choice of career required specialized education. Qadhafi also said privatization of education would extend to religious education, opining that "you [the people] must run the madrassas~ you take those Quranic schools." On health care, the GOL had invested considerable sums to build hospitals and train medical personnel, but Libyans complained about the quality of care and traveled abroad whenever possible for medical care. By privatizing hospitals, they would now have a chance to directly improve the quality of medical care.

HOW TO KEEP LIBYANS WORKING?

¶8. (U) Complaining that annual outlays for government salaries are far too high, Qadhafi called for an end to public sector wages and the abolishment of government-funded pensions and retirement funds. (Note: The Central Bank Governor told the CDA salary outlays officially totaled about 10 billion LD, but suggested the real number is higher. End note.) He noted the Libyan people would "need to think about" how to create incentives for employees in key public functions, such as security and defense, to continue working if they're receiving the same monthly stipend as everyone else. He speculated that some security functions might eventually be filled with volunteers.

QADHAFI ROLLS THE DICE ... AGAIN

¶9. (C) Qadhafi's plan for restructuring the GOL and privatizing the majority of state-owned and operated services could represent his most radical experiment in governance since the introduction of the GPC's and subsequent establishment of the Revolutionary Committees in the late 1970's. Conceding that the speech was "substantially different" than anything anyone expected (see reftel for Post's preview of the General People's Congress), Qadhafi Development Foundation (QDF) Director Dr. Yusuf Sawani told P/E Chief March 3 that the "dramatic initiatives" were designed to "radically accelerate" government and economic reform, and to open further space for civil society actors. MFA Secretary for the Americas Dr. Ahmed Fituri told the CDA March 5 that Secretary of the GPC for Manpower, Employment and Training Matuq Matuq - a member of one of the implementing committees - called him shortly after Qadhafi's speech asking for details about the U.S. system of local, state and federal governance. Fituri said Qadhafi, frustrated by the "bulky and non-responsive" GOL, had suggested the U.S. system, including independent federal agencies such as the EPA, as a possible model. Fituri told the CDA he threw cold water on the idea in his conversation with Matuq, cautioning that the U.S. system was too complex to be effectively replicated in Libya.

MUCH ACTIVITY ...

¶10. (C) The Ministry of Economy and Trade's Director of Foreign Trade, Dia Hammouda, told Emboffs March 12 that the GOL's most senior leaders are focused on implementing the "drastic" plan. The five committees responsible for the budget, economy, government/administrative structure, wealth distribution and legal reform comprise the Secretary of the General People's Congress (head of state equivalent), his deputy, the Prime Minister-equivalent, his deputy and secretaries (minister equivalents) for the relevant General People's Committees. The committees have been meeting "continuously" since the March 2 speech to develop recommendations for implementing the plan. A session to review initial plans and recommendations is scheduled for early next week. Conceding that the changes represented a serious political gamble, Hammouda cited a Libyan proverb: "From Libya comes the new".

BUT HOW MUCH REAL MOVEMENT?

... BUT HOW MUCH REAL MOVEMENT?

¶11. (C) Nonetheless, it remains unclear how extensive the change will really be. Abdulati Obeidi, MFA Secretary for European Affairs, told the visiting Lord Mayor of London on March 8 that the biggest shift could be expanding the power of the Prime Minister-equivalent's office to include "subcommittees" for issues such as health, education and infrastructure that would create policy "at the strategic level". Various GOL contacts have speculated that the existing GPC structures could remain essentially intact, but under different names and under different lines of authority, with the power of a more formalized executive in the form of a strengthened PM-equivalent's office. Underscoring the fact that real change may be slower in coming than the impatient Qadhafi would like, Deputy Foreign Minister-equivalent Muhammad Siala, whose position was summarily abolished along with all other deputy GPC secretary slots, remains in his office and is "carrying on as normal", at least for now.

"SOVEREIGN MINISTRIES" AN ACKNOWLEDGEMENT OF REALITY

¶12. (C) MFA Americas Desk Director Muhammad Matari told P/E Chief that creating the proposed five "sovereign ministries" could greatly diminish the authority of the General People's Congress in foreign policy and security issues. The general who heads the Support Division of the Ministry of Interior-equivalent told P/E Chief on March 6 that establishing foreign affairs, defense and security services as exceptions to the new rule reflected the reality that the regime rests on "the pillar of security". It was fine to tinker with social engineering in civilian ministries, but "everyone" understood that at its core the regime depended on the foreign affairs, defense and security organizations because "Libya is not an inherently stable country".

5,000 LD ALLOTMENT "AN EXAMPLE"; CENTRAL BANK CONCERNED ABOUT INFLATION

¶13. (C) Noting that the figure of 5,000 LD was "an example" of the amount of direct oil wealth transfers that might be settled on, Central Bank Chairman Bengdara stressed to the CDA on March 11 concerns about inflation. He had instead proposed that stocks and shares in government-owned companies and investment funds comprise some or all of the distribution package. Citing

TRIPOLI 00000227 004.2 OF 005

Libyans' penchant for consumer spending and lack of financial discipline, he fretted that many Libyans would fail to save and invest, limiting non-oil sector economic growth and leaving many without cash reserves if oil prices and monthly allotments dropped. Libyans are "much more like Italians than like the British" in wanting to spend rather than save, he said. Stressing the enormity of the proposed changes, Bengdara said that while Qadhafi wanted changes implemented "very soon", a realistic timeline for implementation was 10 years. Overly rapid privatization would be disastrous; privatization would need to be carefully sequenced with government restructuring to be effective.

SITUATION REGARDING QADHAFI'S SONS UNCLEAR

¶14. (C) As reported ref A, observers hoped results of the Congress would signal the relative positions of Saif al-Islam al-Qadhafi and his recently ascendant brother, Muatassim al-Qadhafi, the two sons of Leader Muammar al-Qadhafi widely considered to be rivals to succeed their father. In typical Qadhafi fashion, results of the Congress are unclear. Muatassim, as National Security Adviser, is the only Qadhafi son formally represented on the new administrative structure committee, potentially the most important of the five committees tasked with restructuring the government. But two key members of the General People's Congress (Parliament-equivalent) viewed as Muatassim allies - former Secretary of the GPC Zanati Ahmed Zanati (Speaker of the Parliament-equivalent) and Deputy Secretary of the GPC Ahmed Ibrahim - lost their seats, calling into question how much Muatassim really gained.

¶15. (C) In addition, a Jordanian national with McKinsey Consulting who works with Libya's economic and financial sectors told EconOff March 11 that Dr. Mahmoud Jibril, head of the National Planning Commission, ally of Saif al-Islam and a leading advocate for economic reform, would play a key role on three of the five implementing committees - budget, economy and wealth distribution. Jibril, who as recently as early February was so frustrated by his inability to effect reform that he had submitted letters of resignation on three occasions, is reportedly now convinced that Qadhafi's commitment to dramatic change is sincere enough that he has agreed to stay on - for now.

¶16. (C) Basem Philip (strictly protect), Nestle's Country Manager, offered a different interpretation, telling the CDA that Qadhafi's proposed changes had effectively created areas in which the three leading sons (Saif al-Islam, Muatassim, and Khamis, an army officer) could play key roles. By differentiating between economic/social areas of governance (Saif al-Islam's purview) and "sovereign ministries" divided between security organizations (Muatassim) and defense (Khamis), Qadhafi had avoided signaling which son is the leading contender to succeed him. Reiterating remarks in the run-up to the Congress, businessman Zahri Muntasser told P/E Chief March 13 that the "changes" effectively extended Qadhafi's hedge of his December 2003 "strategic bet" to give up WMD and terrorism by fostering the perception that a traditional "strong man" (Muatassim or Khamis), vice the more reformist Saif al-Islam, could take - or at least share - the reins of power.

BUSINESS COMMUNITY CONFUSED

¶17. (C) Business figures concerned by contradictory signals in late 2007 about the GOL's commitment to economic reform and hopeful that the Congress would clarify the situation (reftel) similarly argue the situation is now more confused than before. Rather than proceeding with measured reform within the existing structure while solidifying economic reform, Qadhafi was trying to "change everything at once". Frustrated by what he perceived to be "juvenile impatience", leading businessman Husni Bey (strictly protect) decried to P/E Chief the idea that the GOL could undertake wholesale structural reform and simultaneously manage the massive infrastructure and development programs it is trying to complete in time for the 40th anniversary of the revolution on September 1, 2009. Trying to undertake extensive political and economic reform simultaneously was "a recipe for disaster", he said. Muntasser told P/E Chief he had been "disappointed" by the speech and was inclined to continue waiting to see how the changes played out before deciding to undertake any further investment.

¶18. (C) Comment: This year's General People's Congress was closely watched for signs of the regime's commitment to economic and limited political reform. In classic fashion, Qadhafi surprised everyone with his call for a dramatic restructuring of Libya's existing political and economic system. His tone and language were petulant, reflecting clear frustration that the GPC system (of which he was the architect) had so demonstrably

GPC system (of which he was the architect) had so demonstrably failed, but also with the complaints of Libyan citizens about the Jamahiriya's shortcomings, particularly in the areas of education and health care. Reminded of the difficult days of the 1980's and early 1990's, when revolutionary zeal was at its peak, some contacts have expressed concern that the speech portends a return to the turbulent experimentalism of the past. The angry tone and specific proposals are more consistent with yesteryear Qadhafi offerings than with the philosopher-king image he has cultivated more recently. Businessman Zahri Muntasser flatly told the CDA that many Libyans found Qadhafi's remarks "un-statesmanlike".

¶19. (C) Comment (continued): More significant than the jarring tone was Qadhafi's seemingly contradictory mix of uber-libertarianism and old school revolutionary speak. Points blasting U.S.-style democracy as "falsifying the true will of the people" and lauding the Jamahiriya's "state of the masses" as a superior model came hard on the heels of remarks decrying the failure of the GPC's and a call for the complete privatization of Libya's socio-economic structure, a marked shift from the pseudo-socialist egalitarianism of old. Perhaps most importantly, the proposed changes would strike a direct blow at the tacit pact - cradle-to-grave subsidies financed by oil revenues in exchange for political quiescence - that has undergirded the regime for decades. Libyans' cautious optimism about receiving sizeable monthly allotments of oil revenues has been tempered by real concern about the practicalities of self-financing virtually every aspect of their lives. How aggressively the regime implements the proposed changes - it wouldn't be the first time Qadhafi's dramatic calls for change ended up being a tempest in a teacup - could determine how much more old guard elements already dissatisfied with what they perceive to be too much change are willing to take. The inclusion of more conservative individuals such as former Secretary for Manpower, Employment and Training Matuq Matuq and National Security Adviser Muatassim al-Qadhafi on the key administrative structure committee charged with implementing government re-structuring suggests an attempt to balance competing reformist and traditional constituencies. In the end, Qadhafi's speech brings to mind the recent comment of an MFA official: "We don't have a government here ... we have something else". End comment.

SUBJECT: HRW/PHR VISIT FATHI EL-JAHMI, EXPECT HIM TO RETURN HOME SOON

REF: A) TRIPOLI 223 , B) TRIPOLI 183

CLASSIFIED BY: Chris Stevens, CDA, Embassy Tripoli, Dept of State.
REASON: 1.4 (b), (d)
¶1. (C) Summary: Representatives of Human Rights Watch and Physicians for Human Rights (HRW/PHR) visited Tripoli in mid-March to perform an independent medical assessment of detained human rights activist Fathi el-Jahmi and discuss his release with interlocutors from the Qadhafi Development Foundation (QDF). El-Jahmi is expected to be released from the hospital by late March in exchange for his tacit agreement to remain silent about his detention and refrain from making political statements. He is expected to convalesce initially in Tripoli for several weeks in lodging provided by the QDF, before traveling to either Benghazi for further recovery at his family home there, or to the U.S. for further diagnosis and treatment. The QDF has indicated that it does not oppose facilitating issuance of a passport to el-Jahmi or his travel abroad, provided that he honors the terms of the agreement for his release. El-Jahmi's medical condition remains serious but is essentially stable; PHR assesses that he is medically able to return home provided he receives needed ongoing care on an outpatient basis. El-Jahmi's family has expressed concern about underwriting such treatment; the QDF may help defray those expenses. HRW/PHR, which will likely issue a press statement coordinated with QDF today or tomorrow, believe the focus for the next several weeks should be on confirming el-Jahmi's safe return home, verifying his access to needed outpatient care and facilitating issuance of a passport and arranging travel abroad for further care. End summary.

¶2. (C) Human Rights Watch (HRW) Senior Emergencies Researcher Fred Abrahams and Acting Regional Relations Director Gasser Abdel Razzak gave P/E Chief a readout March 15 of their meetings in Tripoli with detained human rights activist Fathi el-Jahmi and his family. Physicians for Human Rights (PHR) representative Dr. Scott Allen, who accompanied Abrahams and Abdel Razzak and performed an independent medical assessment of el-Jahmi, had already departed Tripoli. Abrahams and Abdel Razzak conveyed the substance of his medical assessment. El-Jahmi's daugher, Najla, who lives in Benghazi, traveled to Tripoli to meet with HRW/PHR and discuss next steps in her father's case. El-Jahmi's son, Muhammad, and his wife also met with the HRW/PHR team.

EL-JAHMI FREE TO LEAVE HOSPITAL, IN FAMILY'S CUSTODY

¶3. (C) The Qadhafi Development Foundation's (QDF) Human Rights Director, Saleh Abdulsalam, was the primary interlocutor for HRW/PHR; Abrahams and Allen also spoke by telephone with QDF Executive Director Dr. Yusuf Sawani, currently on travel outside the country. HRW/PHR described the QDF's cooperation as "superb, forthright and professional". Abdulsalam stressed that from the perspective of the GOL and the QDF, el-Jahmi's legal issues were "closed matters" and the GOL was "out of the picture". El-Jahmi had been free to return home since his "release" was announced on March 11; his family, who have legal custody of him now, may take him home at any time provided that his treating physician signs a medical release indicating it is medically safe to do so. (Note: El-Jahmi's treating physician told P/E Chief March 12 that in his professional opinion, el-Jahmi could safely leave hospital (ref A). He has since then indicated that el-Jahmi requires an additional one week to ten days in the hospital for "beta blockers" treatment for his heart. The Libyan doctor has consulted both the family and PHR's Allen regarding this recommended treatment, and the family is in agreement. End note.)

EL-JAHMI EXPECTED TO BE RELEASED BY LATE MARCH

¶4. (C) The family, led by daughter Najla, told HRW/PHR and the QDF they are prepared to take el-Jahmi home as soon as they can prepare his room in the family home in Tripoli. (Note: The home was ransacked and then occupied and damaged in 2004 when el-Jahmi, his wife and his son, Muhammad, were detained. The QDF has offered to provide a small house or apartment in Tripoli for el-Jahmi to stay in while the family's Tripoli home is being rennovated. End note.) The tacit condition for his release to his family is that he remain silent about his detention and refrain from making political statements. (Note: This is consistent with what Sawani told P/E Chief on March 3 (ref B).

consistent with what Sawani told P/E Chief on March 9 (ref B). End note.) El-Jahmi's daughter, Najla, reportedly played a key role in convincing her father that he should agree to remain quiet, stressing to him that his focus - for now - should be on recovering his health and protecting his family.

TRAVEL ABROAD FOR TREATMENT POSSIBLE, IF EL-JAHMI REMAINS QUIET

ABOUT DETENTION

¶5. (C) Conceding that HRW's preference would have been to physically escort el-Jahmi out of the hospital and to his home, Abrahams said the QDF flatly rejected that scenario, stressing the need to avoid the perception that HRW/PHR and/or the U.S. had "dictated" el-Jahmi's release to the GOL. The plan, coordinated with the QDF, is for el-Jahmi to convalesce for several weeks at the family home in Tripoli. After that, it is expected that he will fly either to Benghazi to continue convalescing at his family home there, or to Cairo and onward to the U.S. for further medical evaluation and treatment. Allen stressed that el-Jahmi will not be fit to travel by air for at least several weeks. Abdulsalam, confirming earlier remarks to Emboffs, told HRW/PHR that the QDF "is not opposed" to el-Jahmi traveling abroad for treatment, but stressed that he would need to honor the terms of his release in order for such to occur. HRW/PHR will engage with Abdulsalam in coming weeks to encourage the GOL to issue el-Jahmi a new passport so he may travel; Post will dual-track those efforts with Sawani.

HRW/PHR STATEMENT EXPECTED

¶6. (C) Allen and Abdel Razzak departed Tripoli on March 15; Abrahams is scheduled to depart today. HRW/PHR will remain in telephone and email contact with multiple members of el-Jahmi's family to confirm that he is eventually transferred home without complication. HRW/PHR intend to release a joint press statement, previewed with the QDF, on/about March 18. According to Abrahams, the statement will: 1) confirm el-Jahmi's release and welcome it as a positive development; 2) acknowledge the QDF's constructive role in securing el-Jahmi's release; 3) stress that el-Jahmi should not have been detained in the first place and express concern about the manner in which legal proceedings were conducted, and 4) note that while his medical care dramatically improved in the last two months, there is no question but that the net result of his detention and the delay in providing him treatment was a dramatic deterioration in his health. The QDF's Abdulsalam disputed the last point, asking how HRW/PHR could determine that el-Jahmi's deterioration resulted from conditions of his detention. Reprising arguments we've heard from Sawani, Abdulsalam claimed that many factors, including el-Jahmi's age (he's 66 years old) and the possibility that he had refused treatment, may have precipitated his medical complications. HRW/PHR pushed back and made it clear that the language will be included in the statement.

MEDICAL CONDITION: RELATIVELY STABLE (FOR NOW), BUT FURTHER CARE NEEDED

¶7. (C) HRW/PHR visited el-Jahmi several times at the Tripoli Medical Center (TMC), where he remained as of March 15. Four to five plainclothes security officers were present. The man described as el-Jahmi's nurse, Abdullah Bashir, was also present and facilitated access to el-Jahmi. Allen reviewed el-Jahmi's case extensively with his treating physician, Dr. Abdulrahman Mehdy, and performed an independent medical examination of el-Jahmi. Allen and Abdel Razzak were the only individuals in the room during the examination. Allen concurred in Mehdy's diagnosis and virtually all prescribed treatment, which he conveyed directly to el-Jahmi's family, as well as to Mehdy and the Qadhafi Development Foundation. (Note: There were professional differences over the relative merits of different medications, but no other points of disagreement. End note.)

MARKED IMPROVEMENT IN CARDIAC CONDITION

¶8. (C) Allen assessed el-Jahmi's condition as being essentially stable, but noted that his heart condition is serious and that he is at some risk of heart attack "at any time". El-Jahmi was "not a well man" and had been "pushed, medically, to the edge" by the lack of treatment in 2007. Nonetheless, el-Jahmi's his treatment at the TMC - once initiated in late December/early January - was "good" and his health had improved "markedly". El-Jahmi was able to walk (with difficulty) and his heart efficiency rate improved from 17 percent in July 2007 to 38 percent in late February, and to 52 percent on March 14. Allen performed a basic cognitive awareness test and assessed that el-Jahmi did well considering his long period of isolated detention and lack of access to needed medication. He did show signs of short term memory loss; Abrahams and Abdel Razzak said there were points during their visit when el-Jahmi "wasn't there, mentally". Allen concurred with Mehdy's assessment that from a medical standpoint, el-Jahmi may be safely released from the TMC and treated on an outpatient basis. Allen noted that given his current condition, el-Jahmi would have already been discharged from a western hospital to free up bed space.

FURTHER DIAGNOSTIC EXAMS NEEDED

¶9. (C) Nonetheless, el-Jahmi does have medical issues that will require ongoing care. Allen recommended that el-Jahmi undergo two procedures in the next several months: a biopsy of his enlarged prostate gland and a heart catheterization procedure to evaluate blockages and bloodflow. Both procedures are performed regularly at the TMC; Allen assessed the overall quality of care and the center's ability to safely perform the two procedures as good. El-Jahmi agreed to undergo the biopsy procedure; he has not yet consented to the heart catheterization. In addition, Allen assessed that the stent implanted in el-Jahmi's heart in Jordan in 1995 is likely nearing the end of its lifespan and will need to be replaced.

OUTPATIENT CARE CRITICAL

¶10. (C) Allen stressed to the family the need for proper outpatient care after el-Jahmi's expected release. The QDF clearly understands ongoing, outpatient treatment and access to prescribed medications and diagnostic exams will be needed, and agreed to help facilitate those. Per the QDF, there will be no restrictions on el-Jahmi's ability to return to the TMC for ongoing care on either an inpatient or outpatient basis; however, the family flatly stated they do not trust Dr. Mehdy and will seek another treating physician in consultation with Allen. The family believes it will not be a problem to identify a physician in Benghazi should el-Jahmi return there in future; however, they expressed concern about identifying an appropriate physician in Tripoli. HRW and PHR requested copies of el-Jahmi's full medical records, including treatment at the TMC and any treatment administered prior to his admission there.

FAMILY CONCERNED ABOUT FINANCING CARE, QDF MAY HELP

¶11. (C) Abrahams stressed the family's concern about how they will underwrite el-Jahmi's ongoing care. Family properties in Benghazi and Tripoli had been confiscated or damaged in connection with el-Jahmi's long-running criticism of the GOL; some properties were also sold to help make ends meet. (Note: El-Jahmi's contentious relationship with the GOL goes back more than two decades and has progressively worsened. End note.) The family asked HRW whether it could request compensation from

The family asked HRW whether it could request compensation from the QDF and/or GOL. Stressing that HRW would not/not be directly involved in such negotiations, Abrahams said QDF Human Rights Director Saleh Abdulsalam suggested the QDF could help defray el-Jahmi's medical expenses and explore the possibility of compensation. El-Jahmi's son, Muhammad, is to contact Abdulsalam directly to follow up on those issues.

NEXT STEPS

¶12. (C) Abrahams said that from the perspective of HRW/PHR, the focus in the next several weeks should be on: 1) confirming that el-Jahmi has safely returned home; 2) verifying access to appropriate outpatient care (to include resolving attendant financial issues), and 3) urging the QDF and GOL to issue el-Jahmi a passport and facilitate his travel abroad for further treatment. HRW/PHR may try to facilitate a visit by a cardiologist from Cairo or Tunis in approximately two weeks to assess el-Jahmi's condition and outpatient care.

13 (C) Comment: HRW/PHR believe that the QDF and GOL have an interest in seeing that el-Jahmi's health does not seriously deteriorate while he is in Libya and will therefore be likely to facilitate his travel abroad for care. We concur, but his physical security in the near-term remains a concern. Sawani told P/E Chief on March 3 that the QDF had to intevene in 2004 to pre-empt efforts by unspecified regime elements to kill el-Jahmi outright (rather than detain him) after he gave an interview to satellite television channel al-Hurra criticizing Leader Muammar al-Qadhafi and the GOL. The presence of security officials outside el-Jahmi's room at the TMC is doubtless motivated in part by a desire to monitor his activities and visitors, but also by the GOL's interest in ensuring his physical safety. Post will remain in contact with el-Jahmi's family members and will visit him at home after his expected return to assess his condition there and arrangements for his outpatient treatment. We will also remain in contact with the QDF to urge issuance of el-Jahmi's passport and dispensation for him to travel abroad. Whether el-Jahmi honors the terms of the tacit agreement for his release will be critical in determining the extent to which we, the QDF and HRW/PHR are able to ensure his physical safety and facilitate issuance of a passport and travel abroad for treatment. End comment.

CLASSIFIED BY: Chris Stevens, Charge d'Affaires, U.S. Embassy Tripoli, U.S. Department of State.
REASON: 1.4 (e)

¶1. (C) Summary: Libya's banking reform program continues to make progress. Buoyed by the windfall that accompanied the February 13 sale of a share in state-run Wahda Bank to Jordan's Arab Bank, the Central Bank is pressing forward with its own restructuring and training programs. There may be opportunities for increased private sector cooperation with U.S. banks and opportunities for the USG to help train Libya's next generation of bankers. End Summary.

¶2. (SBU) Based on the assessment of Central Bank Governor Farhat Bengadara and the project director of the firm serving as his strategic advisor (McKinsey and Company), Libya's bank reform is making solid progress. CDA met with Bengadara on March 11 to discuss the Central Bank of Libya's (CBL) ongoing program of banking reform, and to solicit updates on its training programs and openness to U.S. assistance. Econoff met separately with the team leader for McKinsey and Company, a U.S. firm providing strategic guidance to the entire CBL reform program.

BANK PRIVATIZATIONS PROCEEDING APACE ...

¶3. (C) The CBL remains satisfied with its ongoing program of privatizations and mergers for Libya's state-run commercial banks. Jordan-based Arab Bank's successful $310 million bid for a 19 percent share of Wahda Bank (reftel) has bolstered the GOL's commitment to banking reform. The winning bid came in at almost ten times the estimated book value for Wahda Bank. (Note: Book value was computed by U.S. accounting firm KPMG, which is working with the CBL on its reform program. Arab Bank's branches in Libya were nationalized in 1970, fueling some speculation that its high bid was driven in part by a desire to "reclaim" its position in Libya. End Note). The high sale price has been interpreted in some GOL quarters as an expression of increased confidence in Libya by the international financial community. The successful three-stage bidding process (initial application, technical bid, financial bid) by which the sale was conducted has validated the transparent approach advocated by the CBL.

...DESPITE SOME HARDBALL, ITALIAN-STYLE

¶4. (C) In the weeks leading up to the announcement of Arab Bank's winning bid, two of five foreign banks interested in bidding pulled out. The most publicized decision was that of France-based Societe Generale, which cited "technical reasons" widely assumed (and privately confirmed to Econoff by a local McKinsey representative) to be linked to the bank's exposure to the sub-prime mortgage crunch and recent $10 billion losses incurred by a rogue trader. The less public withdrawal was by Italy-based Intessa, which sought to play hardball with the CBL by demanding ten changes in the way the transaction would be implemented. The CBL rejected Intessa's overture over concerns that the offer upset an otherwise level playing field for other bidders. Encouraged by McKinsey, the CBL chose to adhere to its three-tier bid process and international standards for transparency. In the end, despite offering one of the higher bids, Intessa was outstripped by Arab Bank's financial offer.

CENTRAL BANK INTERNAL REFORMS ONGOING

¶5. (C) The CBL is currently upgrading its monetary policy functions to better manage monetary policy functions. It is also seeking to develop more robust research and banking supervision departments, with the latter firmly fixed on making a transition to risk assessment, vice direct involvement in the transactions of its affiliated state-run banks. Drawing on foreign expertise from McKinsey, Oracle, KPMB and others, the CBL is also in the process of implementing upgrades to the structure of the entire banking system, to include new IT structure of the entire banking system, to include new IT systems, a standardized loan application packet and a national payment system. CBL Governor Bengadara anticipates the process will take an additional three years to complete. The CBL is also in the process of creating a credit bureau, a project being implemented by U.S. firm Dunn and Bradstreet, with overall supervision by McKinsey.

¶6. (SBU) Bengadara bemoaned the fact that the CBL remains engaged in a number of activities more appropriately handled by the Ministry of Finance, including the national budget and the privatization of Libyan state-run banks. The CBL and MinFin are both currently working with the IMF on a restructuring program, and the CBL anticipates agreeing on a separate reform program with the World Bank on the margins of the upcoming IMF/World Bank Spring meetings in Washington.

A FOCUS ON TRAINING

¶7. (SBU) The CBL has established the Tripoli-based "Banking and Financial Studies Center" in accordance with a October 2006 GPC decree. It currently offers short-term, general courses in computer skills and banking operations, and medium-term English language training. The CBL also sends students to the U.K. for English language training, and has 45 students there pursuing master's degrees in banking. (Note: At Bengadara's request, Post is following-up with CBL staff to provide information on U.S. universities that offer MBAs and MA's in commercial and central banking. End Note).

¶8. (SBU) As part of the training effort, the McKinsey team in Tripoli is focusing on requalifying the CBL's human resources staff, emphasizing recruitment and performance management skills training. Serious deficiencies in accounting standards persist throughout the banking system; the situation has not shown tangible signs of improvement. The dearth of reliable information on Libyan banks and companies continues to hinder economic growth, as Libyan savings continue to be spent abroad more than at home, and foreign companies are dissuaded from entering an opaque market.

ASSESSMENT TIME

¶9. (SBU) Standard & Poor's and Moody's, two of the top evaluators of credit risk, are expected to be invited to conduct an assessment of Libya sometime during the next six months. Excluding WB and IMF reports, this type of assessment has not been done previously in Libya. The GOL intends that the assessment signal to the international business community that Libya's banks are open for business, and to demonstrate interest in tapping the international bond market in a serious way.

¶10. (C) Comment: Bengadara impressed us as a credible, savvy interlocutor. Concerns about English language ability and technical skills below the CBL's uppermost echelons remain; however, he clearly signaled a willingness in principle to cooperate with the USG on training, to include counter-terrorism finance. Banking reform is moving ahead; we likely have a window of 18 to 24 months in which to contribute on the training and reform front. Post will work with Bengadara and his senior staff to gain support for critical training programs, particularly in CT finance. End comment.

¶1. (C) During a March 11 meeting with Farhat Bengadara, Governor of Libya's Central Bank, the CDA asked about press reports that Libya had signed a number of financial and economic agreements with Iran in December 2007 during the visit of Iranian First Vice President Davoudi to Tripoli (reftel). CDA

Iranian First Vice President Davoudi to Tripoli (refer). CDA noted in particular an MOU that the Libyan press had described as providing for "a framework for cooperation between the central banks of Libya and Iran" and asked how it was being implemented.

¶2. (C) Apparently sensing underlying concerns behind the CDA's question, Bengadara downplayed the significance of the MOU. Characterizing the MOU's language as "very standard", he stressed that the agreement lacked "substance or specifics" and did not mandate significant commitments from either party. Libya was "very careful" in its nascent engagement with Iran, and was not inclined to accelerate or deepen cooperation with Iran on banking or investment beyond the limited MOU's and agreements signed during Davoudi's visit. (Note: Previous reports suggested Iran was pressuring the GOL to sign more formal agreements and treaties on investment and trade immediately after Davoudi's visit. End note.) The U.S. "should not worry" about the the MOU, which did not provide for or extend to activities that would cause concern.

¶3. (C) Comment: Bengadara was keen to emphasize that the December 2007 MOU was more form than substance, a position at odds with what the Iranian DCM here has reportedly conveyed to other Tripoli-based diplomats. Given Libya's strained relations with Iran over Lebanon, its desire to improve relations with the United States and EU countries, we expect the GOL to move cautiously in its responding to Iranian overtures. End comment.

¶1.    (S)  Summary.  Authority at Tripoli International Airport is clearly divided between security services and civilian authorities, General Youssef al-Jeribi, the airport's director, told a visiting Anti-Terrorism Assistance (ATA) team and Emboffs on March 3.  Together with top security and intelligence

On March 3, together with top security and intelligence officials, al-Jeribi briefed the U.S. delegation on current airport security practices and explained competencies of the eight security services charged with protecting Tripoli's airport and its passengers. The Internal Security Organization (ISO) maintains a 70-member counterrorism "rapid response" team that can deploy to any crisis nation-wide within 60 minutes; in addition, an armed air marshall flies on all international and domestic flight in Libya. The airport leadership also briefed the U.S. team on the airport's emergency protocols and plans to expand with the construction of a new international passenger terminal. Libyan officials were forthcoming in their discussions of internal procedures, which potentially augurs well for further cooperation on airport security in the future. End summary.

¶2. (S) On March 3, Tripoli airport director General Youssef al-Jeribi briefed a visiting ATA assessment team and Emboffs on current security procedures at at Tripoli International Airport. The director of airport security, the assistant director of the airport, the chief of the Internal Security Organization (ISO) office at the airport, the chief of the External Security Organization (ESO) office at the airport, the chief of the airport's passport division, and the chief of the airport's uniformed police also participated in the meeting. C.B. Stevens, Director of North Africa Programs in the Bureau of Diplomatic Security's ATA office led the U.S. team, which also included representatives from POL/ECON, RSO, and RAO.

AUTHORITY DIVIDED BETWEEN SECURITY SERVICES AND CIVILIAN ENTITIES

¶3. (S) According to al-Jeribi, authority at Tripoli International Airport (TIP) is clearly divided between civilian authorities and security services. The director of airport security is responsible for coordinating activities of the eight independent security agencies working at the airport -- the Internal Security Organization (ISO), the External Security Organization (ESO), Customs, Passports/Immigration, the Office of the Director of the Port of Tripoli, the Office of the Director of Airport Security, the Civil Protection Department, and the uniformed police. As airport director, al-Jeribi is responsible for overseeing all civilian departments: the Departments of Finance, Legal Affairs, Administration, and Safety. In the event of a crisis requiring coordination between civilian and security authorities, Libyan agency representatives agreed (after some debate) that the airport director (al-Jeribi) is responsible for overseeing both services' response to the crisis. The Libyan military is not/not involved in airport security, nor would it be involved in any emergency response.

RESPONSIBILITIES OF SECURITY SERVICES WORKING AT TRIPOLI AIRPORT

¶4. (S) The Internal Security Organization (ISO) maintains the largest presence at the airport and is responsible for all physical and technical security at the airport facility. ISO employs technical surveillance to track all passengers entering the airport from curb-side, through check-in and passport control, until they board their out-going flight. All X-ray machines in TIP are operated by ISO officers. In addition, ISO is responsible for document control and passenger screening of all Libyan nationals traveling in or out of Tripoli International Airport. ISO showed the U.S. delegation a video control room, staffed by two ISO officers and a control room director, housing approximately 25 video monitors capturing live video from the airport's runways, terminal, baggage facilities, and roadways around the terminal building. The airport leadership mentioned without elaboration that ISO, along with ESO, captures still images of all travelers passing through document checks.

¶5. (S) In addition, ISO also oversees a 70-member anti-terrorist "rapid response" team based in Tripoli (not/not at the airport) that TIP's ISO Director can call on in the event of an emergency. Libya hopes to create a group of anti-terrorist SWAT teams in line with international standards that can respond "like a surgeon" to any crisis, the airport's ISO director told the delegation. ISO also maintains a dedicated plane to transport the Tripoli-based anti-terrorist team to other locations in Libya. The airport's ISO Director said the ISO anti-terrorist team could arrive at any airport in Libya within 60 minutes of notification of an incident.

¶6. (S) The External Security Organization (ESO) is responsible for tracking all non-Libyans traveling through TIP airport. ESO maintains a watchlist of foreign nationals, focusing on counterterrorism and preventing illegal migration, and uses the watchlist to screen all foreign passengers traveling to/from Libya. In addition, ESO is solely responsible for providing security to official delegations traveling to Tripoli. ESO officers, along with ISO officers, provide covert surveillance in all public areas of the airport. Finally, ESO is responsible for "facilitating travel by foreign diplomats". In practice, this means that ESO officers (not/not passport and immigration officials) perform document checks and baggage screening on foreign diplomats arriving at and departing from TIP airport.

¶7. (C) The uniformed police are responsible for providing overt security to the airport facility and surrounding areas. By contrast with ISO officials, police officers provide an "obvious, visible" presence. Police do not/not maintain any technical surveillance capabilities of the airport facility. The Chief of Police at the TIP airport told the U.S. delegation that police maintain an active presence on the roads surrounding the airport, the taxi rank in front of the passenger terminal, the airport's parking lots, and the tarmac. Police authority is generally limited and the ISO Director noted that ISO, not the uniformed police, would be responsible for any crisis response.

ARMED AIR MARSHALL ON ALL FLIGHTS

¶8. (S) Assistant Director of the TIP airport Ezzeddin told Poloff that an armed, Libyan air marshall travels on all international and domestic flights operated in and out of Tripoli's airport. He did not specify which security service provided the air marshalls. (Note: His remarks echo a January 24 remark by Libyan Arab Air General Director Tarek Arebi to CDA that Libyan security services provide armed air marshalls on all international and domestic flights. End note.)

EMERGENCY PLANNING

¶9. (C) Three authorities are charged with planning the TIP airport's response to a crisis: the National Committee for Aviation Security (NCAS), the Committee for Airport Security (CAS), and the ISO's Office for Prevention and Counterterrorism (OPC). The NCAS is a civilian authority that oversees current security practices at Libya's airports and recommends changes to extant security procedures. The CAS is a committee consisting of department heads from TIP's eight security departments and has the authority to respond in real-time to an incident at TIP airport. The OPC is responsible for overseeing the ISO's program to develop a team of counterrorism rapid response teams.

¶10. (C) In the event of an emergency (such as a hijacking), TIP airport maintains an ICAO-approved emergency plan that calls for all security and civilian services to cooperate within the CAS under the leadership of the Director al-Jeribi. During a crisis, al-Jeribi is solely responsible for communicating between the airport and civil aviation authorities. TIP airport has a dedicated location to be used in the event of a hijacked aircraft.

¶11. (C) According to al-Jeribi, Libya has already partnered with Italy, France, Jordan, and Egypt to provide security training to Libyan personnel working at TIP. Most training courses take place in Libya and are designed to enable Libya to better select "future leaders" for training abroad. He expressed his hope that some senior security officers could receive practical training in the United States.

AIRPORT DIRECTOR BRIEFS ON AIRPORT EXPANSION PLANS

¶12. (SBU) Al-Jeribi also briefed the U.S. delegation on plans to open a new passenger terminal capable of carrying up to 20 million passenger per year. He said the airport had not put out any procurement requests for security equipment at the new terminal, noting that TIP management plans to wait until the completion of terminal construction before acquiring new equipment. He said the GOL has a cadre of experts capable of selecting the necessary security equipment and that Libya will not/not require outside assistance in choosing which equipment to purchase. Al-Jeribi noted that the airport has received a number of unsolicited proposals for equipment sales from foreign companies, including American, British, French, German, and Chinese companies. Once the new passenger terminal opens, the current TIP international terminal will be used for domestic flights. Cargo operations will remain at Matiga Airport in Tripoli.

¶13. (C) Comment: Airport officials were forthcoming in their description of internal operations and protocols, and expressed strong interest in further U.S.-Libyan cooperation on airport security training. Post is currently working with the GOL to facilitate an airport security training program under EXBS auspices, with a target date of May. End comment.

SUBJECT: GOL DELAYS RELEASING DETAINED HUMAN RIGHTS ACTIVIST FATHI EL-JAHMI

REF: A) TRIPOLI 223 , B) TRIPOLI 229

CLASSIFIED BY: Chris Stevens, CDA, Embassy Tripoli, Dept of State.
REASON: 1.4 (b), (d)
¶1. (C) Summary: A pair of recent visits by Emboffs to detained human rights activist Fathi el-Jahmi, who remains at the Tripoli Medical Center (TMC) despite assurances he would be released in late March, suggest that the GOL and Qadhafi Development Foundation (QDF) are using prostate complications attendant to a recent change in medication as a pretext to delay his discharge while they pressure his family to sign a written pledge that he will refrain from political statements or discussion of his detention after his release. The QDF subsequently told Post the requirement for a signed, written statement had been dropped, but the family claims this has not been conveyed to them. El-Jahmi's treating physician believes his prostate condition is not/not serious and says el-Jahmi's cardiac condition - the most serious of his medical issues - is stable enough that he may be safely discharged immediately. The physician is under considerable pressure to not/not discharge el-Jahmi and has suggested a mechanism by which Dr. Scott Allen of Physicians for Human Rights, who recently saw el-Jahmi, would recommend directly to the QDF that he be discharged. El-Jahmi asked that the Embassy explore the possibility of either transporting him from the TMC to his home in an Embassy vehicle or escorting him; he also requested political asylum in the U.S. (guidance request at para 13). End summary.

VISITS TO THE TMC

¶2. (C) P/E Chief visited el-Jahmi at the Tripoli Medical Center (TMC) on March 27 and March 30. El-Jahmi's wife and sons, Muhammad and Ahmed, were present during both visits. His treating physician, Dr. Abdulrahman Mehdy, was present for the second visit on March 30. Three plainclothes security officials, whom P/E Chief has seen before (ref A and previous) were present during the first visit, but not the second. Breaking with past practice, P/E Chief established a time for the second visit with el-Jahmi's son, Muhammad, by telephone. Muhammad said security officials, who are otherwise constantly present, vacated their posts about 30 minutes before P/E Chief arrived on March 30. He speculated that the GOL wanted to be able to claim that el-Jahmi was not in custody. The man described as el-Jahmi's "nurse", Abdullah Bashir, was not present during either visit.

EL-JAHMI'S CARDIAC CONDITION STABLE

¶3. (C) Dr. Mehdy described el-Jahmi's current medical condition as "stable and good"; however, a new beta blocker heart medication introduced after the recent visit of Human Rights Watch (HRW) and Physicians for Human Rights (PHR) had adversely interacted with one of el-Jahmi's medications for his prostate condition, causing his blood pressure to drop. The prostate medication was discontinued; el-Jahmi subsequently experienced a resurgence of prostate-related symptoms (burning during micturation and minor incontinence). Mehdy stressed those conditions were not/not serious and did not, in his opinion, prevent el-Jahmi from being discharged from hospital.

PROSTATE COMPLICATION NOT/NOT SERIOUS

¶4. (C) Clarifying contradictory reports from HRW and the media about proposed surgical intervention for el-Jahmi's prostate condition, Mehdy explained that the TMC's resident urologist, in Italy for a conference, would return to Tripoli April 2 and would assess el-Jahmi's condition on/about April 3. In his initial consultations with Mehdy, the urologist suggested his preference would be to remove el-Jahmi's prostate and subsequently biopsy it to determine whether any malignancy was present. (Note: It was unclear late last week whether the proposed procedure would be a biopsy or removal of el-Jahmi's prostate. End note.) Mehdy said another approach, believed to be that advocated by PHR's Dr. Scott Allen, who visited el-Jahmi circa March 12-14, would be to first biopsy el-Jahmi's prostate to determine whether it was necessary to remove it.

DOCTOR SAYS (PRIVATELY) THAT EL-JAHMI CAN BE RELEASED ...

¶5. (C) Mehdy said el-Jahmi's cardiac condition was, in his medical opinion, sufficiently stable that he could be safely medical opinion, sufficiently stable that he could be safely discharged from the TMC, provided he received needed ongoing care on an outpatient basis. The typical observation period for the new beta blocker medication introduced after the HRW/PHR visit was two weeks. That period had already elapsed. A very conservative approach would call for a further four to five days of observation, but barring any change in condition el-Jahmi could be released by about April 4. El-Jahmi's prostate condition was not/not serious enough to delay his discharge.

... BUT STRESSES HE IS UNDER PRESSURE NOT TO SIGN DISCHARGE PAPERS

¶6. (C) Having said el-Jahmi that, a visibly nervous Mehdy stressed that he must check with "the others" (later clarified as being a reference to the QDF and security officials) before signing el-Jahmi's discharge papers. After some verbal dancing, he told P/E Chief he was under "considerable pressure" and "could not bear the burden of the decision to discharge (el-Jahmi) alone". Saying it would help if the recommendation to discharge el-Jahmi was not seen to come from him, Mehdy suggested that a mechanism would be for the PHR's Dr. Allen to contact the QDF - either directly or through Post - to recommend el-Jahmi's discharge based on telephone consultations with the TMC. Mehdy would then either concur with - or at least not oppose - that recommendation.

QDF TELLS FAMILY THEY MUST SIGN PLEDGE TO KEEP EL-JAHMI QUIET

¶7. (C) El-Jahmi's family said they have all but completed repairs to the family home in Tripoli and would be ready to take el-Jahmi there directly from the TMC. Earlier discussions about the QDF providing a furnished flat or villa in which el-Jahmi could convalesce before his expected return to Benghazi had not born fruit. During P/E Chief's visit on March 27, Muhammad said QDF Human Rights Director Abdelsalem Saleh had stipulated that Muhammad and his mother sign a document as a condition for his discharge from hospital pledging that el-Jahmi would not "speak with anyone in any channel" about political issues or his experience in detention. The signed statement would make Muhammad and his mother responsible for keeping el-Jahmi quiet. Saleh told Muhammad that el-Jahmi and his family would "be directly affected" if el-Jahmi spoke with anyone after leaving hospital. QDF Executive Director Sawani subsequently called the CDA, asking that he convey to Washington that after consultation with the QDF's chairman (i.e., Saif al-Islam al-Qadhafi), the requirement for a signed, written pledge had been dropped. El-Jahmi's wife and sons stressed to P/E Chief on March 30 that the QDF had not/not told them that the requirement for a signed statement had been dropped.

¶8. (C) El-Jahmi told P/E Chief on March 27 that he would not/not agree to any "formal conditions" in exchange for his discharge, and had told his wife and Muhammad that he did not/not consent to their signing the QDF's proposed pledge, either. As reported ref B, during HRW/PHR's visit, el-Jahmi agreed to abide by the tacit understanding that he would refrain from public statements about political issues or his detention. According to HRW/PHR, el-Jahmi's daughter, Najla, played a key role in convincing her father that he should agree to remain quite, stressing to him that his focus - for now - should be on recovering his health and protecting his family.

EL-JAHMI REQUESTS POLITICAL ASYLUM

¶9. (C) On March 27, el-Jahmi told P/E Chief he needed "international protection" and mentioned asylum. He asked that the Embassy explore the possibility of either transporting him from the TMC to his home in an Embassy vehicle or escorting him.

On March 30, he reiterated the request for protection and clarified his remarks on asylum, indicating that he was requesting political asylum from the U.S. Noting references to an asylum request in a media statement by el-Jahmi's brother, resident in the U.S., P/E Chief said he would convey the request. Given GOL sensitivities, P/E Chief noted that our ability to act on that request would depend in part on limiting public discussion of it. (Note: As reported ref B, the QDF indicated it was "not opposed" to facilitating issuance of a passport to el-Jahmi to travel abroad for treatment, provided he abided by the tacit understanding that he would refrain from speaking publicly about political issues or his experience in detention. End note.)

THE WAY AHEAD: COMMENT & GUIDANCE REQUEST

¶10. (C) Comment: It increasingly appears that the GOL, acting through the QDF, is using el-Jahmi's prostate complications as a pretext to delay releasing him while they pressure Muhammad and his mother to formally pledge that el-Jahmi will stay quiet after his discharge. Saif al-Islam al-Qadhafi, who is personally involved, has a considerable personal stake in ensuring that el-Jahmi's release does not prompt adverse media reaction akin to that in the Bulgarian nurses case last summer. The QDF is in the delicate position of trying to facilitate el-Jahmi's release to respond positively to international pressure and assuring reluctant old guard regime elements that the GOL will not be embarrassed for its efforts. Post recommends that NEA/MAG contact Dr. Allen in the U.S. to: 1) pass el-Jahmi's latest test results (sent to NEA/MAG by email); 2) ask him to consult with Dr. Mehdy by telephone and, 3) explore whether Dr. Allen would be willing to recommend to the QDF - either directly or through Post - that el-Jahmi is fit to be discharged. (Note: Post is not in a position to have confidential conversations with Dr. Allen. End note.)

SIPDIS

¶11. (C) Comment (continued): Post notes that the QDF's Dr. Sawani is currently in Washington for a joint Green Book Society/Middle East Institute conference on Libya and Africa, scheduled to take place March 31. If the opportunity arises to engage Dr. Sawani while he is in Washington, Post suggests that the following points be conveyed to him: 1) our understanding is that there is no medical reason for keeping el-Jahmi in hospital; 2) el-Jahmi should be released from the TMC now; 3) there should be no formal conditions for el-Jahmi's release and, 4) it is expected that the QDF and GOL will ensure el-Jahmi's physical safety. Post would suggest the following points for any public statements on the case: 1) We welcome news that Fathi el-Jahmi's medical condition has improved since he began receiving treatement, and; 2) the embassy has visited el-Jahmi regularly to assess his medical condition and prognosis for his release, and has been in regular contact with el-Jahmi and his family. (Note: Post strongly recommends that the Department not/not disclose publicly or to HRW/PHR and others that el-Jahmi has requested asylum; our ability to successfully secure el-Jahmi's passport and dispensation to travel will depend in large measure on the extent to which our engagement and role remain quiet. End note.)

¶12. (C) Guidance Request: Post requests guidance on how to respond to el-Jahmi's request for political asylum. End comment & guidance request.

SUBJECT: MFA WEIGHS IN ON EL-JAHMI CASE

REF: TRIPOLI 266

CLASSIFIED BY: John T. Godfrey, CDA, Embassy Tripoli, Dept of State.
REASON: 1.4 (b), (d)

¶1. (C) Summary: In the course of a meeting on other issues, an MFA interlocutor cautioned that recent public remarks by USG officials on the case of detained human rights activist Fathi el-Jahmi had not been helpful and could be construed as interference in Libya's domestic affairs. Unspecified elements of the GOL were angered by public comments on el-Jahmi's case at a conference on Libya in Washington. Post's channel for engagement on el-Jahmi has been restricted to the quasi-governmental Qadhafi Development Foundation; the MFA's intervention potentially represents a new wrinkle. From the GOL's perspective, the fact that the remarks at the conference were public likely had as much to do with its adverse reaction as the substance of the intervention. End summary.

¶2. (C) In a meeting with the CDA and Poloff on April 1 on separate issues, MFA Americas Desk Officer Muhammad Ayab asked the CDA for clarification on PDAS Feltman's March 31 remarks at a conference in Washington hosted by the Middle East Institute (MEI) and Libya's Green Book Society (GBS) calling for the immediate, unconditional release of detained human rights activist Fathi el Jahmi. Cautioning that such statements " ... will not help in building understanding", he added the GOL "hopes the U.S. will accurately understand the situation and avoid interference in Libya's domestic affairs". Reiterating points we've heard before from the Qadhafi Development Foundation (QDF), he said el-Jahmi had been transferred to the custody of his family and remained at the Tripoli Medical Center (TMC) - under his family's supervision - for needed medical care. (Note: Reftel details Post's understanding of el-Jahmi's medical condition and issues preventing his discharge from the TMC. End note.) Feltman's remarks and U.S. involvement "could" be construed as interference in Libya's domestic affairs. (Note: Ayab did not appear to have a clear understanding of what the remarks actually were. End note.)

¶3. (C) Pushing back, the CDA reiterated points conveyed by NEA/MAG Director Elizabeth Hopkins to the QDF's Dr. Yusuf Sawani on the margins of the GBS/MEI conference: 1) our understanding is that there is no medical reason for keeping el-Jahmi in hospital; 2) el-Jahmi should be released from the TMC now; 3) there should be no formal conditions for el-Jahmi's release and, 4) it is expected that the QDF and GOL will ensure el-Jahmi's physical safety.

¶4. (C) Noting the use of the word "should", Ayab questioned whether the U.S. was dictating to the GOL that el-Jahmi must be released. The CDA clarified that at the conclusion of the Human Rights Watch/Physicians for Human Rights (HRW/PHR) visit in mid-March, there was a perceived common understanding between the QDF, HRW/PHR and the U.S. that el-Jahmi was expected to leave the TMC and return home on/about March 26. That had not occurred. Our position, based on our understanding of el-Jahmi's current condition - his cardiac condition was stable and his prostate condition was not serious - was that it was medically safe for the TMC to discharge him. Noting that el-Jahmi's case was the focus of considerable international attention, the CDA stressed that the Embassy had respected the QDF's preference for quiet engagement. The fact that we had commented publicly at the GBR/MEI conference underscored broad concern about the perception that the GOL and QDF were using el-Jahmi's prostate condition as a pretext to delay discharging him from hospital.

¶5. (C) Comment: Ayab's intervention on el-Jahmi's case represents a new development; post's communication since late last year on this issue has been restricted to QDF channels. Our principal interlocutor, the QDF's Dr. Yusuf Sawani, has been more measured in cautioning us against giving the appearance of meddling in an ostensibly internal Libyan matter. Ayab does not typically engage on these issues and did not appear to be fully briefed (his colleague, Muhammad Matari, typically handles such issues, but is in Washington for the GBR/MEI conference). Nonetheless, Ayab called the CDA after the meeting to stress that unspecified GOL elements were "angry" about Feltman's comments at the GBR/MEI conference. From the GOL's perspective, the fact that the remarks were public likely had as much to do with its adverse reaction as the substance of the intervention. End comment.

SUBJECT: FATHI EL-JAHMI'S MEDICAL CONDITION DETERIORATES; ADDITIONAL HOSPITAL TIME MAY BE NEEDED

REF: A) TRIPOLI 275 , B) HOPKINS-GODFREY EMAIL 4/01/08, TRIPOLI 275 , B) TRIPOLI 266

CLASSIFIED BY: Chris Stevens, CDA, Embassy Tripoli, Dept of State.
REASON: 1.4 (b), (d)
¶1. (C) Summary: The medical condition of detained human rights activist Fathi el-Jahmi appears to have taken a turn for the worse, necessitating - in the judgment of his treating physician

- an additional two to three weeks in hospital for observation and treatment. Should his condition improve, el-Jahmi refuses to consider acceding to a tacit agreement to refrain from political statements or comments about his experience in detention in exchange for his discharge from hospital. He walked back from his earlier request for political asylum, saying his preference is to remain in Libya with his family - provided that his physical security is assured - with the possibility of traveling abroad for medical treatment. He and his wife agreed that the next steps in his case should be: 1) ensuring that his medical condition stabilizes enough that he can be released; 2) securing the requisite signature on his discharge papers and ensuring his discharge from the TMC; 3) ensuring his physical safety after his return home; 4) ensuring access to needed outpatient care for his cardiac and prostate conditions, and; 5) later, securing his passport and dispensation from the GOL to travel abroad for medical care. An unexpected attempt by a camera crew to film Emboff visiting el-Jahmi underscores the GOL's sensitivity in the wake of public remarks on el-Jahmi's case by USG officials.
The deterioration in el-Jahmi's medical condition, while troubling, potentially affords a useful window of opportunity in which to allow what has become a neuralgic issue to settle, potentially facilitating more productive engagement. End summary.

DETERIORATION IN MEDICAL CONDITION

¶2. (C) P/E Chief visited Fathi el-Jahmi at the Tripoli Medical Center on April 3. El-Jahmi's wife, treating physician (Dr. Abdulrahman Mehdy) and a man described as his nurse, Abdullah Bashir, were also present. An echocardiogram performed in P/E Chief's presence showed the el-Jahmi's blood ejection fraction had decreased from 52.5 percent on/about March 14 to 42 percent on April 3. Mehdy indicated that 52.5 percent had been at "the low end of normal"; 42 percent was below normal.
El-Jahmi's blood pressure remained at 100/60 to 120/70.
El-Jahmi appeared tired, disoriented and feeble, by contrast with his condition when P/E Chief visited him on March 30, when Mehdy indicated that el-Jahmi was medically fit to be discharged. (Note: As reported ref A, Mehdy indicated he was ready to sign el-Jahmi's discharge papers, but indicated he was under considerable pressure not to do so from the QDF and security officials. End note.)

EL-JAHMI NOT/NOT MEDICALLY FIT FOR DISCHARGE

¶3. (C) Mehdy said he believed a beta-blocker medication el-Jahmi began taking immediately after the visit of Human Rights Watch and Physicians for Human Rights (HRW/PHR) had precipitated the deterioration in el-Jahmi's cardiac condition. Mehdy indicated that el-Jahmi was not/not medically fit for release at the present time, and should remain in hospital for an additional two to three weeks for observation and to see whether his condition improves. Mehdy has been in regular telephone contact with PHR's Dr. Scott Allen, who visited and examined el-Jahmi on/about March 14, and HRW's Fred Abrahams. He spoke with both on April 2 and expected Allen to call him later today to discuss el-Jahmy's case.

EL-JAHMI REJECTS TACIT AGREEMENT TO REMAIN SILENT AS CONDITION OF RELEASE

¶4. (C) Per ref B, P/E Chief asked el-Jahmi whether he understood that the GOL and QDF were insisting that he accede to a tacit agreement to refrain from political statements and discussing his experiences in detention to secure his release. (Note: The QDF's Human Rights Director, Abdelsalem Saleh, had earlier pressured el-Jahmi's wife and son, Muhammad, to sign a statement pledging that el-Jahmi would not speak with anyone in any channel about political issues or his experience in detention. El-Jahmi refused to agree to any "formal conditions" for his discharge, and did not consent to his wife and son signing the discharge, and did not consent to his wife and son signing the document. End note.) Asserting his right to free speech, he said that if released, he would not agree to avoid the press - but would not seek it out, either.

WALKS BACK ASYLUM REQUEST, WANTS TO REMAIN IN LIBYA

¶5. (C) Per ref B, P/E Chief asked el-Jahmi whether he understood what it meant to request asylum. If granted, he would forever leave his home and country, likely with only a few of his family members. El-Jahmi stressed that his preference "from the beginning of his quarrels with Qadhafi" was to remain in Libya, working to advance the cause of the Libyan people. Qadhafi had not respected that wish. Pressed on whether he wished to pursue formal asylum, el-Jahmi said he knows that he hasn't long to live, that he wants to remain in Libya with his family, and that he wants to be able to travel abroad for medical treatment. He stressed that he would need "protection" if he remained in Libya. P/E Chief made it clear that the Embassy is not/not in position to provide such security. El-Jahmi repeated several times that he "wants to live freely under the law".

TRIPOLI 00000280 002 OF 002

NEXT STEPS

¶6. (C) It was agreed with el-Jahmi and his wife that the next steps should be:
- ensuring that his medical condition stabilizes enough that he can be released;
- securing the requisite signature on his discharge papers and ensuring his discharge from the TMC;
- ensuring his physical safety after his return home;
- ensuring access to needed outpatient care for his cardiac and prostate conditions, and;
- later, securing his passport and dispensation from the GOL to travel abroad - at some point in the future - for medical care.

MEDIA AMBUSH

¶7. (C) Shortly after P/E Chief's arrival, a camera crew burst into el-Jahmi's hospital room, shoved aside the doctor and began asking el-Jahmi questions about his medical condition, quality of care at the TMC, and whether he may receive "local and international" visitors. P/E Chief quietly ducked out of the room to avoid appearing on camera. A member of the team in the corridor said they were from a "European news channel", but refused to identify himself or show any credentials. The crew emerged from the room and asked P/E Chief to give remarks. He refused and re-entered el-Jahmi's room. The crew burst in a short while later, clearly distressing el-Jahmi, and again pressed P/E Chief for comment while filming. (Note: Mehdy later told P/E Chief the crew had pressed him and el-Jahmi to identify P/E Chief; he claimed neither did so. End note.)

¶8. (C) Comment: The reported deterioration in el-Jahmi's medical condition, while troubling, potentially affords a useful window of opportunity in which to allow what has become a neuralgic issue to settle, potentially facilitating more productive engagement. Recent public remarks by USG officials and the HRW/PHR statement of March 29 clearly hit a nerve, likely contributing to the decision to have the MFA convoke us on April 1 to register protest and the media stunt during today's hospital visit. The QDF and GOL believe we and others have not given them credit for steps already taken, and that we are seeking to embarrass the regime. We should seek to avoid that misperception by encouraging a return to quiet, measured engagement to secure progress on steps outlined in para 6. The biggest potential obstacle may be el-Jahmi's refusal to agree to honor a tacit agreement to remain quiet in exchange for his discharge. The QDF, in particular Chairman Saif al-Islam al-Qadhafi, are anxious that this case should be resolved quickly and positively, particularly in light of the messy denouement of the Bulgarian medics case last summer. End comment.

SUBJECT: PUTIN VISIT TO LIBYA EXPECTED BY END OF APRIL

TRIPOLI 00000297 001.2 OF 002

¶1. (C) Summary. Although the Russian Embassy has received "nothing official" from Moscow, it expects Russian President Vladimir Putin to visit Libya by the end of April. Putin's projected travel to Libya is the "primary issue" in Libyan-Russian relations; in a recent meeting with Emboffs, the Russian DCM stressed that Libyan leader Muammar Qadhafi has Russian DCM stressed that Libyan leader Muammar Qadhafi has repeatedly made it clear he expects the visit to happen. During the visit, according to the Russian Embassy, Russia hopes to sign a general framework agreement on civilian nuclear cooperation, and military equipment sales will likely feature prominently in discussions. The Russian DCM also briefed Emboffs on a joint Russian-Libyan military cooperation council and ongoing Russian commercial ventures in the oil/gas and construction sectors. End summary.

PUTIN VISIT EXPECTED IN APRIL

¶2. (C) While the Russian Embassy in Tripoli has not received official notification from Moscow that outgoing President Vladimir Putin will travel to Libya, Russian DCM Anatoly Martinov and Poloff Evgeny Kozlov told P/E Chief and Poloff on April 3 that the Embassy expects a visit sometime in April, i.e., before Putin leaves office in May. Though a possible summit between Putin and Libyan leader Muammar Qadhafi has been the "primary issue" in Libyan-Russian relations since 2003, Martinov said preparations have intensified since November 2007. Qadhafi and Putin have spoken by phone three times in the past few weeks. He characterized the two leaders as enjoying "relatively good" personal relations, and said Qadhafi made it clear to FM Lavrov during the latter's December 2007 visit to Tripoli that he expects a visit from "friend Putin" before his term of office expires. Separately, former Congressman Curt Weldon told P/E Chief on March 31 that Putin was expected to visit Libya circa mid-April. He cited as the source of his information a senior Rosoboroneksport official who said he would be part of the Russian presidential delegation.

A "GOLDEN OPPORTUNITY" FOR A NUCLEAR COOPERATION AGREEMENT

¶3. (C) According to Martinov, Russia intends to capitalize on a "golden opportunity" to sign a general framework agreement on civilian nuclear cooperation during Putin's April visit. Cooperation on atomic energy has to date been limited to sales of equipment for Libya's experimental reactor facility at Tajoura, including water management and fire suppression technology. Stressing that Russia "had no particular (civilian nuclear) projects in mind", Martinov said Russia is ready to sign a nuclear framework agreement that could facilitate future cooperation on power generation and desalinization projects. We've heard from other diplomatic contacts that the Russians hope to expoit the fact that French-Libyan civilian nuclear cooperation has not progressed to the GOL's satisfaction since a parallel agreement was signed during President Sarkozy's visit to Libya last summer (ref A).

QADHAFI'S SONS PARTICIPATED IN MILITARY EDUCATIONAL EXCHANGE

¶4. (S/NF) In the late 1990s, Libya and Russia established a joint military cooperation council to manage training and equipment sales. Russia's senior representative on the council, noted Russian nuclear physicist and author Evgeny Abramyan, has visited Libya on half a dozen occasions during the past 10 years to discuss ongoing military cooperation. Top Libyan military officials, including two of Libyan leader Muammar Qadhafi's sons - Muatassim and Khamis - have studied in Moscow on GOR-financed MOD educational exchanges. (DAO comment: Khamis al-Qadhafi spent 14 months in a combined Russian staff college course especially designed for him and obtained a PhD in military sciences in 2007. DAO's contacts have told us that the Russian DAO's office expects Putin's visit soon, and that the Russians have threatened to cut off military spare parts sales to Libya if a major new contract is not signed during Putin's visit. End comment.) Stressing that defense cooperation occurs largely outside the purview of Russia's Embassy in Tripoli, Martinov characterized Libya-Russia defense cooperation as good and said the Libyans appeared "well pleased" with Russian military equipment. Former Congressman Weldon's Rosoboroneksport contact said that in addition to an expected civilian nuclear deal, conventional arms sales would be a prominent issue for discussions between Putin and Qadhafi. Possible sales of tactical and strategic airlift aircraft and armor, and overhaul of Libyan naval vessels were specifically mentioned.

RUSSIAN COMPANIES ACTIVE IN OIL/GAS AND CONSTRUCTION

¶5. (SBU) Turning to commercial interests, Martinov noted that oil/gas exploration company Tatneft was moving ahead with seismic exploration of blocks in the Ghadames and Sirte basins that it secured in the December 2006 round of the National Oil Corporation's Exploration and Production Sharing Agreement (EPSA) bid process. (Note: Tatneft won rights to blocks in area 82 and 98 in the Ghadames Basin, and area 69 in the Sirte Basin. As reported ref B, Gazprom won exploration and production rights in the December 2007 EPSA round for three blocks of area 64 in the Ghadames Basin. End note.) A private Russian company has been awarded a contract to renovate and provide new radar equipment to the Tobruk airport. A Russian company is also close to signing a contract to construct approximately 300km of a projected 2,000km coastal rail line that would span Libya from the Libyan-Tunisian border to the Libyan-Egyptian border.

KEY RUSSIAN POSITIONS VACANT DUE TO VISA PROBLEMS

¶6. (SBU) Kozlov noted that a number of key positions in the Russian Embassy in Tripoli have remained vacant due to difficulties in obtaining Libyan visas for PCS staff. The Political Counselor slot has been vacant since August 2007; the incoming PolCouns has been unable to obtain a visa. Kozlov characterized lengthy waits for Libyan visas as "routine" for Russian diplomatic staff.

SUBJECT: ASSASSINATION OF SECURITY OFFICER IN EASTERN LIBYA

REF: TD-314/026364-08

CLASSIFIED BY: Chris Stevens, CDA, Embassy Tripoli, Dept of State.
REASON: 1.4 (b), (d)
¶1.  (C) Websites al-Manara and Libya al-Youm reported on March 28 and 29, respectively, that a "senior security official" of the Internal Security Organization (ISO) was assassinated on March 27 in the eastern Libyan city of Derna.  The sites identified the officer as Ennaji 'Awami, and said he died after being shot twice in the head by masked gunmen in front of the al-Qods School.  According to website reports, the slain officer's vehicle was subsequently found parked in the al-Qala' area of Derna's Baab Shiha neighborhood. (Note: al-Qala' - "fortress" or "castle" - is a reference to the historic fort located in that area of town.  End note.)  According to website reports, security officials mounted a campaign of arrests immediately after 'Awami was killed, but failed to apprehend the perpetrators. They noted that 'Awami was well-known for his "severity and cruelty" and had received multiple death threats before he was killed.

¶2. (C) Italian, British and Egyptian diplomats told Emboffs April 5-7 that their missions confirmed that the killing had occurred. (Note: Italy and Egypt have consulates in Benghazi, the closest major city to Derna. End note.) Egyptian PolCouns Ahmed Abdel Halim told P/E Chief on April 7 that the Egyptian Consulate in Benghazi confirmed reports that 'Awami was the victim and that he had been killed by gunfire. Their information was that he was shot in front of a Derna school while waiting to pick up his children. It was not/not clear to Egyptian officials whether the assassination was an act of terrorism perpetrated by Islamic extremists or a revenge killing, although Egyptian contacts in Derna took pains to characterize 'Awami as "a hard man" and "a bully". Noting the above-referenced web reports, Abdel Halim stressed that targeting security officials - a phenomenon with which Egypt has some experience - was "extremely rare" in Libya. If confirmed as a targeted killing perpetrated by Islamic extremists, it would represent a "very significant" development, he said.

¶3. (S/NF) Comment: Post notes that the information above is consistent with some information reported reftel on April 6. The al-Manara and Libya al-Youm websites feature significant reporting on events in eastern Libya. That al-Manara, a London-based site established in 2002, posted its report within a day of the shooting suggests close, well-established contact between eastern Libya and members of the Libyan diaspora in the U.K. End comment.

REF: A) TRIPOLI 120 , B) TRIPOLI 278

TRIPOLI 00000307 001.2 OF 002

CLASSIFIED BY: Chris Stevens, CDA, Embassy Tripoli, Dept of State.
REASON: 1.4 (b), (d)

¶1. (C) Summary: A key MFA interlocutor discouraged the idea of U.S.-Libya cooperation on counter-ideological or "soft power" efforts to blunt the appeal of the extremist message in eastern Libya, arguing such efforts would be counterproductive. The GOL had recently undergone "an awakening" to the fact that there was a real problem with extremism in the east and was now making a real problem with extremism in the east and was now making serious efforts to counter the threat; the best course for the U.S. would be to publicly "ignore" extremism in eastern Libya. The GOL's strategy appears to combine reliance on traditional efforts by security organizations to monitor and disrupt extremists' activities while engaging in significant development programs to improve socio-economic conditions enough to blunt the appeal of the extremist message. Absent agreement by the GOL to cooperate on counter-ideological or soft power programming, post's efforts have focused on expanding host government capacity through State, DHS and Treasury training and assistance programs, which are expected to bolster counter-terrorism efforts. End summary.

¶2. (C) In a pair of recent meetings on other issues, P/E Chief engaged with MFA Americas Desk Director Muhammad Matari in a discussion on the possibility of "soft power" programming in eastern Libya to help blunt the appeal of extremist messages and reduce the number of young men volunteering from the area to travel to Iraq to undertake operations against U.S. and coalition forces. Conceding that poor socio-economic conditions in the east, including poor public education and limited social outlets for young people, helped fuel the appeal of more extreme iterations of Islam used to justify jihad operations, Matari nonetheless threw cold water on the idea of soft power programming under the auspices of the USG or any other external entity. The GOL had recently undergone "an awakening" to the fact that there was a real problem with extremism in the east, and was now making "serious efforts" to counter that threat.

¶3. (C) Asked whether there was any possibility for U.S.-Libya cooperation on counter-ideological or soft power efforts, Matari counseled that the best course of action regarding eastern Libya was to "ignore it", claiming it would "go away". He strongly advocated against USG counter-ideological public diplomacy or soft power development efforts, arguing they could further legitimize extremism by: 1) showing the extremist message was successful enough that it merited public counter-action; 2) tacitly acknowledging that the GOL is unable to blunt the threat through "traditional, quiet" channels (i.e., through its security apparatus), and; 3) suggesting the GOL facilitated interference by the U.S. and others in what is widely regarded as an internal Libyan matter. On the latter point, Matari noted Libya's difficult experience under Ottoman and Italian colonial occupation, stressing that soft power programming could easily be equated with latter-day imperialist manipulation by extremists, and could prompt Libyans not otherwise inclined towards more extreme iterations of Islam to embrace extremism as a form of viable resistance to foreign meddling.

¶4. (C) Attributing much of the problem in eastern Libya to the unhelpful influence of extremists from Algeria and Egypt, Matari emphasized that cross-border influence from Egypt is particularly dangerous. Citing previous visits to Algiers and Cairo, Matari claimed part of the problem is the dearth of moderate literature compared to more readily available texts advocating more extreme iterations of Islam. An infusion of moderate literature, such as the writings of Jamal al-Banna, a comparatively moderate Egyptian theologian and younger brother of the founder of the Muslim Brotherhood, would help. (Note: Jamal al-Banna, a consistent advocate of Islamic reform, has publicly disputed traditional Islamic teachings on treatment of women and jihad, and created the "Committee for the Defense of Victims of Terror Fatwas". End note.) But this was something for the GOL to do; it was "highly unlikely" that the GOL would sanction any USG-supported effort in counter-ideological programming. Referencing the Italian colonial occupation, he stressed that anything related to curriculum and political/religious messages is deemed to be "for the government (of Libya) alone to manage".

¶5. (C) As an alternative to counter-ideological programming, P/E Chief suggested the possibility of micro-enterprise and other targeted development, possibly to be implemented by quasi-governmental NGO's such as the Qadhafi Development Foundation. Matari underscored the GOL's sensitivity concerning anything that appeared to be foreign assistance, suggesting "as a friend" that the U.S. recall that Libya's official position is that it is an oil-rich state that provides assistance to others not blessed with oil, particularly sub-Saharan African states. (Note: Several international oil companies tried soon after re-starting operations in 2004 to engage in targeted development under the auspices of their corporate outreach programs - soccer leagues, tutoring programs, micro-loan and micro-enterprise projects. The GOL categorically declined the oil companies' offer, telling them instead that they could pay for school construction or provide money to the GOL to implement programs. End note.) Unbidden, Matari offered that USAID would, for example, almost certainly not be welcome to undertake programming in the east or elsewhere in Libya.

¶6. (C) Comment: Matari, who holds a PhD from the University of Oregon, is one of our most sophisticated and sympathetic interlocutors. His remarks underscore continuing GOL neuralgia about any programming that implies the GOL is unable or unwilling to provide for its people. The GOL's "traditional, quiet" channels for dealing with extremism comprise security organizations and, more recently, an increase in macro-economic development projects in eastern Libya. The latter appears to reflect a belated realization that the policy of deliberately impoverishing the east to ensure political quiescence has not worked. The GOL's strategy appears to be to rely on security organizations to monitor eastern communities and mosques to contain the threat while engaging in significant infrastructure upgrades (Benghazi port renovation, Benghazi and Derna water and power upgrades) and development projects (the Green Mountain Eco-tourism project) to improve socio-economic conditions enough to blunt the appeal of extremist messages. As reported ref D, while senior regime figures appear to have recognized that the east merits more attention and investment, the reported ability of radical imams to propagate messages urging support for and participation in jihad despite security organizations' efforts suggests that claims by senior GOL officials that the east is under control may be overstated.

¶7. (C) Comment (continued): Post's efforts have focused on expanding host government CT capacity through State, DHS and Treasury programing in areas other than counter-ideology. These programs, in our view, hold more promise for gaining Libyan cooperation. It is expected that a successful recent Diplomatic Security/Anti-Terrorism Assistance (DS/ATA) visit (ref E) will presage a robust program of anti-terrorism, law enforcement and judicial training that will bolster counter-terrorism efforts. Continued customs and border security training akin to a port security program the Embassy recently facilitated will contribute to the GOL's ability to better control its borders and monitor travelers, directly benefitting efforts to control foreign fighter flows. End comment.

SUBJECT: LIBYAN PROPOSAL FOR MIL/MIL MOU

¶1. (SBU) Libyan MFA conveyed to Post via diplomatic note a draft MOU on military cooperation. While the Libyan proposal generally tracks with a proposed text conveyed by Deputy Secretary of Defense England to Libyan FM Abdulrahman Shalgham during the latter's January 2008 visit to Washington, the Libyan version makes significant changes to the preamble. The Libyan draft includes assertions that the U.S. will work through the UN Security Council in support of Libya's independence, territorial integrity, and its right to defend itself. The Libyan draft also adds language to the preamble committing the U.S. to acknowledge Libya's "voluntary renunciation of its WMD programs, its counterterrorism actions, and its prominent role in serving peace on the regional and international levels," and to "promote cooperation to enable Libya to realize its security and integrity."

SIPDIS

¶2. (SBU) Embassy translation of the full text of the diplomatic note accompanying the draft MOU follows.

The General People's Committee Secretariat for Foreign Liaison and International Cooperation (Americas Office) sends its compliments to the US Embassy in the Great Jamahiriya, and attaches herewith the draft Memorandum of Understanding between the General Interim Committee on Defense in the Great Socialist People's Libyan Arab Jamahiriya and the US Department of Defense as regards contacts and cooperation in the field of defense.

The General People's Committee Secretariat for Foreign Liaison and International Cooperation (Americas Office) avails itself of this opportunity to renew to the esteemed US Embassy the assurances of its highest consideration.

(Seal of the General People's Secretary for Foreign Liaison and International Cooperation)

To: US Embassy

Tripoli: April 3, 2008

¶3. (SBU) The full text of the Libyan draft MOU follows.

Draft Memorandum of Understanding Between

The General Interim Committee on Defense of the Great Socialist People's Libyan Arab Jamahiriya

And

The U.S. Department of Defense

Regarding contacts and cooperation in the field of defense

PREAMBLE

The General Interim Committee on Defense in Great Socialist People's Libyan Arab Jamahiriya and the US Department of Defense in the United States (hereinafter "parties");

- Being determined to enhance the existing friendship ties between them, and acting on the spirit of partnership and cooperation;

- Approving the importance of the voluntary decision taken by Great Socialist People's Libyan Arab Jamahiriya to renounce its WMD programs, they [the two parties] assert the commitment of the United States of America to work through the UN Security Council to support the independence of the Great Jamahiriya and its territorial integrity, and to enable it to defend itself with conventional weapons and with the support of the United Nations in return for its voluntary renunciation of its WMD programs, its counter terrorism actions and its prominent role in serving peace on the regional and international levels.

- And In response to both parties' joint commitment to promote cooperation in view to enable Great Socialist People's Arab Libyan Jamahiriya to realize its security and integrity;

In Witness whereof, the parties hereto have entered this Memorandum of Understanding as follows:

Section One: Cooperation Scope

Both parties intend to cooperate in the field of defense in accordance with the laws, regulations and policies in force in their countries.

1)- The purpose of this cooperation between both parties is to enhance international peace and stability.

2)- The greater purpose sought by both parties is to build a permanent defense relationship based on mutual respect that contributes to the security of each party, and enhances peace and security with other countries in the Mediterranean region, and with the African Union and its member nations.

Section Two: Cooperation Fields

Both parties can encourage and develop bilateral communications and cooperation in the filed of defense, and have agreed on the following:

a- Sharing of information concerning defense-related issues.

b- Mutual sharing of information as regards execution of national military approaches.

c- Sharing of information and expertise and news bulletins with respect to operating and maintenance of military equipment.

d- Sharing of information as regards promoting security with the Mediterranean states and the African Union and its member states.

e- Exchange of expertise in the fields of staff, leadership and control.

f- To provide specialized training for Libyan military officers at the military academies in the USA.

g- To train specialists in the military institutions, including linguistic training inside these facilities.

h- To provide assistance to research and development centers and to exchange visits and expertise among the members of these centers in both countries, and to provide them with the right knowledge.

i- To conduct talks in relation to the law governing armed disputes, and the relation between military and civil authorities, and other legal issues as regards military service.

j- Any other issues mutually agreed upon by both parties.

Section Three: Cooperation Planning

1- The two parties intend to set up a periodic cooperation plan, to be approved mutually, and that would specify the areas of cooperation in which they decide to proceed.

2- The two parties, whenever required, shall make more detailed arrangements regarding specific areas of cooperation.

Section Four: Amendments

This MOU can be amended any time, upon written notification and through mutual agreement between both parties.

Section Five: Confidentiality

Each of the two parties shall commit that any information either party obtains from the other party by virtue of this agreement shall remain confidential and not to disclose it to any third party, except upon prior written approval from the party providing the information.

Section Six: Dispute Resolution

Any disputes that might arise between the two parties regarding the interpretation or the implementation of this MOU shall be resolved through negotiations between the two parties solely.

Section Nine: Entry into Force, its Scope and Termination

1- This MOU shall enter into force upon its signature by both parties.

2- This MOU does not include any provisions that entail commitments under International Law

3- This MOU shall remain effective unless terminated by a mutual agreement, or by either party, upon 90-day written notice submitted in advance to the other party. Should this MOU be terminated, all activities related to it shall stop, and both parties shall enter into consultations with a view to solving any pending issues.

In Witness whereof, this memorandum is drafted today ~~~~.. 2008, in two versions: one in Arabic and the other in English. Both versions shall have the same validity and legal force.

(signatures)

End text.

TRIPOLI 00000319 001.2 OF 002

¶1. (C) Summary: With Russian President Vladimir Putin scheduled to arrive on April 16 for an overnight visit, hundreds of Russian security and support staff have descended on Tripoli, filling the capital's major hotels, old city and shopping districts. Confirming media reports, Russian Embassy officials say Putin's agenda for meetings with Leader Muammar al-Qadhafi will include rescheduling Soviet-era debt and discussing will include rescheduling Soviet-era debt, and discussing military equipment sales, gas production and a possible civilian nuclear energy agreement. Officials from Rosoboroneksport and Gazprom will accompany Putin. End summary.

¶2. (C) Putin will overnight at Tripoli's sole (nominal) five-star venue, the Corinthia Baab Afriqiya Hotel (which also houses the US Embassy). Hundreds of busy Russian advance officials have managed to make time to tour Tripoli's Old City and to shop for inexpensive knock-off clothing and goods in adjacent markets. The Slovak Ambassador told the CDA that the Russian delegation comprises some 580 individuals arriving in Triopli on six to eight Russian aircraft.

¶3. (C) Russian Poloff Evgeny Kozlov told P/E Chief on April 14 that after fierce negotiations with the GOL over the venue for the visit, Putin will remain in Tripoli for meetings with Leader Muammar al-Qadhafi. It is not expected that Putin will travel to Qadhafi's hometown of Sirte, where he often prefers to host visiting heads of state. Confirming media reports, Kozlov said Putin's agenda for his meetings with Qadhafi consist of rescheduling Soviet-era debt and discussing conventional military equipment sales, natural gas production and a possible civilian nuclear energy agreement. Kozlov said finalizing a mechanism for settling Libya's debt, which he put at "several billion dollars", was a key priority for Putin. (Note: Media reports, citing Russia's 2007 budget, claim a figure of $3.5 billion. End note.) He conceded that a possibility was an arms-for-debt structure akin to that brokered by Russia with neighboring Algeria in 2006. In that deal, he said, Russia forgave Soviet-era debt and Algeria agreed to purchase Russian military equipment.

¶4. (C) Kozlov said an arms-for-debt deal had been under discussion for "several years" under the rubric of a joint Russian-Libyan military cooperation council established in the late 1990's (see ref B). Russian news agency Interfax reported April 14 that the deal would include $2.5 billion worth of anti-aircraft systems, MiG and Sukhoi tactical aircraft, helicopters, submarines and warships. Kozlov confirmed that officials from Rosoboroneksport were among Putin's delegation. (Note: As reported reftel, a Rosoboroneksport official told former Congressman Curt Weldon that sales of tactical and strategic airlift aircraft and armored vehicles, and overhaul of Libyan naval vessels, would be on the table. End note.)

¶5. (C) Confirming that Gazprom officials would also number among Putin's party, Kozlov said discussions with Qadhafi were expected to touch on greater involvement by Russian hydrocarbon giant Gazprom in projects in Libya in connection with Italian company Eni. Following a publicized meeting in Moscow last week between Eni chief executive Paolo Scaroni and Gazprom chief Alexei Miller, it was announced that Gazprom is in talks with Eni about a potential asset swap that would give Gazprom access to gas fields in Libya. As reported ref B, Gazprom won exploration and production rights in the December 2007 Exploration and Production Sharing Agreement bid round for three blocks of area 64 in the Ghadames Basin. Local oil and gas contacts say Gazprom is keen to expand its presence in Libya; media reports suggest the company's expansion into Libya is part of a deliberate strategy to further monopolize gas supplies for Europe's lucrative market.

¶6. (C) Although media attention to the issue has abated in the run-up to the visit, Kozlov reiterated remarks reported ref A that Russia intends to capitalize on a "golden opportunity" to sign a general framework agreement on civilian nuclear cooperation during Putin's visit. Other diplomatic contacts have reported that the Russians hope to exploit the fact that French-Libyan civilian nuclear cooperation has not progressed to the GOL's satisfaction since a parallel agreement was signed during President Sarkozy's visit to Libya last year. Kozlov suggested that a Russia-Libya civilian nuclear agreement could/could also be linked to forgiving Libya's Soviet-era debt. (Note: It is unclear how this would work, since the civilian nuclear deal has been characterized to us as a general framework agreement, with commercial details to be negotiated and finalized in the future. End note.)

¶7. (C) Comment: Following in the tradition of Sarkozy's visit to Tripoli and Qadhafi's December 2007 stops in Paris and Madrid, Putin appears poised to engage in some high-stakes commercial diplomacy. The GOL traditionally uses high-value commercial contracts as expressions of its political goodwill, and is working to cast the visit as one more manifestation of its policy of successful engagement with European partners. End comment.

SUBJECT: LIBYA PREPARED TO FINALIZE - BUT NOT SIGN - A TIFA

REF: MILLER-BURKHEAD EMAIL 4/20/2008

¶1. (SBU) Summary: The Minister of Economy-equivalent said the GOL has resolved two key internal debates related to a Trade and Investment Framework Agreement (TIFA) and is prepared to finalize the accord with the U.S., provided a final face-to-face meeting of technical experts - an important political exercise, from its perspective - occurs. While the GOL is prepared to finalize the text of the agreement, it will not be in a position to sign the agreement so long as Section 1083 (the so-called Lautenberg Amendment) of the U.S. 2008 National Defense Authorization Act applies to Libya. Separately, the GOL is continuing internal deliberations on how to implement a radical privatization and economic reform agenda recently proposed by Muammar al-Qadhafi amid concerns the measures could exacerbate inflation and unemployment. End summary.

GOL READY TO FINALIZE TIFA, BUT WANTS FINAL FACE-TO-FACE MEETING

OF EXPERTS

¶2. (SBU) The CDA met with Secretary of the General People's Committee for Economy and Trade (Minister of Economy-equivalent) Dr. Ali Abdullah Essawi on April 17 to discuss next steps on finalizing a U.S.-Libya Trade Investment Framework Agreement (TIFA). Reiterating points made in an earlier meeting with Emboffs by Dia Hammuda, Director of the Ministry's Foreign Cooperation Office, Essawi stressed that while much progress has been made via email correspondence, from the GOL's perspective a face-to-face meeting between technical experts to review and finalize the language was necessary. An agreement of this kind represented an important political commitment; an in-person meeting to discuss the document was a significant and appropriate part of the process. (Note: Essawi's position reflects the Libyan perspective that the political intent behind an agreement is as important as the language of the document itself. End note.)

¶3. (SBU) Two issues were identified in Emboffs' earlier meeting to discuss the TIFA: 1) whether the GOL wanted the agreeement to come into effect upon signing or upon notification of ratification by the respective parties, and; 2) language for labor provisions in the agreement that had to be provided by the GOL's Labor Ministry-equivalent. Essawi told CDA the GOL had decided it would prefer that the agreement come into effect after notification of ratification. The Ministry of Economy had also received the language for the labor provisions, which would be forwarded to USTR this week via email. Essawi suggested that the technical experts try to meet sometime in May or June to finalize the document. Foreign Cooperation Office Director Hammuda will lead the GOL's delegation. (Note: The technical experts' meeting may help avoid GOL proposals for changes to the text of the agreement on the eve of signing, as occurred in January 2008 with a US-Libyan Science and Technology Agreement. End note.)

LIBYA WON'T SIGN AGREEMENT UNDER SHADOW OF LAUTENBERG AMENDMENT

¶4. (SBU) Essawi made it clear that while the GOL is prepared to finalize language for a TIFA, it would not be in a position to sign the agreement so long as Section 1083 (the so-called Lautenberg Amendment) of the U.S. 2008 National Defense Authorization Act applied to Libya. (Note: The Lautenberg Amendment potentially facilitates attachment of Libyan government assets to satisfy damages awarded by U.S. courts in terrorism-related cases. The GOL has taken significant measures to insulate its assets from potential seizure, to include divestiture of investments in U.S. financial markets by its sovereign wealth fund. End note.) Citing an Arabic expression, Essawi said signing a TIFA in the shadow of the Lautenberg Amendment would be just "ink on paper", mocking the intent of expanded economic and commercial ties.

GOVERNMENT WORKING TO IMPLEMENT QADHAFI'S VISION ...

¶5. (SBU) Responding to the CDA's question about implementation of economic reforms and radical privatization advocated by leader Muammar al-Qadhafi in a key speech on March 2, Essawi said the goals are to dramatically reduce the government's role in regulating economic activity while more efficiently distributing Libya's oil wealth to its people. The government believes radical reforms, to include ending subsidies for foodstuffs and commodities, as well as regulation of utilities, will encourage more rapid economic reform and privatization. Essawi is a member of two (the economic activities committee and the wealth distribution committee) of the five cabinet-level committees charged with implementing Qadhafi's vision. He indicated that the implementing committees' consultations were to be concluded by September, with final recommendations expected by year's end.

TRIPOLI 00000336 002 OF 002

... BUT IS CONCERNED ABOUT INFLATION, UNEMPLOYMENT

¶6. (SBU) Essawi conceded that achieving a balance between ending government subsidies and maintaining a politically palatable daily standard of living was "very difficult". Expressing concern that the measures could prompt inflation and greater unemployment, he carefully noted that Qadhafi's proposal that each family receive direct allotments of 5,000 Libyan dinar (about $4,200) per month was "an idea" for oil wealth distribution, and suggested that other forms of compensation such as shares in government funds might be an alternative. (Note: Qadhafi proposed eliminating virtually all state subsidies and radical privatization, to include the education and health care systems, in exchange for providing direct stipends to citizens, from which they would ostensibly pay for and collectively manage everything themselves. End note.) Essawi put the overall unemployment rate in Libya at 17 percent and the unemployment rate among "youth" aged 18-34 at 25 percent. (Note: A 2004 World Bank estimate put the overall unemployment rate at 30 percent. End note.) Growing the economy and creating jobs were key priorities, he said, noting that one-third of Libya's population is under the age of 18. (Note: The CIA's World FactBook estimates that 33.2 percent of Libya's citizens are under the age of 14. End note.)

¶7. (SBU) Comment: A sophisticated, forthcoming interlocutor, Essawi drew a clear line between potential signing of a TIFA and waiving application of the Lautenberg Amendment. His concerns about possible inflationary and unemployment pressures related to implementation of Qadhafi's privatization and economic reform scheme echo what we've heard from other contacts. End comment.

CLASSIFIED BY: Chris Stevens, CDA, AmEmbassy Tripoli, State.
REASON: 1.4 (b), (d)

¶1. (C) Summary. After years of preparation, Russian President Vladimir Putin, accompanied by 400 assistants, journalists and business executives in six planes, visited Libya on April 16-17 primarily to secure an agreement on Libya's sizeable Soviet-era debt. Libya and Russia agreed to swap the $4.5 billion debt for a large railroad contract and several future contracts in housing construction and electricity development. At Libyan insistence, the two sides signed an MOU committing them in principle to formalize a civilian nuclear agreement by the end of 2008. While Russian diplomats in Tripoli maintain that Putin did not have a political agenda for his visit, Libyan leader Muammar Qadhafi used the opportunity to claim he opposes NATO expansion to Ukraine and Georgia and to advocate for his one-state solution to the Israel/Palestine problem. Putin also raised -- without success -- the case of a detained Russian national and LUKoil employee who remains in pre-trial detention since his arrest under unclear circumstances in November 2007. End Summary.

¶2. (U) The Russian Ambassador to Libya briefed CDA on Putin's visit on April 23 and Poloff followed up in a separate meeting with Russian Poloff Evgeny Kozlov on April 24.

MARATHON, 26-HOUR MEETING ON LIBYA'S $4.5 BILLION DEBT

¶3. (C) Finalizing an agreement on Russian forgiveness of Libya's sizeable Soviet-era debt topped Russia's agenda for President Putin's April 16-17 visit to Tripoli. After a marathon, 26-hour meeting between Russian Finance Minister Aleksei Kudrin and his Libyan counterpart, the two countries agreed that Russia would forgive Libya's $4.5 billion debt and, in exchange, Libya would sign commercial contracts on railways, housing construction, electricity development, and road construction. Libya opened the negotiations by stating that Libya did not recognize any debt to Russia and, instead, demanded that Russia offer financial compensation for Russia's role in passing and enforcing UN sanctions against Libya in the 1980s and 1990s.

¶4. (C) According to Kozlov, who was present throughout the negotiations, the two delegations "locked themselves in" the Libyan Ministry of Finance at 9 AM on April 16 and, with only a one-hour break from 18:30-19:30, did not emerge with an agreement until 11 AM on April 17 -- a half hour after Putin was scheduled to sign the debt agreement. Kozlov closely connected Putin's visit to the debt issue, noting that Putin made clear to Qadhafi that he did not engage in "political tourism" and would not leave without an agreement on the debt. Both Qadhafi and FM Abdulrahman Shalgham were in regular phone contact with the Libyan Finance Minister throughout the 26-hour negotiations.

LIBYA INSISTS ON INKING CIVILIAN NUCLEAR MOU

¶5. (C) During the visit, the two sides also signed -- at Libyan insistence -- an MOU committing both sides to side a formal cooperation agreement on civilian uses of nuclear energy by the end of 2008. Kozlov noted that Libya hoped to sign a formal civilian nuclear agreement during the visit; however, no language had been agreed to before the visit and Russia refused to sign without further consultations. Kozlov reiterated that the civilian nuclear agreement will establish a general framework for future cooperation and will not/not include any specific projects. Current Libyan-Russian cooperation on the peaceful uses of nuclear energy -- limited to a few Russian technical experts working at the Tajoura nuclear facility -- is based on an "outdated" Soviet-era agreement with Libya; according to Kozlov, Russia hopes to "modernize" the framework for nuclear cooperation. He added that the Libyans are chiefly interested in acquiring nuclear-powered water desalination technology and that Libya is stringing along several possible sellers, including France, before it decides what to buy. Noting Libyan dissatisfaction with slow progress on Libyan efforts to purchase civilian nuclear technology from France following President Sarkozy's July 2007 visit to Libya, Kozlov cautioned that the Russian side made clear that any Russian sales will not/not be quicker than the French deal.

RAILROAD CONTRACT ONLY COMMERCIAL DEAL SIGNED DURING VISIT

¶6. (C) The Russian Ambassador downplayed the value of commercial contracts to CDA in an April 23 briefing for select foreign diplomats. Russia only signed one contract during the visit -- a 2.2 billion euro, four-year contact for the construction of approximately 500km of railroad between Sirte and Benghazi. Despite press reports to the contrary, Russian diplomats maintain that no military contracts were signed during the visit. Kozlov anticipated that, in the near-term, Libya and Russia would also sign commercial contracts on housing Russia would also sign commercial contracts on housing construction in Janzour and Zawiya, electricity line installation, road construction, and possibly an additional section of Libya's planned coastal railroad between Tunisia and Egypt. In addition, the two sides signed a general agreement on promotion of investments, an MOU on economic cooperation, an agreement on the protection of confidential commercial and military information, and three MOUs on oil/gas exploration between Gazprom and the Libyan authorities.

QADHAFI CLAIMS TO OPPOSE NATO EXPANSION

¶7. (C) In over six hours of private meetings on April 16-17, Qadhafi voiced his satisfaction that Russia's increased strength can serve as a necessary counterbalance to U.S. power, echoing the Libyan leader's frequent support for a more multi-polar international system. Qadhafi also raised the issue of NATO expantion to Ukraine and Georgia, assuring the Russian President that Libya opposes any further expansion of NATO. (Note: According to Kozlov, the Russian Embassy in Tripoli has learned that Qadhafi voiced strong support for Ukraine's NATO bid during Ukrainian President Aleksandr Yushchenko's April 2008 visit to Libya. End note.) The two leaders also discussed Qadhafi's vision for a one-state solution to the Israel/Palestine conflict. The Libyan leader expressed luke-warm support for Russian plans to convene a Middle East peace conference in Moscow, reflecting Libya's long reluctance to participate in any meeting that advocates a two-state solution to the Israel/Palestine conflict. The two leaders did not/not discuss non-proliferation or Iran's nuclear ambitions.

PUTIN RAISES CASE OF DETAINED LUKOIL REP

¶8. (C) Putin also raised with Qadhafi the case of detained LUKoil Overseas representative Aleksandr Tsyganov. According to Kozlov, Libyan security services arrested Tsyganov, a Russian national, in November 2007. Despite repeated requests for an official explanation of the charges against Tsyganov, the Russian Embassy has received only an "informal explanation" that Tsyganov is charged with disclosing the "secret" location of the U.S. Embassy in Tripoli. Noting that bribery allegations related to a contract tender have surfaced in the press, Kozlov said that the Libyan government had never mentioned bribery charges and instead told the Russians that Tsyganov's case had been referred to a state security court. (Note: Libyan security officials have indicated that he was arrested on suspicion of espionage. End note.) The Russian Ambassador and Consul have met "several times" with Tsyganov; however, Kozlov noted that arranging a meeting was exceedingly difficult and that the Ambassador had only been allowed to visit Tsyganov at the Bourj al-Fatah office building in Tripoli and not/not at Tsyganov's detention facility. Tsyganov remains in pre-trial detention at an unknown facility. According to Kozlov, as a result of Putin's failure to gain traction on the case during his visit, the Russians are prepared to "reciprocate" by arresting a Libyan businessman in Russia.

PROTOCOLARY SURPRISES

¶9. (C) Russian diplomats in Tripoli described Putin as "very patient" with Libya's unusual way of doing business. Upon Putin's arrival at Qadhafi's compound, Qadhafi drove up in a golf cart to meet Putin's motorcade and promptly abandoned Putin beside a large outdoor bonfire while the Libyan leader went to pray. On the morning of Putin's second day in Tripoli, Libya ordered Putin's motorcade redirected in the middle of the highway for a last-minute, private breakfast meeting with Qadhafi.

¶10. (C) The Russians were generally pleased with the performance of Libyan Protocol before and during the visit. After four meetings with Libyan Chief of Protocol (and Qadhafi confidant) Nuri al-Mismari in the run-up to the visit, Libya consented -- for the first time ever -- to grant Russian security and Putin's advance team access to Qadhafi's Bab Azziziya compound in Tripoli before Putin's arrival. Though al-Mismari initially balked at the Russian side's refusal to allow Putin to travel in a Libyan Protocol vehicle, he eventually relented and allowed the Russians to fly in three presidential limosines for use during the visit. When the Russians informed al-Mismari that Putin would be accompanied at all times by an assistant carrying Russia's nuclear launch codes, al-Mismari blew up: "Libya has made a decision to get rid of its nuclear weapons. We will not let you bring your nuclear weapons here!" Russian diplomats explained to al-Mismari that Putin would be traveling with codes and not/not the nuclear weapons themselves.

SUBJECT: GOL SUGGESTS U.S.-LIBYAN BILATERAL TIES "GREATLY COMPLICATED" BY UTA CASE DAMAGES AWARD

TRIPOLI 00000036 001.2 OF 003

CLASSIFIED BY: Chris Stevens, DCM, Embassy Tripoli, Department of State.
REASON: 1.4 (b), (d)

¶1. (S) Summary: The recent decision by a U.S. judge to award roughly $6 billion in damages to families of seven Americans roughly $6 billion in damages to families of seven Americans killed in Libya's 1989 bombing of a French-operated UTA passenger plane has apparently caught the GOL off-guard and angered elements within the GOL. The MFA told us the award would "greatly complicate" U.S.-Libya ties. In a letter to the Secretary (septel), Secretary of the General People's Committee for Foreign Liaison and International Cooperation (FM-equivalent) Abdhurrahman Shalgham requested USG intervention in the case on behalf of the GOL, as well as intervention with the Congress to rescind a provision in the 2008 Defense Authorization Bill that would facilitate lawsuits against states accused of sponsoring terrorism. The GOL intends to send a legal team to the U.S. soon to discuss the UTA case and possibly other pending terrorism-related cases as well, according to the MFA. End summary.

THREE TIMES AS BIG AS PAN AM 103

¶2. (U) According to press reports, which also appeared in Arabic language media, U.S. District Court Judge Henry Kennedy January 15 awarded approximately $6 billion in damages to families of seven U.S. victims killed the September 1989 bombing of French-operated UTA flight 772. The $6 billion award, to be paid by the GOL and six Libyan intelligence officials convicted of involvement in executing the attack, is roughly three times the total compensation package in the case of Pan Am flight 103. The UTA 772 award represents the value of the aircraft, compensation for pain and suffering of the victims, compensation for the pain and suffering of the victims' families, compensation for expected earnings had the victims lived and interest backdated to the date of the bombing. The GOL has until February 25 to appeal Judge Kennedy's decision. As we understand it, if there is no appeal and/or negotiations on a settlement by February 25, claimants can attempt to seize Libyan government assets to satisfy the judgment.

JUDGMENT A "CONSIDERABLE SHOCK" FOR THE GOL ...

¶3. (C) Former French Ambassador to Tripoli, Jean-Jacques Beaussou, a consultant for the UTA 772 claimants' counsel, U.S. law firm Crowell & Moring, briefed the CDA and A/DCM January 16 on his efforts to engage the GOL on next steps in the case. He said the GOL's direct liability is approximately $1.5 billion; the remaining $4.5 billion is to be paid by the six convicted Libyan intelligence officers. Noting that the GOL decided last fall not to continue negotiations for an out-of-court settlement for UTA 772 involving a much smaller damages award, he said Judge Kennedy's decision was a "considerable shock" for the regime.

... WHICH IS SCRAMBLING TO FORMULATE A RESPONSE

¶4. (C) According to Beaussou, the GOL believed the proposed out-of-court settlement amount would have prompted families of French victims, who settled in 2004 for approximately $170 million, to ask for more compensation. It also cited concern about adverse Libyan public reaction to the proposed out-of-court settlement amount. Judge Kennedy's $6 billion damages award suggests the GOL's calculus was flawed, creating a political problem for the GOL and exposing the GOL's claims litigation committee headed by Ahmad Mesalati to criticism that it has bungled management of the case. Mesalati, who is typically able to meet Beaussou in person, declined January 16, saying he first had to consult with key regime figures, who were "surprised" by the award and were working to formulate a strategy.

POSSIBLE SCENARIOS

¶5. (C) Referencing conversations with counsel for the U.S. claimants, Beaussou speculated that the unanticipated size of the judgment might constitute sufficient "shock therapy" to prompt the GOL to negotiate payment terms or, should it appeal, an out-of-court settlement. Beaussou sees four possible scenarios for the GOL: 1) pay the damages (not a likely outcome, in his view); 2) appeal the decision (also not likely in his view, as the GOL must deposit a sizeable portion of the award in an escrow account pending outcome of the appeal); 3) refuse to pay and ignore the court's judgment (the most likely outcome in his view, and the most injurious to U.S.-Libyan relations); or 4) use the judgment as a pretext to work out a comprehensive compensation package covering all outstanding claims agains the GOL in U.S. courts. Beaussou noted that option three (non-payment and ignoring the judgment) could allow claimants to begin efforts to attach Libyan assets, including eight C-130 aircraft stored in Georgia, whose delivery to the GOL was blocked in the 1970's and which have been a neuralgic issue for the GOL. (Note: Further discussion of the C-130's during visiting AFRICOM General Herbert Altshuler's January 15-16 reported septel. End note.)

MFA: AWARD WILL "GREATLY COMPLICATE" BILATERAL RELATIONSHIP

¶6. (S) An unusually sober Ahmed Fituri, MFA Secretary for the Americas, flatly told the CDA and A/DCM January 17 that the UTA 772 decision would "greatly complicate" relations. He noted that there were "several" senior-level GOL discussions January 16 that lasted all day and involved - by phone or in person - Saif al-Islam al-Qadhafi, National Security Adviser Mutassim al-Qadhafi, Prime Minister al-Baghdadi al-Mahmoudi, Foreign Minister Shalgham, Deputy External Security Organization Chief Abdullah Sanussi and MFA Secretary for European Affairs Abdulati Obeidi. (Note: The involvement of NSA Mutassim al-Qadhafi is potentially troublesome given his remarks in meetings last August and November with visiting NEA A/S Welch and S/CT Coordinator Dell Dailey, respectively, to the effect that the GOL feels it has paid enough compensation in claims cases and that the U.S. Congress should adopt legislation preventing any further claims. End note.) Fituri added that another high-level meeting had been scheduled for late January 17 to continue discussions on how the GOL will respond.

¶7. (C) Fituri offered his "personal opinion" that the planned visit of musician Robert McNamara, who received a PAS grant to give guitar concerts and lead master classes in Benghazi and Tripoli in late January, was ill-timed in light of the UTA 772 decision and recommended that we postpone. The "Libyan people" would not view favorably the confluence of the UTA decision, McNamara's concerts and the upcoming General People's Congress (scheduled to open in mid-February), and would wonder why the GOL was facilitating cultural exchanges at a time when it had been "insulted" by the UTA 772 judgment. The CDA told Fituri we'd take his remarks under advisement; we subsequently learned that the MFA had rescinded McNamara's visa approval.

¶8. (C) In a follow-on January 21 meeting with CDA, Fituri said that the GOL response would comprise a letter from FM Shalgam to the Secretary requesting the Administration's intervention with the court to facilitate a GOL appeal of the judgment. According to Fituri, the court requires that the GOL make a large deposit upon appeal; the GOL would like to avoid making this payment by way of a USG guarantee to the court. Shalgam would also request that the Administration intevene with the Congress to rescind a provision in the 2008 Defense Authorization Act known as "the Lautenberg Amendment." This provision facilitates private lawsuits against states accused of sponsoring terrorism, in particular by making it easier for victorious claimants to seize foreign government assets. The GOL would also send a team of "three or four" lawyers to the U.S. to discuss the UTA case and perhaps other cases (i.e., Le Belle) with the claimants' perhaps other cases (i.e., La Belle) with the claimants' lawyers. The team will be headed by litigation claims chair Mesalati, who is scheduled to travel to the U.S. on January 23.

COMMENT

¶9. (S) The Shalgam letter to Secretary Rice is vague as to what the GOL wants and intends. It does not specifically mention an appeal nor does it specifically state that the GOL is sending the team of lawyers. It remains unclear to the Embassy why the appeal option seems to be preferred if the same result -- delaying the day of judgment and negotiating a favorable payment -- could be attained by beginning a negotiation with the claimants' lawyers. This would elimiinate the need for a large deposit with the court. It may be that the GOL assesses that it can come to a more favorable out of court settlement with an appeal pending.

¶10. (S) After a four-month period of relatively good bilateral cooperation bracketed by NEA A/S Welch's August 2007 visit and FM Shalgham's January 2008 trip to Washington, we may be on the cusp of another downturn in relations, unless the GOL engages seriously on the UTA case. We made the point to Fituri that the thrust of FM Shalgham's recent visit to Washington and our senior-level discourse was to broaden and deepen bilateral ties in a way that made them more durable and less subject to lingering issues like the claims cases. Fituri was polite, but made it clear that the quarters of the GOL that really count continue to interpret developments such as the UTA 772 decision as political signals and may retaliate by putting the brakes on the kind of broader engagement we seek. This would not augur well for our efforts to move forward with education and economic reform programs, a human rights dialogue, counter-terrorism finance training and other forms of expanded cooperation.

SUBJECT: LIBYA: TOTAL'S OFFSHORE OIL WELL SHUT DOWN

¶1. (SBU) Summary: A recent drilling accident brought drilling and production operations in an offshore wellfield operated by French oil company TOTAL to a halt. Although there were no injuries or environmental damage, production (the field produces about 45,000 barrels/day) will likely be halted for several months until the wells can be repaired. Even if TOTAL subsequently surges production to recoup its losses, it will take several years to make up the lost production. End Summary.

DRILLING ACCIDENT

¶2. (SBU) In September 2003, French oil giant TOTAL started production in Libya's Al Jurf field, located about 100 production in Libya's Al Jurf field, located about 100 kilometers offshore in water averaging 90 meters in depth. The field consists of a platform with ten production wells connected to a floating production storage offloading (FPSO) vessel located roughly 3km from the producing platform. Total operates the block with a 37.5% interest (via its local operating company, Mabruk Oil Operations) and is partnered with German oil company Wintershall (12.5% interest) and Libya's National Oil Corporation (50% interest).

¶3. (SBU) A drilling accident occurred at the field on April 17, during work on a development well for gas injection. According to TOTAL's Health, Safety and Environment (HSE) manager, the drill went off-course and penetrated an adjacent production well at a depth of 650 feet beneath the seabed. Due in part to the safety precautions taken before the commencement of drilling, including the shut-down of all production wells, there was no oil spillage or injuries as a result of the accident. The entire platform was evacuated within 48 hours as an additional safety precaution against a well blowout, and production was suspended indefinitely in all ten wells in the field.

OFFLINE FOR MONTHS...AT GREAT COST

¶4. (SBU) TOTAL's locally-based emergency team was activated to secure the platform, and a specialized ten-member technical team has been flown in from France to assess the damage and recommend a course of repairs. Given the extent of the damage, the early assessment from the team is that the entire field will remain offline for at least two months. That best case scenario involves making repairs from the platform itself, rather than from a relief well, which would have to be drilled alongside the damaged one. If it becomes necessary to drill a relief well, the cost and timeline of needed repairs could expand considerably.

¶5. (SBU) The Al Jurf field is fairly large field, producing an average of 45,000 barrels/day. (Note: For sake of comparison, that is roughly the daily crude oil production of Turkey. End Note). Loss of production for several months will make a significant dent in TOTAL's bottom line in Libya, and the NOC will likely seek compensation for the shortfall in their projected revenues. TOTAL's HSE manager noted that once production is resumed, it could be surged to 52,000 barrels/day or more to compensate for the loss of production for several months. Even at that rate, the gap would only be closed after a couple of years of uninterrupted production at the higher level.

¶6. (SBU) Comment: Although TOTAL has ably handled the aftermath, this is a major accident and a blot on its record in Libya. Insurance will likely cover TOTAL for its losses in the short term and the continuing technical investigation may determine that repairs can be completed quickly; however, the tight market for offshore drilling ships could be a factor if it is determined that a relief well must be drilled to complete needed repairs. End comment.

SUBJECT: PD PROGRAMS FALL VICTIM TO BILATERAL TENSIONS

REF: TRIPOLI 289

¶1. (U) Summary: Since January, Post has experienced increasing difficulties in obtaining visas for incoming Public Affairs Section visitors, both for educational and cultural programs. The Government of Libya (GOL) has canceled some programs outright, and has simply not approved visas for others. These recent difficulties appear to be the result of an intentional decision by elements within the GOL, rather than the routine difficulties of navigating the Libyan bureaucracy. End summary.

RECENT HISTORY OF CANCELED PROGRAMS

¶2. (U) Prior to January, Post experienced several months of relatively successful Public Affairs Section (PAS) programming, particularly educational programs. We brought in our first English Language Fellow, conducted successful English Language Specialist workshops, and gained routine access for the first time to students and faculty at Libyan public universities. However, since January several programs have been canceled by the GOL. While the Embassy has successfully secured visas for other visitors during the same time period, PAS visitors have been singled out for denial. Failure to issue visas to PAS visitors is not a reciprocity issue, as Post has expedited and issued more visas more quickly in response to Libyan official requests than the GOL has done for Embassy official requests (see reftel).

¶3. (U) In early January, DAS Tom Farrell, accompanied by other ECA staff and 4 representatives of American universities and higher education, planned to come to Libya to meet with representatives of Libyan universities and government officials. Despite prior agreement to the visit and assurances that visas would be approved, the visas were not approved. The General People's Committee for Foreign Liaison and International Cooperation (GPCFLIC, or MFA-equivalent) blamed the snafu on their internal bureaucracy.

¶4. (U) In mid-January, the GOL canceled the planned performance of a musician following a U.S. court decision awarding compensation to families of victims of the UTA bombing. The GPCFLIC told the CDA that it was not the right time for such performances, stating that it would be "confusing" for the GOL to facilitate concerts by a U.S. musician in the wake of the court decision, and suggesting that the U.S. postpone it. Shortly thereafter, the musician's visa, which had previously been approved, was canceled.

¶5. (U) In early February, the GOL abruptly canceled an event that the GPC for Higher Education (GPCHE) had requested of the Embassy - an information session for recipients of Libyan scholarships for post-graduate study in the United States. Expecting to brief several hundred students, CAO and visiting Regional Education Advising Coordinator were notified of the event's cancellation minutes before it was scheduled to begin. Despite Embassy efforts to provide information to scholarship recipients, PAS still frequently receives complaints about the Libyan students' lack of preparation for applying to and studying at U.S. universities.

¶6. (U) In mid-April, the GOL canceled the performance of a second musical group. PAS had taken precautionary steps to confirm that the musical performance would be permitted, and obtained approval from various government bodies. Our local partners had also obtained approval to host performances. In early April, our local partners contacted us to let us know they received instructions to cancel the scheduled performances, and were told that given the state of the bilateral relationship, such programs were not a priority for the Libyan government. In subsequent conversations, Libyan officials told the P/E Chief that public programming was not appropriate because the bilateral relationship was "not fully normalized".

¶7. (SBU) In April, Post expected an American Fulbright grantee to come to Libya to work with professors at Garyounis University. Despite written approval of the Program and numerous assurances, the visa has not been issued. The Head of the Protocol Office told a Post employee that he wished that Public Affairs programs would simply go away. (Comment: We believe that the Protocol Office has instructions not to issue visas to Embassy visitors who will engage the public, and that excuses blaming lack of visa issuance on bureaucratic snafus is merely a dodge. End comment.)

¶8. (U) In late April, Post expected the publishers of MEPI's My Arabic Library program to come to Libya to meet with the GPC for Basic Education to discuss implementation of the program, which Libyan authorities have approved. The visas were not approved, much to the disappointment of officials at the GPC for Basic Education, who, in addition to the My Arabic Library program, are eager to meet with American publishers to discuss using American textbooks in public schools.

¶9. (U) During the first week of May, Post planned to host Dr. Steve Morrison of SAIS. The Green Book Society, the National Center for Disease Control, and Al Fatah University Medical School had all agreed to host Dr. Morrison for events. His visa was not approved.

CONFLICTING MESSAGES

¶10. (U) It is clear that our Libyan education and cultural partners want Americans to come to Libya to implement joint programming. They are greatly disappointed when Americans do not receive their visas, and complain of conflicting points of view they hear behind the scenes. The GPC for Basic Education is tasked with finding the best textbooks possible, and has been advised by some government parties to use American textbooks. Without being able to host American publishers, however, they cannot find a way to practically implement that plan. Libyan universities are tasked by the highest levels to send their students to the U.S. for study. University administrators, however, are blocked from bringing American professors and representatives to Libya to establish the relationships necessary to achieve that objective.

¶11. (SBU) At a recent meeting at Al Fatah University Medical School, the dean complained about the inability of Libyan academic administrators to achieve the unrealistic and frequently contradictory goals of Libyan politicians. He described how "politicians" have told him that he has to send 2,000 students to the U.S., Canada, and Great Britain for medical school next year. When he explains that Libyan students will not be accepted into medical schools in those countries, he is viewed as a nay-sayer. When he introduces plans to improve the quality of Libya's medical education (such as bringing American medical school representatives here to discuss curriculum development and establishing joint programs, meeting American accreditation standards, and sending Libyan students to U.S. schools for undergraduate degrees followed by medical school), "the politicians" criticize him for his suggestions that will take too long to implement. (Note: A key part of a proposed Regional Nuclear Medicine Center project being implemented with USG assistance involves sending Libyans to U.S. medical schools for advanced training. End note.)

¶12. (SBU) The new Educational Attachi to the Libyan Embassy in Washington recently expressed to us his nervousness that the goals he is tasked with achieving are unattainable. While Libyan officials have repeatedly stressed that they want Libyan students to return to U.S. universities by the thousands, the Libyan bureaucracy, and to a large extent, Libyans themselves, remain intransigent in terms of their willingness to meet the requirements necessary to matriculate in U.S. schools.

MORE DIFFICULTIES AHEAD

¶13. (U) While for the past two years American universities have given Libyan students substantial benefit of the doubt in accepting them, there are already rumblings from those universities about Libyan students. Universities have recently remarked about the high level of complaining from Libyan students and the intense bureaucratic support they and their families require. They also note that while some Libyan students have done exceptionally well academically, others are performing terribly. A number of GOL scholarship students reportedly have paid more than 1000 Libyan Dinars each to poorly-qualified local "educational agencies" for assistance in completing university admissions forms (typically Colorado State and Oklahoma State) and visa applications. The universities have found that many such admissions forms contain inaccurate information and essays they suspect the students themselves did not write. Universities are now reviewing applications from Libyans with more intense scrutiny to try to better screen them.

¶14. (U) In addition to more intense scrutiny by American universities, Libyan students hoping to study in the U.S. may also begin to experience more intense scrutiny during their visa interviews. Post's Consular Officer recently learned that at Oklahoma State University, 50% of Libyan students have applied for public benefits. It is not clear yet whether that indicates that GOL scholarship funds are insufficient, and/or that Libyan students budget such funds poorly. Another possibility is that Libyan students are seeking to inappropriately exploit public benefits, even if they have sufficient funds from other sources. (Note: Egyptian Embassy officials recently told P/E Chief that Libyan university students in Egypt, who number in the thousands, routinely abuse public benefits reserved for Egyptian students.)

¶15. (SBU) Comment: As the bilateral relationship has grown more tense during the past several months as a result of outstanding compensation issues and human rights issues, GOL officials who oppose reengagement with the U.S. have gained ground in putting a halt to PAS programs in Libya. While Libyan government officials still desire reengagement with the American academic community, their lack of understanding of the academic environment coupled with the recent trend of refusing American visitors prevents Libyan academic officials from achieving those goals. Post will continue to push in particular for educational programs and visitors. End comment.

¶1. (S/NF) Summary: A senior National Security Council official asked what the USG's views were on the possibility of U.S.-Libya civilian nuclear cooperation and on sales of lethal military equipment to Libya. Building a nuclear reactor for peaceful uses, principally power generation and water desalination, is a key GOL priority and Libya would prefer that a U.S. company and/or the USG provide technical guidance and/or undertake construction efforts. The official stressed that the GOL is anxious to resolve outstanding bilateral political irritants (terrorism-related claims in U.S. courts, the Lautenberg Amendment) before the current U.S. administration's term expires to ensure greater bilateral cooperation and U.S. commercial activity in Libya. It was not clear that the requests for the USG's views on civilian nuclear cooperation and lethal military equipment sales had been fully coordinated with other elements of the GOL. Please see guidance request at para 8. End summary.

GOL WANTS NUCLEAR REACTOR PLANT FOR CIVILIAN PURPOSES

¶2. (S/NF) In a meeting with the CDA on May 7, Dr. Hind Siala, Director of Foreign Liaison and International Cooperation at Libya's National Security Council (NSC), asked what the USG's views were on the possibility of U.S.-Libya civilian nuclear cooperation. Siala said building a nuclear reactor for peaceful uses, to include power generation and water desalination, is a GOL priority. According to Siala, the GOL would strongly prefer that U.S. companies, in concert with the USG, provide technical guidance and/or undertake construction. If U.S. companies and/or the USG are not interested in participating in such a project directly, the GOL wants assurances that the USG would approve Libya offering an international tender for construction of a civilian reactor by third-country parties.

CLAIMS U.S. NUCLEAR COOPERATION WOULD NOT CONTRADICT PARALLEL EFFORTS WITH FRANCE & RUSSIA

¶3. (S/NF) The CDA noted media reports claiming the GOL had signed civilian nuclear cooperation agreements with France during President Sarkozy's visit to Tripoli in July 2007, and with Russia during President Putin's visit in April. (Note: As reported ref A, at the GOL's insistence, Libya and Russia signed a memorandum of understanding committing them to finalization of a formal cooperation agreement on civilian uses of nuclear energy by the end of 2008. The GOL hoped to sign the formal agreement during Putin's visit; however, no language was agreed to before the visit and Russia refused to sign without further consultations. Russian contacts here claimed the formal agreement - if signed - would only establish a general framework for future cooperation and would not/not be keyed to any specific projects. End note.) Siala averred that U.S.-Libya civilian nuclear cooperation would complement, not contradict, parallel efforts with France and Libya. Conceding she is not fully briefed on Libya's nuclear aspirations, she did not know how many reactor plants the GOL envisages building; however, she reiterated that desalination was a primary goal.

USG'S POSITION ON POSSIBILITY OF LETHAL MILITARY EQUIPMENT SALES SOUGHT

¶4. (S/NF) Siala next raised the possibility of U.S. sales of lethal military equipment. Noting that the issue had been raised during NEA Assistant Secretary David Welch's visit in August 2007, she stressed that "time is pressing" from the GOL's perspective. Libya understood that difficult bilateral issues such as outstanding terrorism-related claims in U.S. courts remained and that building trust took time; however, if there were "other political issues" that would prevent the U.S. from selling Libya lethal military equipment in the future, the GOL would prefer to know now so that it can pursue other options.

GOL ANXIOUS TO RESOLVE OUTSTANDING POLITICAL ISSUES BEFORE YEAR'S END

¶5. (S/NF) Drawing a line between concerns about potential nuclear and military cooperation and efforts to find a comprehensive settlement of terrorism-related claims in U.S. courts, Siala stressed the importance of resolving political issues before the current U.S. administration's term expires to facilitate greater bilateral cooperation. Reiterating points we've heard before, she noted that European and other companies are heavily involved in Libya; the GOL would like to see more U.S. companies active here. Section 1083 of the 2008 National Defense Authorization Act (the so-called "Lautenberg Amendment") greatly complicated the business environment in Libya for U.S. companies, whose assets were potentially at risk of attachment. Expressing concern that a new U.S. administration might have different views about reengagement with Libya, she underscored the need to push ahead quickly with efforts to resolve claims cases and exempt Libya and U.S. companies from application of the Lautenberg Amendment. Siala solicited the CDA's views on the effectiveness of the Livingston Group, a lobbying organization hired to help burnish Libya's reputation in Washington, and asked about the status of proposed negotiations on outstanding claims.

¶6. (S/NF) On cooperation, Siala proposed the further and expanded exchange of senior visitors, even as efforts to resolve the claims and Lautenberg issues continue. Emphasizing our agreement with that approach, the CDA noted difficulties post had encountered in trying to bring in U.S. visitors for educational and cultural programs, referencing comments by MFA officials to the effect that such visits were inappropriate since U.S.-Libya relations were not "fully normalized" (ref B). Expressing surprise, Siala agreed to inform National Security Adviser Muatassim al-Qadhafi to see if the NSC could help alleviate those problems.

¶7. (S/NF) Comment: Although she was clearly conveying points at the behest of her boss, NSA Muatassim al-Qadhafi, it struck us that the requests for the USG's views on civilian nuclear cooperation and lethal military equipment sales had not been fully coordinated with other elements of the GOL (the MOD and MFA equivalents, for example) that usually have a voice on those issues. We suspect that Muatassim may be seeking to explore the parameters of areas in which he can push for expanded bilateral cooperation. The questions nonetheless underscore the expectation in certain quarters of the GOL that bilateral cooperation will expand very rapidly - including in sensitive issue areas - if a comprehensive settlement of outstanding terrorism-related legal claims and the Lautenberg Amendment issue can be achieved. Bearing in mind the GOL's disappointment that assumptions about the depth of engagement immediately after its decision in December 2003 to abandon WMD aspirations and renounce terrorism were not met, we will need to temper its current expectations and carefully coordinate our response to requests for expansion of cooperation into sensitive areas. End comment.

¶8. (S/NF) Guidance request: Request Department guidance on whether and how Post should further respond to the request for the USG's views on possible civilian nuclear cooperation and lethal military equipment sales. End guidance request.

¶1. (C) Qadhafi Development Foundation (QDF) Executive Director Yussef Sawani informed the CDA on May 8 that Libyan human rights activist and regime critic Fathi el-Jahmi had been discharged from the Tripoli Medical Center (TMC) and has returned to his home, where he is currently in the care of his family. Saying the QDF had "no objection" to the Embassy reaching out to el-Jahmi's family, he cautioned that one of el-Jahmi's sons had asked the QDF to convey to the Embassy that the family does not wish to be contacted or visited by Embassy officers, out of concern that such contact could "create problems." Sawani concern that such contact could create problems. Sawani claimed that el-Jahmi's return to his home demonstrated that he had been "a free man" since his hospitalization at Tripoli Medical Center in summer 2007.

¶2. (C) Comment: Given the family's alleged desire not to be contacted by the Embassy, Post recommends Department seek confirmation of the report of el-Jahmi's release from his U.S.-based brother, Muhammad el-Jahmi. Sawani did not indicate which family home el-Jahmi had returned to (the family maintains residences in Tripoli and Benghazi), nor did he indicate whether there were any conditions attached to el-Jahmi's discharge from the TMC. Other questions include whether arrangements for needed outpatient medical care have been made and whether the family in fact requested that the Embassy not contact them. End comment.

¶1. (C) P/E Chief conveyed reftel points and the draft resolution text on May 12 to Tajouri al-Sheradi, Senior Political Adviser in the MFA-equivalant's International Organizations Department, urging that Libya support a French resolution calling on Burma to facilitate the expeditious delivery of humanitarian assistance to cyclone victims. Agreeing that the situation in Burma was dire and that the Burmese regime's response had been "confusing", al-Sheradi indicated the GOL had not seen the text. He agreed to immediately convey it to Foreign Minister Abdulrahman Shalgham and said the GOL would coordinate its position through its UN delegation. Al-Sheradi reiterated the GOL's usual aversion to "interfering" in other states' domestic affairs, but (unusually) conceded that the humanitarian need in Burma was so exigent that "extraordinary measures" might be called for.

REF: TRIPOLI 0050

TRIPOLI 00000382 001.4 OF 002

CLASSIFIED BY: Chris Stevens, CDA, Embassy Tripoli, Dept of State.
REASON: 1.4 (b), (d)

¶1. (SBU) Summary: High season for illegal migrants departing Libya for European shores continues; more than half of a group of 70 migrants that made landfall in Malta during a recent 48-hour window claimed to have departed from Libya. The unexpected death of a key Libyan official has set back Malta's campaign to improve Libya's performance in its search and rescue area and efforts to finalize training and repatriation agreements. End summary.

HIGH SEASON FOR ILLEGAL MIGRANTS

¶2. (SBU) Maltese Ambassador Joseph Cassar pulled P/E Chief aside for a conversation on illegal migration as the latter penned a message in the condolences book for the recently deceased Sir Anthony Mamo, the first President of Malta. Saying it had been "a bad week", Cassar noted that more than 70 illegal migrants had made landfall and requested asylum in Malta during a single 48-hour period earlier this week. More than half of the 70 individuals claimed to have departed from Libya's coast, prompting Valletta to task its embassy in Tripoli to reiterate requests that the GOL increase patrols in its Search and Rescue area (SAR). Cassar noted that more vessels transporting illegal migrants appear to be calling via satellite telephones to claim distress and request assistance immediately after entering Malta's SAR. He suggested that they did so to mitigate the chance that they would founder before being rescued.

KEY OFFICIAL'S DEATH DIMINISHES LIBYA'S RESPONSIVENESS

¶3. (SBU) Cassar said the GOL's response to the Maltese demarche had been "disappointing". He noted that the unexpected death six weeks ago of Engineer Fawzi Ghariba, former Director of International Cooperation for Libya's Port Authority-equivalent and a key interlocutor on counter-migration efforts, had negatively impacted the GOL's responsiveness on illegal migration issues at a critical time. (Note: Launches from Libya of vessels transporting illegal migrants typically increase in spring/summer months to take advantage of improved weather and sea conditions. End note.) Describing Ghariba's operating style as "American", he said the late official played a key role in finalizing recent Malta-Libya and Italy-Malta bilateral cooperation agreements on migration issues (reftel). More importantly, Ghariba was an energetic and efficient operator and one of the only GOL officials who approached illegal migration with any sense of urgency. In several cases, Ghariba had galvanized the GOL to deal with migration issues and prompted disparate GOL entities to coordinate their efforts through the force of his personality. On instructions from Valletta, Cassar has asked the GOL several times when a successor to Ghariba might be identified; however, the GOL has demurred, saying it would be unseemly to rush to appoint a replacement.

BROADER EFFORTS ON TRAINING, READMISSION AGREEMENTS ALSO IMPACTED

¶4. (C) Cassar said Malta has focused on enhancing training for Libyan CG officials patrolling Libya's SAR area. He said efforts to finalize an agreement to provide such training, as well as a readmission agreement under which migrants found to have entered Malta illegally could be returned to their country of departure (Libya) rather than their countries of origin, had been frozen since Ghariba's death. (Comment: A number of European countries have been pursuing similar readmission agreements with the GOL. All have encountered significant difficulty in attempting to finalize those, suggesting that factors other than Ghariba's death may bear on Malta's efforts. End comment.) He encouraged the U.S. to continue focusing on training and material assistance for Libya's CG. (Note: Two Libyan CG officers are scheduled to participate in upcoming training programs at a facility in Malta that uses a U.S. Coast Guard curriculum. End note.) Suggesting that he did not agree with Valletta's position that equipment donations [i.e., by wealthier EU countries like Italy] to Libya to combat illegal migration be predicated on the GOL "taking greater responsibility" for its SAR, Cassar described the Libyan CG's equipment needs as "considerable".

¶5. (C) Comment: The dramatic impact of the death of a single official underscores the severely limited capacity of many quarters of the GOL. Some of the lack of coordination likely reflects the persistence of differing views within the GOL as to how to address the problem. Some GOL officials maintain that illegal migration is a purely external phenomena of which Libya is a victim; they argue that Libya's responsibility for managing the trend is limited and that European states in particular should devote greater resources to economic development and other aid in sub-Saharan Africa to reduce migrant outflows. End comment.STEVENS

SUBJECT: SIBLING RIVALRY EMERGING OVER RIGHT TO "FACILITATE" FOREIGN COMPANIES' INVOLVEMENT IN LIBYA?

CLASSIFIED BY: Chris Stevens, CDA, U.S. Embassy - Tripoli, Dept of State.
REASON: 1.4 (b), (d)

¶1. (C) At a reception for a nascent U.S. business group on May 6, PricewaterhouseCoopers (PWC) Senior Partner Mohamed Ghattour (strictly protect) told P/E Chief that National Security Adviser Muatassim al-Qadhafi (son of Colonel Muammar al-Qadhafi) appeared to be moving to play a larger role in commercial contracts with foreign companies, a bailiwick largely reserved for his brother, Saif al-Islam al-Qadhafi, until now. Ghattour said PWC's Dubai-based Senior Partner for the Middle East paid a quiet visit in early April to Tripoli, where he met for nearly four hours with Muatassim. The purpose of the meeting, which was orchestrated through Ghattour at Muatassim's request, was to review the merits of specific multi-national companies that the Government of Libya (GOL) and National Security Council (NSC) were considering for various projects. Muatassim requested that PWC rank-order companies (one through three for the top tier, plus an additional tranche of five rank-ordered alternates) for each project.

¶2. (C) Ghattour was reluctant to divulge specifics about the companies under consideration or the putative projects, but did say that a number of U.S. companies were included on the lists. He added that while some of the projects appeared to be defense-related, the majority appeared to be strictly commercial in nature. He expressed surprise at the latter, noting that he had expected most of the discussion to center on defense and security-related projects, which seemed to fall more naturally within what he understood to be Muatassim's brief as National Security Adviser. Muatassim stressed to Ghattour and his principal that they should not share widely the fact that they had met with Muatassim or the substance of the discussion, and expressed particular concern that they make no mention of their call at the NSC during a subsequent meeting with unspecified representatives at the National Engineering Services and Supply Company (NESSCO). (Note: It is widely believed that NESSCO is a holding company for Saif al-Islam al-Qadhafi's many business interests. NESSCO is headed by Abdulrahman Karfakh, a close confidante and reported business partner of and fixer for Saif al-Islam. End note.)

¶3. (C) Comment: We have previously heard reports to the effect that Muatassim was seeking to expand his involvement in dealings with foreign companies, perceived to be a prestigious endeavor, as part of a broader campaign to bolster his position in the regime. It is an article of faith among expatriate businesspeople in Tripoli that any contract of appreciable size involving foreign companies winds up being "facilitated" and blessed by NESSCO - for a price. Saif al-Islam, through Karfakh, has reportedly amassed a sizeable personal fortune, partly because he has since the lifting of sanctions largely monopolized the lucrative niche market in facilitating the entry of foreign companies into Libya. There are widespread rumors of a de facto contest for power - and potentially the right to succeed their father - between Muatassim and Saif al-Islam. A move by Muatassim to challenge his older brother's primacy with respect to dealings with foreign companies could significantly complicate that fraternal dynamic. End comment.

¶1.  (S/NF) ISN 557 (Ben Qumu Abu Sufian Ibrahim Ahmed Hamouda) was voluntarily repatriated to Libya in September 2007.  As of December 25, the date on which a whereabouts and welfare visit occurred under the Watchdog Committee rubric (ref A), ISN 557 claimed to have not had a family visit.  A security officer who helped facilitate the December 25 visit indicated at the conclusion of the meeting that a family visit for ISN 557 had been scheduled for December 27.

¶2. (S/NF) A/DCM spoke with Watchdog Committee counterpart Muhammad Tarnish January 2. Tarnish said ISN 557 had a seven-hour visit with members of his immediate and extended family on December 27 at the facility in which he is detained. Tarnish said he was physically present for much of the visit. ISN 557's relatives were able to bring some food, clothes, personal hygiene items and reading materials to him. Tarnish described ISN 557's physical condition and spirits as "very good" and indicated that security officials at the facility at which ISN 557 is detained had allowed the family to stay with him for a few extra hours in light of the impending New Year's holiday.

CLASSIFIED BY: Chris Stevens, CDA, U.S. Embassy - Tripoli, Dept of State.
REASON: 1.4 (b), (d)

¶1. (C) Summary: Contrary to claims by the Qadhafi Development Foundation (QDF) that detained human rights activist Fathi el-Jahmi was discharged from hospital on/about May 8 and returned to his family home in Tripoli, el-Jahmi remains at the Tripoli Medical Center and his current medical condition is uncertain. Family members visited him on May 14 -- their first visit in over one month -- and expressed concern to P/E Chief for their safety and unease with Embassy involvement in the case. End comment.

FINDING EL-JAHMI

¶2. (C) Per ref A instructions, the CDA called QDF Executive Director Dr. Yusuf Sawani on May 13 to inform him that an Emboff would visit the Tripoli Medical Center (TMC) on May 14 in an effort to confirm that detained human rights activist Fathi el-Jahmi had in fact been discharged from hospital and returned to his family home in Tripoli. CDA noted that the Embassy had been unable to reach the family to ascertain el-Jahmi's whereabouts. (Note: As reported ref B, Sawani informed the CDA on May 8 that el-Jahmi had been discharged from the TMC and had returned to his home to recuperate. End note.) Sawani phoned the CDA the following day, May 14, and said that the QDF had no objection to a hospital visit, but repeated that el-Jahmi had returned to his home in Tripoli. Pressed by the CDA as to whether el-Jahmi was at the TMC or at his home in Tripoli, Sawani equivocated, saying he "believed" el-Jahmi was at his home, adding that he "may" have returned to the TMC because of his heart condition.

¶3. (C) On May 14, P/E Chief visited the room at the TMC in which el-Jahmi had been previously been housed. Five plainclothes security officials encountered on previous visits were in and around the room. El-Jahmi was not in the room; the senior security official told P/E Chief el-Jahmi was in another wing undergoing x-rays and other undefined diagnostic procedures. Staff at the nurses' station located directly across from el-Jahmi's room, clearly nervous about being seen to speak with P/E Chief, declined to state whether el-Jahmi had ever been discharged from the TMC as claimed by Sawani on May 8. P/E Chief overheard security officials placing numerous telephone calls, including several to the QDF.

¶4. (C) After waiting for approximately an hour and a half, three members of el-Jahmi's family -- eldest son Muhammad, daughter Lamia and daughter Hana -- appeared. Muhammad el-Jahmi, clearly unhappy that an Emboff was present, declined to speak with P/E Chief. In a brief conversation, Lamia el-Jahmi told P/E Chief that Fathi el-Jahmi had never been discharged from the TMC as claimed by the QDF. No member of el-Jahmi's family had been able to visit him since April 3, the last day P/E Chief visited him. The last information the el-Jahmi family had received about their father's medical condition came in a telephone conversation with a man identified as el-Jahmi's nurse, Abdullah Bashir, more than three weeks ago. Separately, el-Jahmi's relatives in Benghazi told an Embassy contact on May 14 that el-Jahmi remained in hospital and had never been discharged from the TMC.

EL-JAHMI'S FAMILY UNDER PRESSURE & THREATENED

¶5. (C) Lamia el-Jahmi said her brother, Muhammad, was under "tremendous pressure" from officials of the GOL and QDF and believed contact with Emboffs was "very dangerous" for the family. Explaining Muhammad's refusal to speak with P/E Chief, Lamia said he had been working for several weeks to orchestrate a visit to their father, and had been anxious to avoid giving the appearance that the family's request was coordinated with the Embassy. After weeks of waiting, the family had been hastily summoned a short time earlier that day to the TMC. She said el-Jahmi family members in Benghazi and Tripoli are under continuous, close observation by security officials, and are "very afraid". Asked whether the family had received any threats, she became visibly uncomfortable, nodded her head, and declined to say anything further. About five minutes after their arrival, Muhammad summoned his two sisters and they left the wing without having seen their father. (Note: According to Fathi el-Jahmi's U.S.-based brother, Muhammad, the family was allowed to see Fathi after P/E Chief left the hospital. End note.)

¶6. (C) Shortly after el-Jahmi's family departed, the senior security official told P/E Chief it would be better if he returned on another day to visit el-Jahmi. Emphasizing that he was not preventing access to el-Jahmi, he said he had just was not preventing access to el-Jahmi, he said he had just spoken with the man described as el-Jahmi's nurse, Abdullah Bashir, who indicated that the diagnostic procedures would take at least another hour, and that el-Jahmi would be too tired after they were completed to meet with P/E Chief. (Note: P/E Chief had attempted to call Bashir before el-Jahmi's family arrived; Bashir did not take the calls. End note.) The security official pressed P/E Chief hard to specify the date and time he intended to return to visit el-Jahmi; he declined to do so.

¶7. (C) Comment: We strongly suspect the "coincidence" of P/E Chief's visit and that of el-Jahmi's family members was coordinated. While the QDF has insisted since May 8 on the fiction that el-Jahmi has been in his family's custody and not/not that of the GOL, it is not clear what the QDF and/or GOL hoped to gain by dissembling about the fact that el-Jahmi had been discharged from hospital and returned to his family home in Tripoli. From our perspective, the QDF was either misinformed by elements of the GOL or, more likely, was a witting participant in the effort to deceive us about el-Jahmi's whereabouts. Either way, until his family saw him on May 14, el-Jahmi had effectively been in incommunicado detention for 41 days. His present medical condition is uncertain. End comment.

¶1. (C) Summary: A private sector interlocutor involved in Libya's chambers of commerce described dramatic calls for reform in a recent speech by Colonel al-Qadhafi as "a return to the natural order of things" that existed before the 1969 military coup that brought al-Qadhafi to power and inaugurated thirty plus years of revolutionary governance and economic thirty-plus years of revolutionary governance and economic experimentation. By the 1990's, it was clear that the ill-defined "Jamahiriya" system of governance was incapable of effectively distributing oil wealth or diversifying the economy; U.S.-led sanctions delayed meaningful economic reform for a further decade. Government ministers tasked with effecting al-Qadhafi's plan for radical privatization are ill-suited to the task (they typically carry out orders rather than formulate and implement policy), and are confused and uneasy. The private sector is concerned that overly rapid privatization, in tandem with more direct distribution of oil wealth and proposed restructuring of the government, could prompt significant economic disruptions, including inflation, and has counseled a more gradual approach. There is concern that old guard elements resistant to economic and political change could seize on inflation as a pretext to roll back reforms. Trimming a corrupt, inefficient public sector, defining and protecting property ownership laws, and revising the commercial and tax codes are other key areas of concern for the private sector. Our interlocutor's comments suggest that a shift may be underway towards a healthier balance between a centralized, suspicious government and an increasingly robust, organized and vocal private sector that is willing and - to an extent at least - able to advocate for issues of common concern. End summary.

¶2. (C) In a meeting with Pol/Econ Chief and EconOff on May 4, Dr. Giuma al-Usta (strictly protect), head of Libya's unified chamber of commerce and the Tripoli Chamber of Commerce, discussed the context of Colonel Muammar al-Qadhafi's March 2 speech to the General People's Congress, in which he called for radical privatization and restructuring of Libya's government. As discussed in reftels, al-Qadhafi called for the system of General People's Committees (GPC's) that have formed the basis of government since the late 1970's to be completely dismantled by year's end and replaced with an as-yet undetermined structure. He also advocated the direct transfer of oil revenues - he suggested the amount of 5,000 Libyan dinar per month - to Libyan families in tandem with privatization of most public services, to include education and health care. There have been serious concerns in the business community about the capacitQthe GOL to effect simultaneous, broad political and economic reforms.

A RETURN TO THE NATURAL (ECONOMIC) ORDER OF THINGS

¶3. (C) Conceding that al-Qadhafi's March 2 speech had been "surprising" in its scope, al-Usta described proposed privatization measures as "a return to the natural order of things" that existed before the 1969 military coup that brought al-Qadhafi to power and inaugurated thirty-plus years of revolutionary governance and economic experimentation. (Note: The coup is described as a people's revolution that prompted development of the "Jamahiriya", an invented term translated to mean "a state of the masses". End note.) In the period immediately after the revolution, there was a heavy focus on the government as the guarantor of social and economic justice; however, the success of Western capitalism and failure of the former Soviet Union and other statist economies underscored the shortcomings of that approach, according to al-Usta. Referencing al-Qadhafi's political-economic treatise, The Green Book, he noted that state structures were not intended to play a central role in politics or economics. Al-Qadhafi's speech was best understood as representing a shift in philosophy over a period of many years, as opposed to a sudden about-face.

JAMAHIRIYA NOT UP TO TASK OF GOVERNING ECONOMY

¶4. (C) Calling for privatization and government restructuring was a return to the principles of early revolutionary thought, al-Usta argued. Law Number 9 of 1992, which relaxed strictures against private property ownership and rolled back more pernicious aspects of Jamahiriya thought, represented the key juncture at which the thinking of al-Qadhafi and influential quarters of the regime had changed. Faced with the fact that Jamahiriya thought was ill-suited to diversification and modification of Libya's state-dominated, hydrocarbon dependant economy, the regime realized in the early 1990's that a new approach was needed, but U.S.-led international sanctions against Libya in the 1990's delayed economic reform efforts because the country was "on an emergency footing".

CONFUSION & CONCERN AMONG THOSE TASKED WITH IMPLEMENTING AL-QADHAFI'S VISION

¶5. (C) Al-Qadhafi's March 2 speech "created considerable confusion" within the government and private sector, al-Usta said. The initial shock had worn off and skittish investors had taken initial comfort in the fact that the existing system of GPC's had not been dismantled overnight; however, chaos continues to reign in the GPC's and in the five committees tasked with recommending how to implement al-Qadhafi's plan. (Note: As reported ref B, contacts at the MFA and Central Bank told us that five committees - responsible for the budget, economy, administrative structure, wealth distribution and legal reform - were constituted after Qadhafi's speech to formulate plans for dismantling the GPC's, standing up alternate structures and implementing direct distribution of oil wealth. Final plans are reportedly due by September 1. End note.) After years of having only to implement plans made by others in Libya's highly centralized power structure, ministries are now being asked to formulate plans and policies that they themselves will have to implement. Unused to planning and possessed of limited human capacity, senior officials in the ministries are "very nervous", he said.

GOVERNMENT STRUCTURES MAY LACK CAPACITY TO UNDERTAKE REFORMS

¶6. (C) Careful to avoid blaming al-Qadhafi - who has historically combined rhetorical calls for decentralization with a practical approach that features monopolization of real decision-making authority - al-Usta blamed ministers themselves for the government's lack of capacity and current difficulty in implementing al-Qadhafi's vision as expressed in the March 2 speech. The speech represented not just a change in law and structure, but a shift of responsibility for governance. With his "Zuwarah Statement" in 1975, al-Qadhafi suspended then-extant laws and government structures; in 1977 he established the GPC's and the first General People's Congress convened. Now, he was tacitly conceding the failure of the GPC structure he effectively designed and was calling for a new, as-yet undefined substitute. The General People's Congress of 2008 had assessed the failure of the GPC's to distribute and manage Libya's oil-generated wealth; the GPC's now had to focus on policy formulation (effectively how to dismantle their own organizations and spin off their functions to as-yet undetermined bureaucratic structures) and implementation (actually dismantling the GPC's). Responding to P/E Chief's question as to whether the GPC's were up to the task of simultaneously undertaking radical privatization and government restructuring, he conceded there "could be" problems with lack of government capacity.

INFLATION, CORRUPTION & PROPERTY PROTECTION ARE PRIVATE SECTOR'S KEY CONCERNS

¶7. (C) Al-Usta said the private sector in Libya agrees that there are three main economic challenges at present: managing inflationary pressures; a bloated civil service resistant to privatization; and defining and protecting property ownership. Distribution of oil wealth and privatization are cornerstones of al-Qadhafi's new vision; however, undertaking both simultaneously - and as the government potentially radically restructures and relinquishes centralized control - could foster significant inflationary pressures. The government needs to encourage production and incentivize and reward economic success as counterweights to inflation. Al-Usta agreed with the concern the Minister of Economy recently shared with us that many Libyans would simply choose not to work if they received a direct monthly stipend from oil revenues. Concerned that significant inflation could prompt old guard regime elements to roll back economic reforms, the private sector has recommended more modest wealth distribution through tax holidays, customs exemptions, and vouchers for education and health care. (Note: al-Usta strongly criticized al-Qadhafi's call for total privatization of education and health care, flatly stating that "Libyans just aren't ready for that kind of responsibility after 30 years of a state-dominated system." End note.)

RENT-SEEKING BUREAUCRATS WORRIED

¶8. (C) A problem, according to al-Osta, is that the majority of Libya's public sector employees are essentially political creatures used to only carrying out orders, vice technocrats who are responsible for thinking issues through and recommending policies. Noting that there is "a big difference between making changes under martial law and in a more natural economic and political environment", al-Usta said private sector actors are pressuring officials to carefully consider the pace and scope of reform. A key problem is that Libya's bloated civil service fundamentally distrusts the private sector and views any privatization as a threat, in large part because of concerns that their ability to extract rents and other "commissions" would be threatened. Al-Qadhafi's March 2 speech was designed in part to address the problem of a corrupt, bloated bureaucracy; however, members of the Tripoli Chamber of Commerce and other chambers in Libya are concerned that rushing privatization and government restructuring (al-Usta was dismissive of "shock therapy" approaches advocated by U.S. economist Jeffrey Sachs) could create serious economic disruptions and have counseled the five implementing committees to take a more measured approach.

PRIVATE OWNERSHIP, TAXATION & COMMERCIAL CODE ARE KEYS TO FURTHER REFORM

¶9. (C) A critical issue in which corrupt, ineffective public sector employees have prevented further reform is in defining and protecting property ownership. Establishing a legal and regulatory framework that defines and protects ownership of private ventures is a major impediment to further meaningful economic reform, he said. In other states, a businessperson's stature grows as he becomes richer; however, in Libya, greater wealth only makes that individual a bigger target for corrupt officials seeking rents. Noting that "there should be no limits to the aspirations of businesspeople in Libya", he stressed that a goal of al-Qadhafi's March 2 speech is to "unleash private entrepeneurship". Al-Usta said a new, integrated commercial code under consideration contains - in its current iteration - clearer, stronger property protection provisions. (Note: Libyan commercial law currently comprises a confusing and sometimes contradictory patchwork of laws, regulations and edicts, some of which date to the 1950's. End note.) A revised tax system - separate from the commercial code effort - is also under consideration and government officials have pledged to al-Usta and other senior private sector actors that private businesses will receive a five-year tax holiday as part of the package of privatization incentives proposed in line with al-Qadhafi's March 2 speech.

¶10. (C) Comment: Intelligent, well spoken, thoughtful and urbane, al-Usta is one of the more insightful Libyan interlocutors we've dealt with, and is certainly more candid in his analyses and criticism of the existing system than most. He receives no compensation for his work with the Tripoli Chamber of Commerce and the unified chambers; his private business interests include serving as the registered agent and distributor for electronics and appliances company Phillips. His comments likening al-Qadhafi's call for privatization and government restructuring to a return to the natural (pre-revolutionary) order of things are among the most forward-leaning we've heard. Like some western scholars of Libya, he essentially believes that by the early 1990's, it had become apparent that the ill-defined Jamahiriya system of governance had failed to manage oil wealth or diversify the economy beyond hydrocarbons. His description of profound unease and confusion among government ministers and members of the committees tasked with implementing al-Qadhafi's vision for reform accords with the consensus here. Perhaps most significant was the extent to which al-Usta and other senior private sector actors appear to be engaging the government on issues of economic reform, to include implementation of al-Qadhafi's March 2 speech and tax and commercial code reform. That they are doing so suggests a shift towards a healthier balance between a centralized, suspicious government and an increasingly robust, organized and vocal private sector that is willing and - to an extent at least - able to advocate for issues of common concern. Al-Usta's remarks criticizing a bloated, corrupt public sector and the need for better property protection laws are consistent with other observers' insights. His analysis of the possibility for significant inflation and of the old guard's potential to exploit that issue to roll back reform efforts was a new line of thinking that will bear further tracking on this end. End comment.

SUBJECT: EMBASSY DENIED ACCESS TO DETAINED HUMAN RIGHTS ACTIVIST FATHI EL-JAHMI

REF: TRIPOLI 401

CLASSIFIED BY: Chris Stevens, CDA, U.S. Embassy Tripoli, Dept of State.
REASON: 1.4 (b)
¶1. (C) Summary: An Embassy officer was prevented by security officials from entering the hospital room in which detained human rights activist Fathi el-Jahmi had previously been housed. Those officials refused to confirm whether el-Jahmi was still at the Tripoli Medical Center, and instructed medical staff not to give any information about el-Jahmi's whereabouts. Our Qadhafi Development Foundation (QDF) interlocutor claimed that we had come outside visiting hours and recommended that we only visit if accompanied by an el-Jahmi family member (a new requirement). He claimed that whether we visited was a matter for the Embassy, family and the hospital's administration to decide, and said that the QDF no longer desired to play a role. Post has scheduled a meeting on May 26 with the Tripoli Medical Center's chief administrator to follow up. End summary.

¶2. (C) Following an earlier unsuccessful attempt to visit detained human rights activist Fathi el-Jahmi (reftel), P/E Chief on May 22 visited the room in the cardiac ward at the Tripoli Medical Center (TMC) where el-Jahmi had previously been housed. Plainclothes security officials physically barred P/E Chief from entering the room, claiming el-Jahmi was no longer there, and instructed medical staff at the adjacent nurses' station not to give P/E Chief any information regarding el-Jahmi's whereabouts. They refused to confirm whether el-Jahmi was still in the cardiac ward, or whether he was at the TMC. (Note: A glimpse through the door suggested el-Jahmi was not/not in the room; however, the door to an adjacent room in which el-Jahmi has sometimes been housed was closed and locked. End note.)

¶3. (C) P/E Chief telephoned Qadhafi Development Foundation (QDF) Director Dr. Yusuf Sawani to express concern that Post was being denied access to el-Jahmi. The QDF previously told us that el-Jahmi was no longer the responsibility of the QDF or the GOL, but was in the custody of his family, which could determine who could visit him. P/E Chief said that it was curious that individuals apparently unaffiliated with his family barred us from entering el-Jahmi's room and prevented us from engaging with hospital staff to determine his whereabouts. Sawani had no response, but called back a short time later, saying the TMC's visiting hours began at 4:00 p.m. (P/E Chief had arrived at 10:30 a.m.), and that hospital regulations must be observed. (Note: P/E Chief has successfully visited el-Jahmi at various times of day on previous occasions. A number of other patients in the ward were receiving visitors at the time our attempted visit; if visiting hours are delimited, they do not appear to be closely observed. End note.) He further recommended that P/E Chief only visit el-Jahmi if accompanied by a member of el-Jahmi's family. (Note: This is a new requirement. We have previously only been required to "coordinate" our visits with the family. End note.) Sawani claimed el-Jahmi's family was uneasy with the Embassy's involvement in the case and would prefer that we not visit el-Jahmi. Regardless, Sawani said, whether we visited el-Jahmi was "between you (the Embassy), the family and the hospital's administration". Reiterating phraseology we've heard before, he said the QDF and GOL had "washed their hands" of el-Jahmi's case, stressing that he "had much more important matters to attend to than Fathi el-Jahmi".

¶4. (C) P/E Chief subsequently visited the office of the TMC's chief administrator, Dr. Omran Shammam. Shamman was unavailable, but his office director, Taher al-Bakush, scheduled an appointment for P/E Chief to meet with Shammam on May 26 and said he would attempt to confirm whether el-Jahmi is at the TMC.

¶5. (C) Comment: Having been caught in an apparent lie - claiming el-Jahmi had been discharged and returned to his family home - the QDF and GOL appear to be stalling for time. Having made the family wary of engaging with the Embassy and requiring us to be accompanied by a family member, the QDF and GOL have given themselves (from their perspective) a potential fig leaf for denying us access. Post will visit Dr. Shammam on May 26 in an attempt to confirm that el-Jahmi remains at the TMC and gather information about his medical condition. End comment.

TRIPOLI 00000430 001.2 OF 004

CLASSIFIED BY: Chris Stevens, CDA, U.S. Embassy - Tripoli, Dept of State.

REASON: 1.4 (b), (d)

¶1. (C) Summary: Frustration at the inability of eastern Libyans to effectively challenge Qadhafi's regime, together with a concerted ideological campaign by returned Libyan fighters from earlier conflicts, have played important roles in Derna's development as a wellspring of Libyan foreign fighters in Iraq. Other factors include a dearth of social outlets for young people, local pride in Derna's history as a locus of fierce opposition to occupation, economic disenfranchisement among the town's young men. Depictions on satellite television of events in Iraq and Palestine fuel the widespread view that resistance to coalition forces is justified and necessary. One Libyan interlocutor likened young men in Derna to Bruce Willis' character in the action picture "Die Hard", who stubbornly refused to die quietly. For them, resistance against coalition forces in Iraq is an important act of 'jihad' and a last act of defiance against the Qadhafi regime. End summary.

¶2. (C) P/E Chief paid an unofficial visit to the eastern Libyan town of Derna in early May in conjunction with a trip to Benghazi and the ancient Graeco-Roman ruins of Cyrene. P/E Chief traveled from Benghazi in a rented car with a driver/guide. (Note: An apparent lapse in coordination between security officials in Tripoli and Benghazi led to what appeared to be a rare gap in surveillance by security organizations. End note.) Located along Libya's eastern littoral in an area bracketed with rocky hills, Derna's beautiful, if bleak, setting and Soviet-style poured concrete buildings evoke Tyre and Sidon in South Lebanon. While asking directions to the city's old fort, P/E Chief met local resident Nouri al-Mansuri (strictly protect), who happened to hail from the same tribe as P/E Chief's driver/guide. In typical fashion, al-Mansuri promptly dropped what he was doing and spent the next several hours accompanying us around Derna, a town of some 50,000 people. Asked about his livelihood, al-Mansuri described himself as "a free businessman", usually indicating someone who does not hold a full-time job, but instead gets by on a mix of odd jobs and commercial activities.

BAAB AL-SHIHA: WELLSPRING OF LIBYAN FOREIGN FIGHTERS

¶3. (C) P/E Chief visited the Baab al-Shiha neighborhood, site of the town's old fort (now all but gone) and the district from which a large number of the Libyan foreign fighters identified in documents captured during September's Objective Massey operation in Iraq had hailed. The lower-middle class neighborhood, comprising poured concrete homes crowded along largely unpaved streets, sits on a hill overlooking the town. Unbidden, al-Mansuri pointed out a number of small, discrete mosques tucked away in side alleys, noting that the profusion of "popular mosques" complicated effective monitoring by security forces. (Note: As reported reftel, another contact indicated previously that while mosques in town centers are closely monitored, it has been more difficult for secruity organizations to effectively monitor smaller, more remote mosques in exurbs and towns in eastern Libya. End note.)

¶4. (C) A number of residents were on the streets; however, they were visibly more wary and less friendly than in other Libyan towns. Al-Mansuri later noted that some residents were closely questioned by security officials after speaking with a visiting Newsweek reporter in April. Told P/E Chief was an American, al-Mansuri jokingly swore and said "there goes my evening". Clarifying, he said he had plans that night, but would likely be detained and questioned by security officials about his interactions with an Emboff. While P/E Chief had not obviously been followed, word would doubtless reach security officials' ears that foreigners had visited and inquiries would be made. He dismissed the idea of parting company to avoid creating problems for him, saying it was important that he, as a son of Derna, not bow down to the central government's authority. "They may have their boot on our throat, but it's important that they know that we are still breathing and kicking", he said.

PERCEIVED U.S. SUPPORT FOR QADHAFI FUELS DESIRE TO FIGHT IN IRAQ

¶5. (C) Over lunch at a popular restaurant just off the waterfront, al-Mansuri and his business partner (who declined to give his name)discussed at length the local political-economic, cultural and religious scene, noting that it was "well-known" that a large number of suicide bombers (invariably described as "martyrs") and foreign fighters in Iraq hailed from Derna, a fact in which the town "takes great pride". Al-Mansuri stressed the importance of the link between the domestic political situation in Libya and the flow of foreign fighters in Iraq. Residents of eastern Libya in general, and Derna in particular, view the al-Qadhafa clan as uneducated, uncouth interlopers from an inconsequential part of the country who have "stolen" the right to rule in Libya. (Note: Qadhafi's hometown, Sirte, is a remote spot located on the coast midway between the leading cities of Tripoli and Benghazi. End note.) Easterners had tried and failed to bring down Qadhafi's regime via the Libyan Islamic Fighting Group's (LIFG) insurgency in the 1990s.

¶6. (C) There was a strong perception, he said, that the U.S. had decided in the wake of Qadhafi's decision to abandon WMD aspirations and renounce terrorism to support the regime to secure counter-terrorism cooperation and ensure continued oil and natural gas production. Many easterners feared the U.S. would not allow Qadhafi's regime to fall and therefore viewed direct confrontation with the GOL in the near-term as a fool's errand. At the same time, sending young Libyans to fight in Iraq was "an embarrassment" to Qadhafi. Fighting against U.S. and coalition forces in Iraq represented a way for frustrated young radicals to strike a blow against both Qadhafi and against his perceived American backers. Dismissing P/E Chief's argument that we have privately pressed the GOL to adopt further political and economic reforms, al-Mansuri noted that human rights activist Fathi el-Jahmi (who hails from Benghazi), remained in detention. The U.S. surely had the wherewithal to secure el-Jahmi's release if it really cared about human rights; the fact that el-Jahmi remained in detention was viewed as one sign that the U.S. tacitly supported Qadhafi, regardless of his actions. (Note: We heard a similar line of reasoning from Libyan contacts in Benghazi. End note.)

TARGETED IDEOLOGICAL CAMPAIGN IN EASTERN LIBYA

¶7. (C) Rejecting the idea that Derna was uniformly extremist, al-Mansuri and his business partner described the town as being divided between religiously conservative and secular residents. A "large number" of Derna's citizens were not happy about the increasingly conservative religious atmosphere that had prevailed since the 1980's, he claimed. Elaborating, al-Mansuri attributed adherence to more extreme iterations of Islam to "unnatural foreign influences" on religious practices in Derna. A number of Libyans who had fought and in some cases undergone "religious and ideological training" in Afghanistan, Lebanon and the West Bank in the late 1970's and early 1980's had returned to eastern Libya, including Derna, in the mid to late 1980's. Claiming their return was "not coincidental", he described a deliberate, coordinated campaign to propagate more conservative iterations of Islam, in part to prepare the ground for the eventual overthrow by the Libyan Islamic Fighting Group (LIFG) of Muammar Qadhafi's regime, which is "hated" by conservative Islamists. (Note: After taking pains to curry favor with the 'ulema' in Libya in the years immediately after the 1969 revolution, Qadhafi broke with them in the late 1970's, criticizing aspects of Islam as "un-revolutionary". Although he renewed efforts to cultivate Muslim leaders in the 1990's, deep suspicions remain. The LIFG waged a successful low-level suspicions remain. The LIFG waged a successful low level guerrilla insurgency in the early to mid-1990's, specializing in robbery and raids on remote military garrisons to sustain itself. End note.)

¶8. (C) According to al-Mansuri, these returned former fighters deliberately targeted towns and areas known to be less heavily surveilled and controlled by government security officials. Many of those were located in eastern Libya, where authorities have since Ottoman times experienced difficulty extending the writ of the central government. Al-Mansuri mentioned a small group of Libyans who had reportedly fought in Afghanistan, subsequently undergone religious training in northern Syria and Lebanon, and then returned to Derna in the late 1980's as having been particularly instrumental in steering the community in a more conservative direction. Stressing their conservatism, he said they had spearheaded campaigns against many aspects of daily life, such as smoking cigarettes, which they deemed "un-Islamic". He pointed out the large number of religiously-themed audio cassettes and DVDs on offer in Derna's markets. Many featured sermons and speeches by conservative imams in Lebanon, Syria, the West Bank and Egypt.

LIMITED SOCIAL OUTLETS CREATE FERTILE ENVIRONMENT; SATELLITE TV FOSTERS "HARD VIEW"

¶9. (C) A dearth of social outlets for young people in Derna "created space" for the message of returned fighters and conservative imams, who deliberately sought to eliminate the few social activities on offer for young people to monopolize the social and cultural environment. While Derna's social life had never been robust, there had been public cinemas, sports leagues and some youth activities organized outside the auspices of mosques. Virtually all of those had petered out in the late 1980's and 1990's, in part because of a campaign to label such activities as "un-Islamic". He cited a popular youth theater group that had staged up to half a dozen productions a year, including western plays. Clerics criticized "un-Islamic" themes and the fact that boys and girls were cast together in some productions; the resulting social stigmatization of families whose children had participated led to the group's demise in the late 1980's.

¶10. (C) The fact that Derna's educational system was weak had also enabled conservative clerics. Al-Mansuri described a situation in which mosques and imams effectively offered the only alternative to schools, sports leagues and after-school activities. A heavy influx of Arabic-language satellite television - a phenomenon that dated to the late-1990's - also fostered a "hard view" of the world, al-Mansuri said. Most young men watched a mix of al-Jazeera news, religious sermons and western action films on English language satellite channels broadcast from the Gulf. The result was a heady mixture of violence, religious conservatism and hatred of U.S. policy in Iraq and Palestine. The consensus view in Derna is that the U.S. blindly supports Israel and has invaded Iraq to secure oil reserves and position itself to attack Iran, he said. He dismissed P/E Chief's attempts to clarify U.S. policy, stressing that most people base their judgments on information they receive from satellite television and at the mosque.

PRIDE IN DERNA'S HISTORY AS A TOWN OF FIGHTERS

¶11. (C) Al-Mansuri attributed the flow of foreign fighters from Derna in part to local pride in the town's reputation as a historical locus of resistance to occupation. While many of the town's citizens were uncomfortable with the town's increasingly conservative Islamist bent, the fact that young men from Derna traveled to Iraq in disproportionate numbers to fight against coalition forces was viewed through a different lens. Not everyone liked the "bearded ones" (a reference to conservative imams) or their message, al-Mansuri said, but the duty of a Muslim in general - and of a son of Derna in particular - was to resist occupation of Muslim lands through jihad. "It's jihad - it's our duty, and you're talking about people who don't have much else to be proud of." Derna's residents might take issue with attempts to ban smoking or restrict social activities, but there was consensus on "basic issues" like jihad. Depictions on al-Jazeera of events in Iraq and Palestine fueled the widely-held view in Derna that resistance to coalition forces was "correct and necessary". Referring to actor Bruce Willis' character in the action picture "Die Hard", who stubbornly refused to die quietly, he said many young men in Derna viewed resistance against Qadhafi's regime and against coalition forces in Iraq as an important last act of defiance.

¶12. (C) Claiming "most Libyans" shared that sentiment, al-Mansuri proudly said the difference was that Derna's sons actually acted on their beliefs. Derna had historically resisted "occupations of all kinds - Ottoman, Italian, American (a reference to the 1805 attack on Derna led by William Eaton), and Qadhafi's." Derna's role in opposing the Italian occupation in the early 20th century helped foster the near-deification of Libyan resistance leader Omar al-Mukhtar, who hailed from eastern Libya. A visit to the al-Sahab mosque near the town's center was telling. Large murals on the mosque's exterior (inaccurately) depicted Islamic warriors besting what appeared to be Roman soldiers. The mosque's imam showed P/E Chief a series of small shrines to medieval holy men and a small cemetery filled with graves of "martyrs" who had resisted Ottoman and Italian occupation. Many of the markers were garlanded with flowers; al-Mansuri said families often come to picnic in the mosque's garden on holidays and pay their respects at the cemetery.

WEAK ECONOMY HURTS MARRIAGE PROSPECTS, FUELS FRUSTRATION

¶13. (C) As discussed reftel, al-Mansuri drew a direct line between the parlous local economy and the willingness of Derna's sons to travel to Iraq for jihad. A military base in Derna closed in the early 1990's, taking with it a large number of jobs (cooks, washerwomen, auto mechanics, electricians, etc.) who helped support the base. Derna has a small fishing and maritime transport industry; other economic activities are largely restricted to services and smuggling. While a military prison, located along the town's waterfront, remains open, the closure of the base hit the town hard and ushered in a more difficult era of economic austerity. Unemployment, particularly among young men between the ages of 18 and 40, is high - al-Mansuri put the percentage of un- and under-employed men in that demographic at 60 to 70 percent. Dim employment prospects leave many young men in Derna without the means to marry - a key social anchor in what remains a traditional society - and the average age at which men marry has crept upwards. Asked about reports that many now marry in their early- to mid-30's (reftel), al-Mansuri said most of his friends and acquaintances actually did not marry until their mid-30's to early- 40's. He half-jokingly noted that the cumulative level of sexual frustration among Derna's young men was "a big problem".

¶14. (C) In addition, while Benghazi and other parts of eastern Libya had benefited in the last several years from increased government patronage, Derna continued to "suffer from neglect". Citing an indeterminate grudge between Libya's former monarch, King Idriss al-Sanussi, and leading citizens of Derna, al-Mansuri claimed that Derna had long been the victim of a deliberate government campaign to keep it poor. He compared Derna's plight to the fortunes of another conservative eastern Derna's plight to the fortunes of another conservative eastern Libyan town, Bayda. While Bayda had been the summer retreat for King Idriss and was initially shunned in the early years of Qadhafi's rule, its fortunes changed after Qadhafi married Sadia Farkhis, daughter of a prominent citizen of the town. The government subsequently established the Omar al-Mukhtar University in what had been the royal palace and sited a number of government-owned enterprises there. By contrast, Derna had not benefited from any such measures.

¶15. (C) Comment: Al-Mansuri's remarks suggest that frustration at the inability of eastern Libyans to effectively challenge Qadhafi's regime, together with a concerted ideological campaign by returned Libyan fighters from earlier conflicts, have played an important role in in Derna's development as a wellspring of Libyan foreign fighters in Iraq. The GOL's limited ability to extend its writ in eastern Libya - along with limited social outlets, dim economic prospects and the town's historical role as a center of resistance - have fostered a landscape in which Derna's angry young men view the conflict in Iraq through the lens of dissatisfaction with their government and with the USG's perceived support of it. Observations of the town, together with information reported reftel, strongly suggest that comments by senior GOL officials to the effect that the east is under control are exaggerated. End comment.

SUBJECT: MEETING OF AMU HEADS OF STATE - MINUS ONE - IN TRIPOLI; RELATED VISITS BY ASAD AND POSSIBLY MUBARAK

REF: RABAT 532

CLASSIFIED BY: Chris Stevens, CDA, U.S. Embassy Tripoli, Dept of State.
REASON: 1.4 (b), (d)
¶1.   (C) GOL officials are hurriedly pulling together arrangements for a meeting of heads of state from Arab Maghreb Union (AMU) member states, scheduled to take place in Tripoli June 10-13.
MFA Secretary for European Affairs (U/S-equivalent) told the U.K. Ambassador on June 7 that the presidents of Mauritania, Algeria and Tunisia, together with Moroccan Prime Minister Abbas el-Fassi, would arrive June 10 for a meeting of the AMU.
Egyptian PolCouns Ahmed Abdel Halim told P/E Chief on June 9

that the Egyptian Embassy had received the same information regarding participants and the notional dates. Morocco has reportedly refused to be represented by King Muhammad VI because of ongoing disagreements with Algeria over the Western Sahara. (Note: Post's understanding is that a full quorum of AMU heads of state has not convened since 1994; the last senior-level meeting of the AMU, in mid-2005, was derailed in part by Morocco-Algeria contretemps. End note.) Echoing dynamics reported reftel, Abdel Halim said "there are concerns" that bad blood - between Algeria and Morocco, and between Libya and Mauritania (Mauritania has alleged Libyan complicity in an attempted coup in Nouakchott), among others - could derail what he described as "a Libyan initiative to reinvigorate the AMU".

¶2. (C) In typical fashion, the GOL has delayed finalizing preparations until the last minute. Guests in Tripoli's only five-star hotel, including several official USG travelers, were informed late on June 8 that they would have to check out not later than June 9 by order of the GOL to make room for senior AMU leaders and their retinues. Delegations are scheduled to begin arriving in Tripoli late on the afternoon of June 10. The event is scheduled to kick off that evening with a late night coffee 'majlis', with formal meetings to follow on June 11 and ¶12.

¶3. (C) Abdel Halim confirmed reports in the Arabic-language newspaper al-Hayat and elsewhere that a visit to Libya by Syrian President Bashar al-Asad would coincide with the AMU meeting (local reports differ as to whether it will be labeled a "summit" or not). Asad's arrival date had not been fixed, and the Egyptian Embassy's information was that it was still being decided whether he would participate in the AMU meeting as a guest observer, or would only make a cameo appearance and then have bilateral meetings with Muammar al-Qadhafi. The Egyptian Ambassador had been told that Asad's Tripoli visit was part of a follow-on to his recent tour of Gulf states, where he thanked Arab heads of state who attended the recent Arab League Summit in Damascus. Saying it was "expected" that Asad would have discussions with al-Qadhafi and other AMU leaders on the Middle East Peace Process and Syria's negotiations with Israel over the Golan, Abdel Halim said there was considerable confusion about what else might be on the agenda for the AMU meeting. Abdel Halim said the Egyptian Embassy in Tripoli had not yet been informed whether Egyptian President Husni Mubarak would also travel to Tripoli to join the conclave, but noted that many GOL officials appeared to believe that Mubarak would come.

REASON: 1.4 (b), (d)

¶1. (C) Media accounts on June 6 and 7 cited Philippine government sources in reporting that Libya and Brunei had pledged to increase their peacekeeping cohorts on the troubled southern Philippine island of Mindanao to 25 each. Qadhafi Development Foundation (QDF) Executive Director Dr. Yusuf Sawani told P/E Chief on June 9 that the QDF had "formally recommended" to the Government of Libya that it increase the number of its peacekeepers in Mindanao. That recommendation is currently being reviewed by the GOL; it was expected that it would be approved in coming days. Sawani confirmed reports that QDF Chairman Saif al-Islam, son of Muammar al-Qadhafi, was in Mindanao as recently as last month to help mediate between Philippine security forces and the rebel Moro Islamic Liberation Front (MILF), indicating that the increase in Libyan peacekeepers came out of meetings during that trip. Al-Qadhafi also hosted a meeting in Tripoli May 17-18 of leaders of the Moro National Liberation Front (MNLF) - a rival group to the MILF - in which intra-MNLF leadership disputes were addressed and a commitment to "dialogue" with the MILF was agreed. (Note: Under the auspices of the QDF, Saif al-Islam al-Qadhafi has played a mediating role in a number of conflicts. End note.)

¶2. (C) Noting that the GOL's peacekeeping contingent has to date varied from "a handful" to "about 15", depending on circumstances, Sawani said a final figure for an expanded cohort was still being decided. He offered that the group would almost certainly include "some" individuals from the World Islamic Call Society (WICS), a GOL-funded, quasi-governmental entity that has as its mandate the propagation of more tolerant iterations of Islam. (Note: WICS pursues that goal primarily primarily through education of would-be imams from sub-Saharan Africa, who are given comprehensive scholarships to pursue undergraduate and graduate-level studies in liberal arts and Islamic studies at its well-appointed campus in Tripoli. End note.)

¶3. (C) Sawani demurred when asked for further details about which organizations in addition to WICS might contribute to an expanded Libyan peacekeeping contingent, saying P/E Chief would have to contact the Ministry of Foreign Affairs-equivalent for any "official information". For their part, officials at the MFA insisted that any inquiries concerning Libya's peacekeeping and mediation efforts in the Philippines would have to be addressed to the QDF.

¶1. (C) In the absence of available GOL officials (who are busy hosting the Arab mini-summit), we queried the Egyptian and Lebanese embassies on Qadhafi's agenda with Syrian President Asad this week. Qadhafi's principal objective, they said, is to help Asad mend fences with Egypt and reduce tensions between Syria and other Arab states. They said that Qadhafi had fully aligned himself with Syria vis-a-vis Lebanon, and would be of no help in pressing ref A points with Asad.

¶2. (C) Qadhafi's position is largely based on ideology and his desire to stand with the forces of "resistance," according to the Lebanese Charge' and the Egyptian DCM. The Leader traveled to Damascus in March to attend the Arab summit, but also to signal solidarity with Asad. (Asad's visit to Tripoli is reportedly intended in part to repay the Leader for that gesture.)

¶3. (C) There are also Lebanon-specific issues at play, the Charge' said. The Leader has very negative views on Lebanon, which he has publicly characterized as an artificial "Christian state" created by the French that should be merged into Greater Syria. Other factors contributing to Libya's strained relations with Lebanon are the 30-year-old dispute over Lebanese Imam Musa Sadr, who disappeared in Libya during an official visit in 1978; Lebanese parliament speaker Nabih Berri's public snubbing of a Libyan envoy three years ago in Beirut (Berri turned his back on the Libyan in a receiving line); and a Lebanese judge's summons of Qadhafi this year to testify in a lawsuit against Libya brought by the family of the missing Imam.

¶4. (C) The Egyptian DCM reported that Qadhafi had made numerous attempts to lure Egyptian President Mubarak to Tripoli to broker a "sulha", or truce, with Asad, but had failed to persuade the Egyptian leader to come, just as he had failed to persuade Mubarak to accompany him to Damascus for the Arab Summit.

¶1. (S/NF) Summary: Post visited two returned Guantanamo detainees to confirm their welfare and whereabouts, and the legal basis on which they are being detained in Libya. One detainee's trial has been completed and he is awaiting a verdict on the four charges he faces; the case of the second detainee is expected to go to trial in the next two to three months. End summary.

¶2. (S/NF) At a June 10 meeting, P/E Chief interviewed separately returned Guantanamo detainees Muhammad Abdallah Mansur al-Rimi (AKA Abdul Salam Abdul Omar Sufrani, ISN 194) and Ben Qumu Abu Sufian Ibrahim Ahmed Hamouda (ISN 557) per ref A instructions. The meeting took place at a GOL security service facility in Tripoli, and was attended by a host government security official. The last visit to the two returned detainees took place on December 25, 2007 (ref B).

ISN 194

¶3. (S/NF) Al-Rimi (ISN 194), who was returned to Libya in December 2006, said he had been detained at an External Security Organization (ESO) detention facility between December 2006 and June 2007, when he was transferred to the Abu Salim prison, located in the Tripoli suburbs. The security official explained that the Abu Salim prison is controlled and managed by military police; it is the facility at which terrorists, extremists and other individuals deemed to be particularly dangerous to state security are detained. Al-Rimi said he remains in solitary detention in a 15 foot by 15 foot cell and has not been mistreated. He is able to walk outside regularly, and is able to speak with other prisoners during exercise periods. He is provided with drinking water, tea and three meals a day. He does not have access to books, radio or television. He has access to medications and has been visited by a prison doctor on the occasions when he has been ill. Al-Rimi stated that members of his family have visited him three times since his return to Libya, most recently in March 2008. (Note: As reported ref D, their previous visits were in January and May 2007. End note.)

¶4. (S/NF) Asked about the condition of his arm and his teeth, about which he had previously complained (ref D), al-Rimi said both were better. He repeated his earlier claim (ref A) that he sustained the injury to his arm in 2004 or 2005 during a scuffle with U.S. soldiers who entered his cell to punish him for allegedly instigating a disturbance among several other prisoners.

¶5. (S/NF) Asked for his understanding of the legal basis on which he is being held and the status/schedule of any legal proceedings against him, al-Rimi said he was questioned by the ESO and Internal Security Organization (ISO) officials between his return in December 2006 and February 2008, when his case was transferred to the Prosecutor General's office. His case has subsequently been been tried and is currently with a panel of judges, who are reviewing it. His understanding is that he faces four charges: 1) membership in the Libyan Islamic Fighting Group; 2) membership in al-Qaeda; 3) forging a passport and travel documents and using them to exit the country, and; 4) failing to secure permission to exit the country when he left to fight in Afghanistan. Al-Rimi has court-appointed legal counsel. The Prosecutor General's Office told al-Rimi and his attorney that the court was expected to render a verdict in his case on/about June 16. A verdict had been expected on/about May 5; however, the trial was delayed. Al-Rimi does not know how long his prison sentence could be if convicted of one or more of the charges he faces; however, he claimed his attorney told him he stood a good chance of being acquitted and released.

¶6. (S/NF) Hamouda (ISN 557), who was returned to Libya in August 2007, said he had been detained at an ESO detention facility for three months and was then transferred to the Abu Salim prison. He currently remains at Abu Salim, but understands he may be transferred next month to the Jdeida prison, which houses common criminals, in Ain Zaraa. He has been held in solitary detention since his return - his biggest complaint - and said he has not been mistreated. (Note: The security official explained that detention protocols for extremists and terrorists mandate that detention protocols for extremists and terrorists mandate that they be held in solitary detention to preclude the possibility that they could recruit other members of the prison population for extremist activities. End note.) He is not able to exercise at the Abu Salim prison, but was able to do so at the ESO facility before he was transferred. He is provided with drinking water, tea and three meals a day. He does not have access to books, radio or television. He has access to medications and has been told he may be visited by a prison doctor if he is ill, but has not had need of one. Hamouda has had two visits by members of his family since his return: his wife and children visited in late December, and his wife and brother-in-law in January. He complained that his family had not visited since, but said he he did not know whether they had tried. (Note: He conceded that his wife had divorced him and remarried, and that relations between them were difficult; however, after the second visit, permission for further visits had to be obtained from the Prosecutor General's office, vice ISO. He speculated that the Prosecutor General's office may have been less efficient in processing visit requests. End note.)

¶7. (S/NF) Asked for his understanding of the legal basis on which he is being held and the status/schedule of any legal proceedings against him, Hamouda said he was questioned by ESO and ISO officials between his return in August 2007 and May 2008, when his case was transferred to the Prosecutor General's Office. His understanding is that he faces three charges: 1) membership in the Libyan Islamic Fighting Group; 2) membership in al-Qaeda, and; 3) that he performed illicit work for a private company in Sudan and Afghanistan. He also faces charges related to a drug trafficking offense for which he was convicted and imprisoned in the early 1990's. According to the security official, Hamouda escaped from prison and left Libya illegally in 1992 to travel to Sudan; he may/may face separate charges for escaping and leaving the country. Hamouda has no legal counsel, but said he does not want an attorney because he has committed no crimes. Claiming that if he were really a member of al-Qaeda " ~ the U.S. would have never returned me to Libya ~ ", he said his impression is that all of the charges against him are based entirely on hearsay from witnesses whose credibility is suspect. He has been told by the Prosecutor General that his trial may start in two to three months. Hamouda does not know how long his prison sentence could be if convicted for one or more of the charges he faces; however, he claimed that he had been granted a pardon by the Qadhafi Development Foundation for the original drug trafficking conviction and his subsequent escape from prison and illegal exit from Libya.

CLASSIFIED BY: Chris Stevens, CDA, U.S. Embassy Tripoli, Dept of State.
REASON: 1.4 (b), (d)
¶1. (C) Summary: In a strongly worded speech at what was characterized as a mini-Arab League summit, Muammar al-Qadhafi sharply criticized a French-backed Mediterranean Union proposal, claiming that attempts to incentivize southern Mediterranean states with investment schemes were insulting. Claiming that the new entity would undermine Arab and African member states' commitments to the Arab League (AL) and African Union (AU), respectively, he suggested that an alternative could be formal EU cooperation with the AL and AU, to be coordinated through the headquarters of the latter two organizations. A visit to Tripoli by former British Prime Minister Tony Blair coincided with the mini-summit; al-Qadhafi reportedly told Blair he was concerned that the Mediterranean Union proposal represented an effort by southern European states to create a de facto North African bulwark against illegal migration from sub-Saharan Africa, and to "further legitimize" Israel at the expense of Arab states. End summary.

¶2. (U) At a mini-Arab League (AL) summit meeting in Tripoli on June 10, Muammar al-Qadhafi made a strong case against a Mediterranean Union modeled on and linked to the European Union (EU), an idea championed by French President Nicholas Sarkozy that would comprise the 27 EU nations and a dozen non-EU countries located along the southern Mediterranean littoral. The meeting was attended by heads of state from Mauritania, Algeria, Tunis and Syria, and by Moroccan Prime Minister Abbas el-Fassi. Originally billed to some Arab diplomats in Tripoli as an Arab Maghreb Union (AMU) summit plus Syrian President Bashar al-Asad and Egyptian President Hosni Mubarak (ref A), late innings controversy about the refusal of King Muhammad VI of Morocco to attend reportedly prompted the Government of Libya (GOL) to recast the event as a mini-AL summit.

¶3. (U) Orchestrated by al-Qadhafi, the Tripoli meeting was designed to muster Arab opposition to the Mediterranean Union proposal in advance of a broader gathering in Paris on July 13 to formally unveil the plan. In a strongly-worded opening address, al-Qadhafi characterized the French proposal as an attempt to undermine the unity of Arab League and African Union member states. Describing Sarkozy's proposal as "a passing fad", he likened it to the failed Barcelona Process initiated in 1995, and said attempts to incentivize AL and AU states to join the new union with large-scale investment proposals were "an insult". Striking a populist tone, he stressed that Arab and African states were "not hungry to this extent; we're not dogs that they can wave a bone in front of and we'll run after it". Arab and African unity "should not be sacrificed for transient investment projects". Emphasizing that member states' commitments to the extant AL and AU trumped those to any nascent Mediterranean Union, he suggested that a viable alternative to a new structure could be formal cooperation between the EU and AL and AU states, to be coordinated through AL headquarters in Cairo and AU headquarters in Addis Ababa. Al-Qadhafi's sarcastic references to "my dear Sarkozy" took observers by surprise and has left some wondering whether the bonhomie engendered by the latter's visit to Tripoli in July 2007 has begun to ebb. French diplomats in Tripoli offered no comment, noting only that they had not yet received instructions from Paris on whether or how to respond.

¶4. (C) Al-Qadhafi was the only leader to offer public remarks before the meeting adjourned to a reportedly heated session of principals plus one. Egyptian and Algerian diplomats told us Morocco was isolated in its support for the Mediterranean Union proposal and by the fact that it was represented at the PM, vice head of state, level. Libyan MFA interlocutors conceded that a closing statement had been expected and desired by al-Qadhafi; however, the group was unable to achieve consensus on its position concerning the union, let alone language for a summary statement. In a further sign of discord, President Mubarak ultimately did not attend (he cited a heavy schedule), despite persistent efforts by al-Qadhafi to lure him to Tripoli to broker a truce with Syrian President Bashar al-Asad. The Egyptian PolCouns told us al-Qadhafi called Mubarak twice - once while in the car with Asad on their way into town from the airport - to urge him to come to Tripoli (further details on Asad's visit were reported ref B)

¶5. (C) The mini-AL summit coincided with a visit to Tripoli on June 10 by former British Prime Minister Tony Blair. U.K.

June 10 by former British Prime Minister Tony Blair. U.K.
Deputy Head of Mission Mark Matthews told P/E Chief June 11 that al-Qadhafi stressed to Blair in their private meeting concern that Sarkozy's proposal represented an effort by southern European states to create a de facto North African bulwark against illegal migration from sub-Saharan Africa.
Recapitulating themes we've heard publicly here, al-Qadhafi insisted the key to mitigating illegal migration flows to Europe

TRIPOLI 00000457 002.2 OF 002

was to reduce "push" factors by promoting greater development in source countries. The two specifically discussed the possibility of Libyan investment in Sierra Leone and Rwanda, countries in which Blair's charitable foundation has a strong interest (further details on Blair's visit septel). Al-Qadhafi also voiced suspicion that the Mediterranean Union could be used as a forum in which to encourage further Arab-Israeli rapprochement as a means by which to "further legitimize" Israel at the expense of the Arabs.

¶6. (C) Comment: Al-Qadhafi's speech offers a snapshot of Libya's unique vision of overlapping pan-Arab and pan-African aspirations. While striking vintage pan-Arab themes - "we are fully committed to the Arab League, which we hope will one day lead us to an eventual Arab union" - he was also careful to stress that Arab Maghreb states were African and had responsibilities to their sub-Saharan counterparts that trumped any notional partnership with Europe. End comment.

¶1.   (S/NF) In the course of a meeting on June 10 separate issues (reftel), two detainees returned from Guantanamo Bay expressed to P/E Chief the fact that detention facilities run by Libya's External Security Organization (ESO) were markedly better than the Abu Salim prison.  ISN 194 and ISN 557 were held at an ESO detention facility for approximately three months after their detention facility for approximately three months after their return to Libya in December 2006 and August 2007, respectively. Both were then transferred to the Abu Salim prison, which is located in the suburbs of Tripoli. A security official who accompanied P/E Chief during his visit explained that Abu Salim is controlled and managed by military police; it is the facility at which terrorists, extremists and other individuals deemed to be particularly dangerous to state security are detained. Depending on the nature of their case, such individuals may be questioned by ESO before being transferred to the custody of the Internal Security Organization (ISO) for further questioning. While military police officials formally manage and guard Abu Salim prison, ISO officials play a large role in management of the facility because they bear primary responsibility for many of the prisoners there.

¶2. (S/NF) The two detainees said they were given regular opportunities to exercise outdoors during their time at the ESO-run facility. By comparison, opportunities for exercise at Abu Salim were more limited and access to outdoor exercise was less regular. Both detainees said separately that guards and officials at the ESO detention facility treated prisoners with greater respect than their counterparts in ISO. Food was better - both noted that they were able to get coffee at the ESO facility, while Abu Salim offered only tea - and they were given access to books, radio and television, which were not available at Abu Salim. Physical facilities were also better: ESO facilities were comparatively well-furnished and maintained, and often had windows, while cells in Abu Salim were dark, dank and in poor condition. ISN 194 noted that Muhammad Tarnesh, Executive Director of the Human Rights Society of Libya, had been able to visit him on multiple occasions during his time at the ESO facility, but had not visited him at Abu Salim. Tarnesh subsequently told P/E Chief that he had sought several times to visit the detainees at Abu Salim, but had not yet obtained permission to do so.

¶3. (S/NF) A security official told P/E Chief that conditions at ESO detention facilities had dramatically improved some two years after the arrival of ESO Director Musa Kusa in 1994. Kusa, disturbed by consistent reports of inhumane treatment in ESO detention facilities, issued orders in 1996 directing that his officers immediately cease the abuse of detainees in their custody. ESO detention facilities were physically rehabilitated shortly thereafter. Other improvements included the quality and quantity of food, offering beverages other than water, allowing detainees to exercise regularly, and stopping what the official termed the "casual abuse" of detainees. The official said Kusa circulated a memorandum to his staff outlining the new procedures and making it clear that ESO officials who violated the new rules would be punished. Several officials were dismissed in 1996 and 1997, which the official credited with driving home the point that detainees in ESO custody were not to be abused. Commenting on the fact that both ISN 194 and ISN 557 expressed a desire to return from Abu Salim prison to the ESO facility, the security official said their comments were typical of detainees who are transferred from the custody of ESO to Abu Salim.

REF: A) STATE 58476, B) THE HAGUE 482 , C) TRIPOLI 119

CLASSIFIED BY: Chris Stevens, CDA, U.S. Embassy Tripoli, Dept of State.
REASON: 1.4 (b), (d)

¶1. (C) Summary: The GOL's lead interlocutor on CWC issues told us: 1) conversion of the Rabta chemical weapons production facility would not be completed until December 2009 (which the GOL appears to have known since early 2006), 2) the GOL would not submit a new National Paper at the upcoming June 24-27 Executive Committee meeting of the OPCW, 3) GOL Delreps would/would read an official statement into the record of the EC's informal session that would address all points stipulated in ref A non-paper; 4) the GOL was ready to facilitate a bilateral visit by U.S. technical experts at any time, and; 5) despite delays, the GOL expects to complete destruction of chemical agents well before the deadline it agreed to with States Parties. End summary.

¶2. (SBU) P/E Chief conveyed ref A demarche points and non-paper on June 12 to Dr. Ahmed Hesnawy, who heads Libya's CWC compliance efforts, and Adel Ben Issa, who has the lead on CWC issues in the International Organization Department of the Ministry of Foreign Affairs (MFA/IO). Dr. Fathi Asseid, Technical Director of the General Company for the Manufacture of Pharmaceuticals and Medical Supplies, which controls the Rabta facility and a related pharmaceutical packaging plant, also attended the meeting. Stressing the GOL's commitment to transparency in declaring its CWC-related equipment, implementing conversion of the Rabta facility and destroying chemical weapon precursors, Dr. Hesnawy thanked the U.S. and U.K. for their "robust" support for Libya's efforts to date. Per ref A, copies of the non-paper and an oral brief on the demarche points were conveyed to U.K. and Italian Embassy counterparts in Tripoli.

CONVERSION PROJECT

¶3. (SBU) On the points of the demarche, Hesnawy indicated the following:

- CONVERSION DELAY: Conversation of the Rabta chemical weapons production facility will not be completed before November/December 2009. The GOL signed an original contract with Italian company PharmaChem on February 11, 2002; an addendum to that contract, signed on June 1, 2006 (which Hesnawy showed P/E Chief), stipulated that PharmaChem's portion of conversion work at the Rabta facility would be completed by September 2009. The GOL, factoring in possible unexpected delays, added three months to the timeline, yielding an expected completion date of December 2009. Hesnawy did not respond when asked why Libya had not notified States Parties earlier that conversion would be delayed if it had known since February 2006 that the contract with PharmaChem stipulated a completion date in late 2009. He insisted that the GOL would complete the conversion project and initiate production of pharmaceuticals at Rabta by December 2009.

- NEW NATIONAL PAPER: Libya will not submit a new National Paper to the Executive Council (EC) meeting of the OPCW scheduled to begin on June 24. Noting that National Papers are to be submitted at least a month in advance of EC's for review by States Parties, Hesnawy pointed to the fact that the meeting was just ten days away and that there was not sufficient time for review. P/E Chief noted that we had asked since early May that the GOL immediately submit a new National Paper for review. Hesnawy had no response, but said Libya's delegation will instead submit an "official statement" during the Informal Session that would address all points stipulated in ref A non-paper. The informal statement would explain "completely" the reasons for missing the July 29, 2008 conversion deadline and the need for "a correction" to the conversion plan that would eliminate the requirement that a protective sandbag berm be removed.

- VISIT BY U.S. TECHNICAL EXPERTS: Hesnawy and his MFA/IO counterpart stressed that the GOL stands ready to facilitate a visit to the Rabta facility by U.S. Embassy officials and/or U.S. technical experts - the U.S. side is "welcome to visit at any time - we have nothing to hide". Such a visit could occur before the upcoming EC meeting or after it. The GOL has already extended invitations through the Italian and U.K. Embassies for their capitals to send teams of technical experts. (Note: The Italian Ambassador and DCM, but not/not Italian technical experts visited Rabta on June 7. A U.K. technical team is notionally scheduled to visit July 6-9, 2008. End note.) Hesnawy stressed that the GOL was willing to accommodate a series of bilateral visits by technical experts, but was not/not willing to facilitate a visit by a combined team (i.e., of U.S. and U.K. experts) out of concern that the visit's agenda could be broadened.

- NEXT STEPS: Hesnawy indicated that he clearly understood that U.S. support for a conversion plan correction to allow retention of a modified protective berm depended on a commitment to transparency and conduct of a site visit to Rabta. He said that the GOL might/might be amenable to submitting a new National Paper at the next EC after the upcoming meeting in late June, indicating that the GOL would premise its decision in part on conversations with Delreps at the June 24-27 EC meeting.

IRANIAN HARASSMENT DURING APRIL 2008 OPCW INSPECTION ALLEGED

¶4. (C) Referring to the April visit by an OPCW inspection team, Hesnawy complained that an Iranian inspector had raised issues with equipment in Building Number 3 and Building Number 4 that had since 2004 been mutually agreed to have been exclusively commercial in nature. According to Hesnawy, four previous tranches of OPCW inspectors had been informed of the equipment and assured the GOL that the equipment did not need to be declared. Referring to the GOL's decision to vote for a UN Security Council Resolution calling for a third tranche of sanctions against Iran because of its nuclear weapons program, Hesnawy said the Iranian inspector deliberately raised the issue of equipment in the commercial building to harass Libya in retaliation for its UNSC vote. Hesnawy claimed Iranian officials at the OPCW had conceded as much in conversations at The Hague with Libya's representative, Muhammad Gheton. "Libya feels it's being dragged back to 2004", Hesnawy complained, saying previous teams of inspectors should have raised the issue of the equipment earlier if it was indeed a subject of concern.

DESTRUCTION: STATUS OF ITALIAN CONTRACT & PROJECT TIMELINE

5. (C) Regarding ref B reports that the timetable for Libya's destruction program had slipped, Hesnawy conceded that there had been delays; however, he maintained that Libya would nonetheless meet the deadline of the States Parties. The GOL envisions the project in two phases: 1) Repackaging of the agent from existing polyethylene containers (which has resulted in diffusion, vice leakage, of the agent) into improved containers for the 800 km trip from the Ruwagha facility in al-Jufra to the Rabta facility; and 2) actual destruction of the material. Hesnawy said the GOL will rely on Italian company SIPSA Enginerring and Libyan civil contractors to complete the repackaging and destruction work. Contract negotiations with the Italian company had been "completed" and terms were mutually understood by the GOL and SIPSA; however, the contract itself had not yet been formally approved by "all relevant GOL entities", according to Hesnawy. Additional details, such as securing GOL approval to establish requisite bank accounts and authority for letters of credit were also still being worked out.

¶6. (C) Hesnawy offered the following schedule for the destruction program:

- January/February 2009: Repackaging of the agent takes place; agent is stored in Bunker 109 at al-Jufra until transport to Rabta in late 2009/early 2010;

- March 2009: Construction completed on destruction building at Rabta facility;

- March-October 2009: Destruction equipment installed in destruction building at Rabta facility;

- December 2009: Cold and hot tests of destruction equipment at Rabta destruction facility;

- Early February 2010: Commissioning of destruction facility at Rabta;

- May 1, 2010: 1% of agent destroyed per agreement with OPCW. Hesnawy offered that SIPSA and the GOL estimated that destruction of all of the agent would require only 25 calendar days once destruction commenced at the Rabta facility. He anticipated no difficulty meeting the deadline for destruction of the agent, and predicted that Libya would complete the project well in advance of the deadline.

¶7. (C) Comment: Animated and at times angry, Hesnawy repeatedly stressed the GOL's annoyance at what it perceives as an "endless" series of questions about details of its conversion and destruction plans. Stressing that dignity was more important than anything in Libya, Hesnawy offered that GOL officials had considered whether it would be better to destroy the Rabta facility altogether rather than allow it to be used as a pretext for criticism of the GOL's intentions and performance by "hostile international actors".

¶1. (C) Summary: Eleven members of a group of self-described dissidents were convicted on June 10 of planning to foment a rebellion against the "people's authority system" and of meeting with an official from a foreign government; sentences ranged from 6 to 25 years imprisonment. They were not/not convicted on related weapons possession charges. Two of the group were released on May 27 and June 10, respectively; the fourteenth individual has not been seen in prison or at court proceedings since his arrest last year. A human rights contact who is working with the convicted individuals on an appeal was optimistic that the sentences would be reduced; however, a optimistic that the sentences would be reduced, however, a recent EU demarche to the GOL on the subject was ill-received by the GOL, which characterized the case as a strictly internal matter. European missions have received no further instructions on whether or how to further pursue the issue. One of the convicted men carries Danish citizenship; the Danish Consul General has been rebuffed in his attempts to seek access to him and admitted frankly that his efforts had been greatly complicated by the GOL's recent decision to ban the importation of Danish products and prohibit Danish companies from taking part in Libyan infrastructure projects in retaliation for the republishing of cartoons depicting the Prophet Muhammad in Danish newspapers earlier this year. The GOL's strong response to the EU's demarche on the subject, together with Post's experience in the el-Jahmi case, suggests that it may be prudent to see how the appeal fares before making a formal intervention in this case. End summary.

JUMA'A BOUFAYED RELEASED

¶2. (C) Human Rights Watch (HRW) and London-based Libyan opposition website Libya al-Mustaqbal reported in late May that Juma'a Boufayed, brother of self-described regime critic Dr. Idriss Boufayed, had been released. Muhammad Tarnesh (strictly protect), Executive Director of the Human Rights Society of Libya (HRSL - affiliated with the quasi-governmental Qadhafi Development Foundation), confirmed to P/E Chief on June 2 that Juma'a Boufayed was released from the Abu Salim prison in Tripoli on/about May 27 and had returned to his family home in Ghariyan.

¶3. (C) Libyan security officials arrested Idriss Boufayed and eleven other individuals on February 16, 2007 to disrupt a demonstration in Tripoli's Green Square that had been scheduled for February 17, the first anniversary of riots in Benghazi. Opposition websites reported that Juma'a Boufayed was not involved in planning the protest, but was subsequently detained along with Abdulrahman al-Qutawi after he gave an interview about his brother's arrest. There had been concerns, prompted in part by reports on opposition websites, that Boufayed had died in detention. The fourteen faced three criminal charges, each of which potentially carried the death penalty: attempting to foment rebellion against the "people's authority system"; possession of weapons for the purpose of fomenting a rebellion; and conducting unauthorized communications with an official of a foreign government.

ADEL HUMAID RELEASED; ELEVEN OTHERS CONVICTED & SENTENCED

¶4. (C) HRW, parroting Libya al-Mustaqbal, reported June 12 that another detainee, Adel Humaid (five Humaid brothers were charged in the case), was released on June 10; the HRSL's Tarnesh confirmed the release to P/E Chief on June 12. Citing reports from two unidentified individuals who observed the courtroom proceedings in Tripoli, Libya al-Mustaqbal also said a state security court convicted 11 of the 14 men implicated in the case of planning to overthrow the government and of meeting with an official from a foreign government. (Note: As reported ref B, Idriss Boufayed and al-Mahid Humaid met with Poloff on February 12, 2007 to discuss the status of domestic opposition to al-Qadhafi's regime and plans to stage the February 17 demonstration. They were subsequently arrested and the Charge was convoked by the MFA to receive a strong warning against Post's contact with internal oppositionists and dissidents (refs C-D - NOTAL), a subject of ongoing friction with the GOL. Opposition websites have previously reported that Boufayed's Ghariyan-based family has been able to attend the court hearings and Post believes Boufayed's family is the single source of Libya al-Mustaqbal's reporting. End note.) The court acquitted the men of related weapons possession charges.

¶5. (C) The convictions were as follows: Dr. Idriss Boufayed - 25 years; al-Mahdi Humaid - 15 years; al-Sadiz Salih Humaid - 15 years; Faraj Humaid - 15 years; Ali Humaid - 15 years; Ahmad Yusef al-Ubaidi - 6 years; 'Alaa al-Dirsi - 6 years; Jamal al-Haji - 12 years; Farid al-Zuwi - 6 years; Bashir al-Haris - 6 years; and al-Sadiq Qashut - 6 years. At this point, two detainees have been released (Juma'a Boufayed and Adel Humaid), 11 have been sentenced (above) and one - Abdulrahman al-Qutawi - has not been seen in prison or at trial proceedings since he was arrested with Juma'a Boufayed.

APPEAL EFFORT UNDERWAY

¶6. (C) The HRSL's Tarnesh confirmed to P/E Chief June 12 that convictions had been handed down and that Adel Humaid had been released. Tarnesh, who was angry about the severity of the sentences, said he was assisting Idriss Boufayed and the other 11 convicted individuals with the process of appealing the verdicts and sentences. He was optimistic that the sentences would be reduced, noting that it was "culturally normal" for courts to reduce harsh sentences on appeal, and believed some of those who received lesser sentences might be released outright during the appeal process. It was not clear whether Tarnesh was assisting Boufayed and the others on their appeals in a personal capacity or as head of the HRSL. Tarnesh had no further information concerning the whereabouts of the missing fourteenth detainee, Abdulrahman al-Qutawi, but said he had continued to make inquiries.

¶7. (C) Tarnesh indicated that the HRSL and QDF were working to secure the release of Idriss Boufayed from the Sabratha Hospital, where he is reportedly undergoing treatment for advanced cancer (HRW reports that it is lung cancer), on humanitarian grounds. As reported ref E, the QDF claimed on April 6 in its first public statement on the case that it had facilitated Boufayed's transfer to Sabratha Hospital for "specialized treatment" through mediation with the Attorney General's office. A report in the pro-government al-Watan newspaper in late May had suggested that Boufayed had been released from hospital in late May on humanitarian grounds related to his illness; however, Tarnesh said Boufayed remained at Sabratha Hospital and that security officials remained outside his room. (Note: As reported ref F, Post has experienced a parallel dynamic in the case of detained human rights activist Fathi el-Jahmi, whom the GOL claimed to have released, but who remains in de facto detention at the Tripoli Medical Center, where security officials control access to his room. End note.) Tarnesh said the HRSL and QDF continued to work to secure the release of Boufayed, whose condition he described as "not critical, but requiring constant medical care". Explaining the severity of Boufayed's sentence, Tarnesh likened his case to that of Fathi el-Jahmi, saying security officials and other, unspecified elements of the GOL "hated" Boufayed because of his attempts to organize opposition to al-Qadhafi's regime. (Note: Tarnesh knows Boufayed personally and has visited his family several times in Ghariyan since his arrest last year. End note.)

EUROPEAN UNION DEMARCHES GOL ON BOUFAYED CASE, EL-JAHMI & DEATH PENALTY

¶8. (C) U.K. Poloff David Clay told P/E Chief June 15 that the European Union (EU) had demarched the GOL on June 1 concerning Idriss Boufayed, the case of detained human rights activist Fathi el-Jahmi and to register opposition to the continued use of the death penalty in Libya. The French ambassador, representing Slovenia (which holds the EU Presidency, but does not have representation in Libya), delivered the EU's points to MFA Secretary for European Affairs Abdulati Obeidi on June 1. Stressing Libya's respect for the sovereignty of other states' internal affairs, Obeidi expressed "great surprise" that the EU internal affairs, Obeidi expressed "great surprise" that the EU had raised the death penalty and the el-Jahmi and Boufayed cases. Describing those issues as "purely internal Libyan matters", he made it clear that the GOL considered the EU's intervention inappropriate and would not offer a further response. EU missions in Tripoli have received no further instructions on whether or how to pursue any of the three subjects of the demarche. Separately, Danish Honorary Consul General George Wallen told P/E Chief on June 11 that his efforts to secure access to Jamal al-Haji, a member of the Boufayed group who holds Danish citizenship, had been "greatly complicated" by the fact that the GOL recently imposed a ban on importation of Danish products and prohibited Danish companies from taking part in Libyan infrastructure projects in retaliation for the republishing of cartoons depicting the Prophet Muhammad in Danish newspapers earlier this year. Wallen was strongly rebuffed in his initial efforts to see al-Haji and was awaiting further instructions from Copenhagen, which he candidly described as "confused" about whether to press the issue.

¶9. (C) Comment: That the individuals, after 16 months in mostly incommunicado detention, have been convicted for the "crime" of planning to stage a peaceful protest is reprehensible. Despite his analysis of the GOL's motivation for handing down a harsh sentence against the ailing Boufayed, Tarnesh appeared relatively optimistic that the QDF would be able to push for his release on humanitarian grounds; however, Tarnesh offered no specifics for the other ten men. The GOL's strongly negative response to the EU's demarche on the subject, together with Post's experience in the el-Jahmi case, suggests that an intervention by the U.S. at this juncture - be it public or private - would likely hurt, rather than help, the effort to reduce the convicted mens' sentence or secure their release.

End comment.

SUBJECT: OIL- AND GAS-RELATED POLLUTION IN LIBYA

¶1.  (SBU)  Summary. Libya is slowly acknowledging the need to address the environmental impact of its oil and gas production.
Environmental issues are becoming more central to the Libyan oil and gas industry, particularly with the influx of foreign companies, which often have a corporate mandate to operate in an environmentally-conscious manner, and the drive to expand production.  In practical terms, though, the GOL's involvement in and concern about environmental issues remain marginal.
Significant shortcomings in the regulatory framework and legal system remain; spotty enforcement and a lack of environmental remediation facilities are key issues.  End Summary

GOVERNMENT OVERSIGHT AND LEGAL FRAMEWORK

¶2.  (SBU)  Government of Libya (GOL) oversight of environmental issues stems from several laws passed by the General People's Congress, which in turn tasked the General People's Committee (GPC) for Health and Environment with implementation. The GPC for Health and Environment in turn relies on the Libyan General Environmental Authority (EGA) to play the role of environmental watchdog and day-to-day implementer of these regulations. Unfortunately, the EGA is not an effective actor. Its staff has suffered considerable turnover, contributing to a lack of continuity and direction. (Note: Not an uncommon situation in GOL entities. End note.) The EGA takes a hands-off approach to its environmental oversight responsibilities. When energy companies wish to carry out environmental projects, EGA steers them into cooperative relationships with municipalities, universities, or other community-based organizations or associations, further diluting oversight and implementation.

¶3. (SBU) The EGA's role is complicated by the a confusing legal and regulatory framework. New decrees and amendments to existing laws are often adopted without repealing earlier legislation; in Libya's system, there is no effective mechanism for reconciling new legislation with previously existing statutes. Laws lack sufficient specificity to offer useful guidance. For the moment, GPC Law No. 15/2003 (regarding protection and improvement of the environment) is the most comprehensive and widely-implemented Libyan environmental law. However, law No. 7/1982, (regarding environmental protection) and law No. 8/1973 (regarding the prevention of oil pollution in the sea) remain on the books and have discrete sets of implementing regulations. Law No. 15 was added to the mix in 2003 without any corresponding implementing regulations; implementing regulations related to law 7 (1982) and law 8 (1973) have effectively been used to implement law 15. Given the confusing regulatory situation, most foreign energy companies do their best to comply with Libyan law, while also adhering to environmental standards established by their own companies, which reflect North American/European standards, in the hope that doing so will keep them out of trouble.

SCOPE OF THE PROBLEM

¶4. (SBU) Oil and natural gas production entail unique environmental issues. These include the need to properly handle waste and polluted water generated from drilling operations, residuals from oil tank farms, chemical wastes, naturally-occurring radioactive materials, oil pits, and spillages. This is a sizeable undertaking in a fully developed economy with a mature oil and gas sector; it is a significant challenge in an operating environment in which western producers were absent for 25 years and in which government oversight is uncoordinated and in some cases contradictory. A significant problem is the lack of proper facilities, principally well-run landfill sites and industrial waste incinerators, in Libya. There are a handful of Libyan and foreign companies currently attempting to establish viable operations here; however, none have enjoyed considerable success to date.

¶5. (SBU) The most significant issue is contamination from oil pits, storage facilities, refineries and the petrochemical and chemical plants associated with production and refining operations. Dumping is a common practice, particularly in the remote areas of the country in which most oil and natural gas wells and production facilities are located. Expatriate oil and gas contacts report that some local companies representing themselves as environmental service companies are known to regularly take custody of pollutants and simply relocate them to more remote locations in the middle of the desert. Some waste is buried; some is left on the sand. According to foreign environmental remediation companies marketing their services in Libya, more than five million tons of hydrocarbon production-related waste requiring special handling have accumulated throughout the country. Environmental studies conducted in populated areas, such as al-Zawiya (where the Zawiya refinery is located) and Tripoli (home to a number of storage facilities) have shown high levels of soil contamination.

¶6. (SBU) Comment: While there appears to be a growing awareness among some GOL actors of environmental issues and a desire to develop best practices in the oil and gas sector, opaque regulations and inconsistent implementation of existing laws suggest that the burden will remain on foreign companies to cobble together environmentally responsible operations based on a combination of Libyan and international standards. The good news is that North American and European oil and gas companies have generally adopted stringent internal guidelines and monitoring mechanisms to ensure hydrocarbon production is carried out in an environmentally-responsible fashion. Those firms are likely to produce a greater percentage of Libya's oil and gas as the country seeks to increase oil production to three million barrels/day from a current production level of 1.7 million barrels/day by 2013. Nonetheless, indigenous Libyan entities, particularly oilfield services companies, are playing an increasingly active role in oil and gas production. More concerted efforts by the GOL to govern those entities, particularly with respect to clarifying regulations and enforcing them, will be necessary if Libya is to adequately safeguard its environment. End comment.

REASON: 1.4 (b), (d)

¶1. (C) Summary: Eleven members of a group of self-described dissidents were convicted on June 10 of planning to foment a rebellion against the "people's authority system" and of meeting with an official from a foreign government; sentences ranged from 6 to 25 years imprisonment. They were not/not convicted on related weapons possession charges. Two of the group were released on May 27 and June 10, respectively; the fourteenth individual has not been seen in prison or at court proceedings since his arrest last year. A human rights contact who is working with the convicted individuals on an appeal was optimistic that the sentences would be reduced; however, a recent EU demarche to the GOL on the subject was ill-received by the GOL, which characterized the case as a strictly internal matter. European missions have received no further instructions on whether or how to further pursue the issue. One of the convicted men carries Danish citizenship; the Danish Consul General has been rebuffed in his attempts to seek access to him and admitted frankly that his efforts had been greatly complicated by the GOL's recent decision to ban the importation of Danish products and prohibit Danish companies from taking part in Libyan infrastructure projects in retaliation for the republishing of cartoons depicting the Prophet Muhammad in Danish newspapers earlier this year. The GOL's strong response to the EU's demarche on the subject, together with Post's experience in the el-Jahmi case, suggest that an intervention by the U.S. at this juncture would likely hurt, rather than help, the effort to reduce the convicted mens' sentence or secure their release. End summary.

JUMA'A BOUFAYED RELEASED

¶2. (C) Human Rights Watch (HRW) and London-based Libyan opposition website Libya al-Mustaqbal reported in late May that Juma'a Boufayed, brother of self-described regime critic Dr. Idriss Boufayed, had been released. Muhammad Tarnesh (strictly protect), Executive Director of the Human Rights Society of Libya (HRSL - affiliated with the quasi-governmental Qadhafi Development Foundation), confirmed to P/E Chief on June 2 that Juma'a Boufayed was released from the Abu Salim prison in Tripoli on/about May 27 and had returned to his family home in Ghariyan.

¶3. (C) Libyan security officials arrested Idriss Boufayed and eleven other individuals on February 16, 2007 to disrupt a demonstration in Tripoli's Green Square that had been scheduled for February 17, the first anniversary of riots in Benghazi. Opposition websites reported that Juma'a Boufayed was not involved in planning the protest, but was subsequently detained along with Abdulrahman al-Qutawi after he gave an interview about his brother's arrest. There had been concerns, prompted in part by reports on opposition websites, that Boufayed had died in detention. The fourteen faced three criminal charges, each of which potentially carried the death penalty: attempting to foment rebellion against the "people's authority system"; possession of weapons for the purpose of fomenting a rebellion; and conducting unauthorized communications with an official of a foreign government.

ADEL HUMAID RELEASED; ELEVEN OTHERS CONVICTED & SENTENCED

¶4. (C) HRW, parroting Libya al-Mustaqbal, reported June 12 that another detainee, Adel Humaid (five Humaid brothers were charged in the case), was released on June 10; the HRSL's Tarnesh confirmed the release to P/E Chief on June 12. Citing reports from two unidentified individuals who observed the courtroom proceedings in Tripoli, Libya al-Mustaqbal also said a state security court convicted 11 of the 14 men implicated in the case of planning to overthrow the government and of meeting with an official from a foreign government. (Note: As reported ref B, Idriss Boufayed and al-Mahid Humaid met with Poloff on February 12, 2007 to discuss the status of domestic opposition to al-Qadhafi's regime and plans to stage the February 17 demonstration. They were subsequently arrested and the Charge was convoked by the MFA to receive a strong warning against Post's contact with internal oppositionists and dissidents (refs

C-D - NOTAL), a subject of ongoing friction with the GOL. Opposition websites have previously reported that Boufayed's Ghariyan-based family has been able to attend the court hearings and Post believes Boufayed's family is the single source of Libya al-Mustaqbal's reporting. End note.) The court acquitted the men of related weapons possession charges.

¶5. (C) The convictions were as follows: Dr. Idriss Boufayed - 25 years; al-Mahdi Humaid - 15 years; al-Sadiz Salih Humaid - 15 years; Faraj Humaid - 15 years; Ali Humaid - 15 years; Ahmad Yusef al-Ubaidi - 6 years; 'Alaa al-Dirsi - 6 years; Jamal al-Haji - 12 years; Farid al-Zuwi - 6 years; Bashir al-Haris - 6 years; and al-Sadiq Qashut - 6 years. At this point, two detainees have been released (Juma'a Boufayed and Adel Humaid), 11 have been sentenced (above) and one - Abdulrahman al-Qutawi - has not been seen in prison or at trial proceedings since he was arrested with Juma'a Boufayed.

APPEAL EFFORT UNDERWAY

¶6. (C) The HRSL's Tarnesh confirmed to P/E Chief June 12 that convictions had been handed down and that Adel Humaid had been released. Tarnesh, who was angry about the severity of the sentences, said he was assisting Idriss Boufayed and the other 11 convicted individuals with the process of appealing the verdicts and sentences. He was optimistic that the sentences would be reduced, noting that it was "culturally normal" for courts to reduce harsh sentences on appeal, and believed some of those who received lesser sentences might be released outright during the appeal process. It was not clear whether Tarnesh was assisting Boufayed and the others on their appeals in a personal capacity or as head of the HRSL. Tarnesh had no further information concerning the whereabouts of the missing fourteenth detainee, Abdulrahman al-Qutawi, but said he had continued to make inquiries.

¶7. (C) Tarnesh indicated that the HRSL and QDF were working to secure the release of Idriss Boufayed from the Sabratha Hospital, where he is reportedly undergoing treatment for advanced cancer (HRW reports that it is lung cancer), on humanitarian grounds. As reported ref E, the QDF claimed on April 6 in its first public statement on the case that it had facilitated Boufayed's transfer to Sabratha Hospital for "specialized treatment" through mediation with the Attorney General's office. A report in the pro-government al-Watan newspaper in late May had suggested that Boufayed had been released from hospital in late May on humanitarian grounds related to his illness; however, Tarnesh said Boufayed remained at Sabratha Hospital and that security officials remained outside his room. (Note: As reported ref F, Post has experienced a parallel dynamic in the case of detained human rights activist Fathi el-Jahmi, whom the GOL claimed to have released, but who remains in de facto detention at the Tripoli Medical Center, where security officials control access to his room. End note.) Tarnesh said the HRSL and QDF continued to work to secure the release of Boufayed, whose condition he described as "not critical, but requiring constant medical care". Explaining the severity of Boufayed's sentence, Tarnesh likened his case to that of Fathi el-Jahmi, saying security officials and other, unspecified elements of the GOL "hated" Boufayed because of his attempts to organize opposition to al-Qadhafi's regime. (Note: Tarnesh knows Boufayed personally and has visited his family several times in Ghariyan since his arrest last year. End note.)

SUBJECT: ENI'S OIL AND GAS DEAL EXTENDED, OTHER COMPANIES WORRY TERMS WILL SET A NEW (UNFAVORABLE) PRECEDENT

REF: 07 TRIPOLI 912

¶1. (SBU) Summary: Soaring oil prices are allowing Libya to press for more stringent long-term contracts with foreign oil and gas producers. A twenty-five year extension for Italian firm Eni North Africa BV, which entailed a sizeable bonus payment and dramatically reduced the company's production share, was recently ratified after lengthy negotiations. The potential impact of Eni's deal is significant. Local observers expect that the National Oil Company's (NOC) success in securing very favorable terms will embolden it to pursue renegotiation of existing contracts with other international oil companies (IOCs). Despite Libya's relatively unique position in terms of unproven reserves, high quality oil and low recovery costs, observers here expect that some IOC's facing potentially long renegotiation periods and dramatically reduced production shares may choose to abandon production efforts in Libya. End summary.

EPSA MODEL TIME-TESTED

¶2. (SBU) Libya's Exploration and Production Sharing Agreement (EPSA) rubric has been the most widely used model for producers in Libya since 1974. Under these agreements, international oil companies (IOCs) receive a fixed percentage of output from the fields involved based on the terms of their bid to explore and develop Libyan acreage. The terms of these agreements, particularly the share of overall production retained by companies, have grown increasingly less favorable to IOCs. Intense competition among foreign oil and gas companies to book reserves in Libya, widely perceived to be one of the relatively few places in the world with significant unproven reserves of sweet, light crude and natural gas, has fueled the trend towards less profitable EPSA's.

¶3. (SBU) As a point of comparison, the standard production share allocation for IOCs in the latest EPSA round (EPSA IV) has been 10-12% of overall production, down from production share allocations of 20% or more that were typical in earlier EPSA rounds. IOC's have accepted stiffer terms based on their high expectations of Libya's hydrocarbon producing potential, the comparatively low cost of oil recovery in Libya, the generally high quality of Libyan crude, Libya's close proximity to European markets and rapidly rising oil and gas prices. Encouraged by the willingness of some IOC's to accept production shares as low as 7 percent under the EPSA IV framework, the NOC - led by former Prime Minister Shukhri Ghanem, reputedly a hard bargainer - has been pressing all IOC's to accept further reductions in their production share allocations to increase Libya's take. Striking a nationalist tone, Muammar al-Qadhafi explicitly referred in his June 11 speech on the occasion of the "evacuation" of U.S. and British military bases in Libya to efforts to renegotiate EPSA contracts as a manifestation of Libya's continued resolve to resist Western imperialism.

AT LONG LAST, ENI FINALIZES ITS CONTRACT EXTENSION

¶4. (SBU) In October 2007, ENI agreed with the NOC to convert its existing long-term production contracts, which were signed in the mid-1980s under EPSA III terms, to the most recent contractual model under EPSA-IV (reftel). That deal was submitted to Libya's General People's Congress for approval and ratification and was ratified on June 12. Under the new deal, Eni reduced its production share to 12% for oil (down from 35-50 percent for its various fields) and 40% for natural gas (down from 50 percent). The share for gas production will drop to 30% after 2018. In exchange, the NOC extended Eni's EPSA III contracts by 25 years, approved a 3 billion cubic meter (BCM) expansion to the Western Libya Gas Pipeline (WLGP), and the construction of a new 4 million tons per annum LNG facility at Mellitah. Eni accepted less attractive fiscal terms on its blocks (its overall portfolio has fallen by 42% due to lower production share figures), and made a $1 billion non-recoverable payment. Eni's licenses were converted to the EPSA IV model and will now expire in 2042 (for oil) and 2047 (for gas).

OTHER DEALS IN THE OFFING?

¶5. (SBU) Several other major extensions are anticipated in the coming months, including those involving U.S. firm Occidental

TRIPOLI 00000474 002 OF 002

Petroleum (along with Austrian partner OMV) and Petro-Canada. Those agreements were signed with the NOC in late 2007, but still require GPC ratification. It is possible the NOC will seek further concessions in light of its deal with Eni. Spain's Repsol and the NOC are renegotiating along the EPSA IV contractual model. The initial deal between Repsol YPF and NOC stipulated a 50-50 split of production; however, the NOC is now seeking a minimum production share of 72 percent.

¶6. (SBU) The NOC has approached numerous other IOCs about extensions, raising the possibility that it will reopen deals that were only concluded a few years ago. Even the U.S. Oasis Group (comprising Amerada-Hess, Marathon and ConocoPhillips), which paid $1.8 billion in December 2005 to return to acreage in Libya's Sirte Basin that it held before the suspension of U.S.-Libyan diplomatic ties and the imposition of U.S. and UN sanctions, may be affected. Libya's relatively modest 59.2 percent production share in that deal has generated preliminary probing by the NOC as to whether the Oasis Group would consider renegotiating, which it has so far successfully opposed.

¶7. (SBU) Comment: With ratification of its revised EPSA contract, Eni has secured a long-term position in Libya, but at a considerable price. Part of the calculus for Eni and other IOC's is the expectation that oil and gas prices are likely to remain high, making non-recoverable bonus payments and lesser production shares tenable from the standpoint of their projects' overall profitability. It is widely expected that the NOC will push hard to renegotiate other extant deals and extensions that involve reduced production shares for IOCs. Its confidence buoyed by favorable market conditions, Libya is playing hardball with the IOC's, sending a clear message that no deal is beyond renegotiation, no matter how recently concluded or how favorable the terms for the NOC. Libya and the IOC's have been here before: a spate of renegotiations and extensions occurred in the late-1960s and early 1970s, driven in part by the then-new al-Qadhafi regime to demonstrate to its people that it was a better steward of Libya's hydrocarbon resources than the Sanussi monarchy had been. As during that period, the current penchant for shifting the goalposts has not been well-received by the IOCs. Despite Libya's relatively unique position in terms of unproven reserves, high quality oil and low recovery costs, observers here expect that some IOCs facing potentially long renegotiation periods (and associated costs of idle personnel and materiel) and diminished production returns may choose to abandon altogether their production efforts in Libya. End comment.

CLASSIFIED BY: Chris Stevens, CDA, U.S. Embassy Tripoli, Dept of State.
REASON: 1.4 (b), (d)
¶1. (C) Summary: In Libya, major business deals are both political and personal. The ongoing drama surrounding efforts by the U.K. government and investors to keep open the Marks & Spencer retail store in Tripoli, and a campaign by some GOL officials to close it, affords a prime example. Libyan officials at the highest levels have publicly attacked a major European retailer - damaging bilateral ties with the U.K. in the process - largely due to a personal grievance between the Prime Minister and the Libyan businessman at the center of the deal. The fate of the store and the businessman are closely intertwined, and the ensuing test of wills reportedly has the potential to end in violence. The U.K. Embassy, which is closely involved, has flatly told us they view the ultimate outcome of the case as an important bellwether of the investment climate in Libya and will advise potential U.K. investors accordingly. End Summary.

THE TRAVAILS OF "MARKS & SPARKS" CONTINUE

¶2. (C) UK retailer Marks & Spencer (M&S), affectionately referred to in the U.K. as "Marks & Sparks", opened a location in Tripoli in April that has since been a magnet for controversy (ref A). The store has been closed by Libyan authorities on at least two occasions, and there is a very good chance that it will be shut permanently in coming months. According to a local business contact with good second-hand knowledge of the situation, Prime Minister al-Baghdadi al-Mahmoudi's office has become directly involved in the matter, and has directed that the franchise either be sold to unspecified government officials, or suffer an immediate freeze on further import of stock and be closed permanently by year's end. M&S employees have received close scrutiny by Libyan security officials, who have been used as a strongarm adjunct in this political play; employees were all taken in for a second round of questioning in early June.

GOL ADOPTS REPUGNANT ANTI-SEMITIC TACTICS

¶3. (C) The Libyan government's public narrative has taken the form of persistent anti-Semitic rhetoric alleging that the company is a "Zionist entity" with Jewish origins that supports Israel and "the killing of Palestinians". A strongly-worded statement released to Libyan media outlets in early June by the General Union of Chambers of Commerce and Industry (which ostensibly represents all private businesses in Libya, both Libyan and foreign) condemned the fact that the store was still open and called for its permanent closure. A well-placed contact with direct knowledge of the case told us that Giuma al-Usta, Chairman of the General Union of Chambers and author of the statement is being used by the Prime Minister as a proxy in the campaign against M&S. (Note: Al-Usta's personal fortune is reputed to have been made by dint of the fact that he is a political apparatchik with close ties to the Prime Minister. He holds the personal rank of Colonel in the Revolutionary Committee structure, a shadowy apparatus tasked with protecting the revolution, but which plays a role in everything from organizing networks of informants in residential neighborhoods to "facilitating" business deals. End Note).

¶4. (C) The Chamber also voiced its disapproval of a recent stop at the M&S store by the visiting U.K. Trade Minister. According to the statement, the visit violated the Libyan people's sensibilities, as it fell "on the eve of al-Nakba" (i.e., the date of the Israeli military victory in 1948 that created the modern state of Israel). The U.K. Commercial Counselor told us that M&S had been removed in 2007 from the Arab League's list of companies to be boycotted because of Jewish ownership or Israeli equities, and that both M&S and the U.K. Embassy had done careful vetting with the GOL before the Tripoli store opened in an attempt to preclude any related complications.

HOW DID IT COME TO THIS?

¶5. (C) In typical fashion, while the GOL's public criticism has comprised pseudo-populist rhetoric against "the forces of Zionism", the crux of the matter is in fact about personal relations and politics. The primary Libyan agent for the Marks & Spencer franchise in Libya is well-known businessman Husni Bey. Bey was arrested in March 2007 as part of a government

Bey. Bey was arrested in March 2007 as part of a government crack-down on several prominent businesspeople accused of illegally engaging in monopolistic business practices (ref B). He has since been subject to a travel ban on several occasions, most recently in April-May. His impressive personal fortune, prominent public profile and dominance over several categories of consumer goods in Libya gall government insiders and state-supported "men of commerce". His acrimonious relationship with Prime Minister Baghdadi al-Mahmoudi is well-known - as reported ref B, he derisively referred to al-Mahmoudi as "that man" in a meeting of the Libyan Businessmens' Council to discuss private sector reform. Another member of Libya's business elite described Bey as "dangerously candid", noting that he does not mask his general disdain for the GOL and its officials.

AND HOW DOES IT END?

¶6. (C) According to a well-placed embassy commercial contact, there is a genuine threat that state security officials may visit personal harm on Husni Bey (and others like him) at the direction of "old guard" regime figures. He conveyed to Econoff the substance of a meeting to which he was summoned in May to discuss Bey's situation. Our contact was called to the house of his uncle, a man with close ties to senior government officials, where he was questioned about Husni Bey by two senior security officials. The individuals pressed him hard to offer details on Bey's business dealings, indicating they were building a case against Bey. Telling our contact that "in the old days we would just arrest him", they offered that they would instead "clip him down to nothing" by dismantling his business empire piecemeal and undertaking a campaign to diminish his business influence. They then noted darkly that if those methods proved insufficient, they would see to it that Bey was involved in a fatal car accident.

¶7. (C) Comment: The ongoing drama of M&S illustrates the confluence of the personal and the political in a commercial climate in which senior regime officials have a direct stake in virtually anything worth owning or selling. The fact that a small number of business elites like Bey have managed to amass considerable fortunes without paying the tithe that senior regime officials consider to be their due rankles greatly. PM al-Mahmoudi's attack on M&S and Bey, motivated as far as most observers can tell solely by personal animus, has created friction with the U.K. and prompted questions by Libyan and foreign concerns about the extent to which the business and investment climate has actually improved. Some Libyan observers have expressed concern that M&S was allowed to open in the first place if the government's position was that it was a "Jewish-owned company" and therefore should not be allowed to operate in Libya. A prominent business contact told us that the travails of M&S served as a cautionary tale about the potential consequences for investors of the sheer lack of coordination and fecklessness in the GOL.
The public and ham-fisted manner in which the GOL is pursuing this matter has ensured that any action taken against M&S and/or Bey will quickly become common knowledge, which may give the GOL pause before it acts too rashly against either. U.K. Emboffs have flatly told us that they view the ultimate outcome of the case as an important bellwether of the investment climate in Libya and will advise potential U.K. investors accordingly. End comment.

SUBJECT: GOL VIEWS ON DISPOSITION OF C-130'S IN GEORGIA AND POSSIBLE PURCHASE OF SPARE PARTS AND NEW AIRFRAMES

CLASSIFIED BY: Chris Stevens, CDA, U.S. Embassy Tripoli, Dept of State.
REASON: 1.4 (a), (b), (d)

¶1. (C) Representatives of Lockheed Martin and the Office of the Secretary of the Air Force traveled to Libya June 2-4 to meet with officials of the Government of Libya (GOL) to discuss the disposition of eight C-130H aircraft purchased by Libya in 1974, which were not granted export licences and remain in Georgia, and maintenance for the nine other C-130's that currently comprise Libya's fleet. The U.S. team met with GOL officials on June 3.

U.S. Participants:

- Costas Papadopolous, Vice President of Corporate Development for the Arabian Gulf, Libya and Pakistan, Lockheed Martin Corporation
- Captain John Schutte, Country Director, Office of the Secretary of the Air Force/IARM Middle East/Africa Division
- Colonel Kyle Carnahan, Defense Attache, U.S. Embassy - Tripoli
- John Godfrey, Political and Economic Chief, U.S. Embassy - Tripoli

GOL Participants:

- Brigadier General Mahmoud Mustapha Ghasia, Strategic Airlift Commander, Libyan Air Force
- Colonel Muhammad Asur el-Ghawi, C-130 Maintenance Chief, Libyan Air Force
- Said Gseebat, Legal Adviser
- Muhammad Matari, Director of the Americas Department, Ministry of Foreign Affairs

U.S. POSITION

¶2. (C) The U.S. team stressed that the goal of the meeting was not/not to reach final agreement on the way ahead, but rather to identify issues about which the GOL had questions and to discuss possible solutions. Papadopolous underscored the preference of Lockheed Martin (LM) that further communications remain in a government-to-government channel to ensure full transparency for all actors involved in the process; LM would respond in writing through DOD and State to the questions and issues raised by GOL interlocutors. The GOL officials agreed to that formulation. The two sides agreed to address four main issues: 1) disposition of the eight C-130H's purchased by Libya in 1974, for which export licenses were not granted and which remain in Marietta, Georgia; 2) spare parts for Libya's extant fleet of 7 C-130H's and 2 C-130 L-100's; 3) the possibility of sending a U.S. Air Force-Lockheed Martin joint technical team to Libya to assess the C-130 fleet and identify logistics/maintenance needs, and; 4) the capabilities of the new C-130J variant and GOL interest in the possible purchase of that aircraft.

LIBYAN POSITION

¶3. (C) MFA Americas Desk Director Muhammad Matari stressed that GOL must see movement on resolution of the outstanding issue of the C-130H's in Georgia in order to facilitate movement on other issues. Characterizing the aircraft as "hostages" of USG policy, he stressed that it had been a political decision to block their export, despite the fact that the GOL had paid for the aircraft. Suggesting the GOL was limited in its ability to resolve the issue by domestic political constraints, he said that "at all levels - popular and political" in Libya there was the strong feeling that Libya should be "compensated" for the eight C-130H's. A key consideration for the GOL with respect to possibly repairing the C-130H's, procuring spare parts for Libya's current fleet, and purchasing new C-130J's was whether the USG would grant necessary export licenses. It would be "politically fatal" for senior GOL leaders if they pursued further purchases of parts and airframes and had those blocked again by the USG because of export license issues. The GOL had previously requested in connection with a June 2007 visit to inspect the aircraft an official statement of the USG's position on whether it would grant export licenses for the eight C-130H's in Georgia if/if they were repaired. It had also asked whether export licenses would be needed and forthcoming for purchases of spare parts for its current fleet. The GOL had not received answers to either question to date; a USG statement of position on those issues would be necessary to facilitate forward movement.

TAKEAWAYS

¶4. (C) After a lively but collegial discussion, the two sides agreed on the following points for follow-up:

TRIPOLI 00000481 002 OF 003

- USG Position on Aircraft Disposition and Export Licenses: The USG, in coordination with LM, would ideally provide an official position to the GOL on aircraft disposition and compensation for the eight aircraft at Marietta. The position would include assurances that the export of potentially repaired C-130H's, spare parts, technical orders or future equipment purchases would not/not be blocked due to export license or other concerns.

- Compensation for C-130H's: The Libyan side stressed that if the eight aircraft are beyond repair, or if it is not economically feasible to repair them, they expect and would be amenable to "fair" compensation for the airframes. After initially insisting that such compensation should be equal to the amount of the original purchase price, the Libyan side conceded that some form of partial compensation would be acceptable. Matari stressed that it did not matter, from the GOL's perspective, whether the compensation came from LM or the USG; the critical point was that Libya must be compensated in some tangible way. The Libyan side suggested that a mechanism for such compensation could be a discount in the amount of a mutually-agreed dollar figure on the price of new C-130J aircraft.

- $2.7 Million "Residual" Owed to Libya: The Libyan side raised a payment of $2,775,000 it made to LM in the early stages of the contract for the eight C-130H's in Marietta. The GOL maintains that any valuation of compensation it would receive for the eight C-130H's should include that payment. Papadopolous noted that the figure likely represented the residual amount of money paid towards spare parts and training originally envisioned in the LM-GOL contract that were never delivered. It was agreed that Papadopolous would follow up with LM to determine what the $2,775,000 payment had been for and what the company's position was on whether it owed some or all of that amount to the GOL.

- Time & Material Contract and FMS Rubric: On the possibility of repairing the eight C-130H's at Marietta, Papadopolous noted the degraded nature of the airframes and stressed that repair work necessary to restore the aircraft to airworthiness would have to be performed under a "time and material contract" with no fixed contract value. LM's position was that such a contract would have to be performed under the auspices of the Foreign Military Sales (FMS) program, as a government-to-government agreement. Explaining the FMS process, the DATT stressed the advantage of performing the work under a time and material contract under the FMS rubric. The Libyan side agreed that any future work and sales would best be completed under FMS auspices.

- Spare Parts: The Libyan side also agreed that any purchase of spare parts for its current fleet of C-130's should come through the FMS system. Libya has obtained some spare parts (NFI) since it submitted a Materials Requirement List (MRL) last year; it was agreed that the Libyan side would submit a new Letter of Request (LOR) through the DATT's office for a Letter of Availability (LOA) concerning requested spare parts. The Libyan side also requested updated technical manuals for its current fleet, valued at $2-3 million.

- Technical Team Visit: The GOL will set a date for a USAF technical team to visit Libya to inspect the current fleet; the DATT will coordinate with LM on possible participation by the company.

- The USG, in coordination with LM, needs to determine an appropriate resoluton of an outstanding sales and tax lien levied by the State of Georgia, which was assessed at $3.3 million in 1988 (plus monthly interest and penalties) million in 1986 (plus monthly interest and penalties).

- The USG, in coordination with LM, need to address the second encumbrance on the eight C-130H's resulting from the court case Price & Frey v. Libya ($17.7 million claim, plus interest since July 2005).

- C-130J's: The briefing on the new aircraft was well-received; the Libyan side expressed interest in exploring the possibility of future purchases, provided that export license guarantees could be assured by the USG.

¶5. (C) Comment: The U.S. team assessed that the Libyan side was genuinely interested in resolving what for them is clearly a sensitive issue with considerable political equities. A key achievement was securing agreement from the Libyan side, which initially insisted that the issue of the eight C-130H's in Marietta must be resolved before any other issues could be explored, that movement on the Marietta aircraft, spare parts requests and potential C-130J procurement could move in parallel. Nonetheless, the Libyan side remains wary. In a sidebar after the meeting, Matari told P/E Chief that Muammar al-Qadhafi had personally met with Libya's C-130 team to discuss their upcoming meeting with LM and USG officials. Matari said al-Qadhafi had stressed that any movement on resolving the C-130H's, procuring spares or purchasing new C-130J airframes) must/must be contingent on securing USG guarantees that export licenses would be granted for those items. There is considerable concern that U.S.-Libya engagement on C-130's is a deliberate ruse or an issue on which the USG will ultimately be unable to deliver because of opposition from Congress, either of which would greatly embarrass the regime. Matari stressed that conservative regime elements skeptical of the GOL's decision to re-engage with the U.S. would capitalize on another failure to secure export licenses for C-130's and spare parts to demonstrate U.S. ill will and argue against further re-engagement. End comment.

CLASSIFIED BY: Chris Stevens, CDA, U.S. Embassy Tripoli, Dept of State.

¶1. (C) Summary: A respected Libyan journalist was jailed on charges that a column he wrote criticizing the government's poorly-coordinated urban development efforts had incited negative public opinion and called into question the "people's authority". Released from prison pending trial after the intervention of Saif al-Islam al-Qadhafi, the case may stem from tension between Saif al-Islam and the Prime Minister, who has reportedly led the charge to try and sentence the journalist. End summary.

JOURNALIST JAILED

JOURNALIST JAILED

¶2. (C) Opposition websites reported in early May that Muhammad Tarnesh, a journalist and Executive Director of the Human Rights Society of Libya (HRSL - affiliated with the Qadhafi Development Foundation), was arrested and charged in connection with a column he wrote criticizing the fact that after twenty-five years of inactivity in the area of urban development, the Government of Libya (GOL) had undertaken a hasty, poorly coordinated campaign of housing and infrastructure development that featured as its primary accomplishment to date the seemingly random destruction of large numbers of residences and businesses. Lamenting the suffering caused by the widespread "'Izaala" campaign (a word that translates as "removal", and is written on buildings slated for destruction), Tarnesh's column pointedly asked readers whether anyone had seen the homes of government ministers destroyed.

¶3. (C) Tarnesh's column first appeared on April 1 in the "Maal wa A'mal" newspaper, published by al-Izdihar Press in Misurata. Tarnesh was subsequently arrested, the paper's editor-in-chief, Khalifa Muqattaf was questioned and al-Izdihar Press was closed by order of the Secretary of the General People's Committee for Information, Nuri Hmeidi. The column was subsequently posted in early May on the website "Libya al-Youm" ("Libya Today"). "Libya al-Youm" reported that a group of prominent Libyan journalists had met at the Journalists' League in Tripoli in early May to express solidarity with Tarnesh and Muqattaf and criticize the GOL's abuse of restrictive press laws to muzzle criticism.

CHARGES MAY STEM FROM PERSONAL ANIMUS BETWEEN SAIF AL-ISLAM AND PRIME MINISTER

¶4. (C) Tarnesh told P/E Chief on May 28 that he was arrested on three charges in late April under Press Act 76 of 1972: 1) inciting negative public opinion; 2) criticizing the leaders of the Revolution, and; 3) casting doubt on the ability of secretaries of the General People's Committees (GPC's), and thereby questioning the "people's authority". Tarnesh was in custody for some 10 days during the initial part of the investigation. Officials from the Prosecutor General's office told him Prime Minister al-Baghdadi al-Mahmoudi had taken particular umbrage at Tarnesh's column, had orchestrated his arrest and had evinced a personal interest in seeing Tarnesh tried and sentenced. Al-Mahmoudi, who was widely rumored to have fallen from favor with Leader Muammar al-Qadhafi and was expected to have been sacked at the March session of the General People's Conference, is reportedly highly sensitive to criticism of development projects, in part because Housing and Infrastructure Board Chairman Dorda - a more charismatic figure - has received credit for the progress that has been made while al-Mahmoudi has born the brunt of criticism. Hoping to forestall criticism and possibly save his job, al-Mahmoudi undertook a poorly-received campaign of personal appearances and press availability sessions at a number of housing and infrastructure sights in the run-up to the March session of the General People's Congress. After officials from the quasi-governmental Qadhafi Development Foundation (QDF), headed by Saif al-Islam al-Qadhafi, intervened with the Prosecutor General's office, Tarnesh was ultimately released from prison pending his trial.

¶5. (C) Noting that officials from the Prosecutor General's office told him they believed the charges were frivolous and unlikely to stand up in court, Tarnesh offered that he would personally be less confident about his case if it were not for the personal interest of Saif al-Islam, who was following his case and who, according to QDF Executive Director Dr. Yusuf Sawani, had personally raised it with al-Mahmoudi. (Note: Tarnesh told P/E Chief that Saif al-Islam had personally recruited him to head the HRSL because he was an avid reader of his columns and appreciated Tarnesh's willingness to openly question GOL officials' competence. End note.) Al-Mahmoudi had persisted in his efforts to have Tarnesh re-incarcerated until his trial, so far to no avail. Claiming it was well-known that al-Mahmoudi and Saif al-Islam didn't see eye-to-eye, Tarnesh said some had speculated that al-Mahmoudi orchestrated Tarnesh's prosecution to strike an oblique blow at Saif al-Islam. As it stood, Tarnesh believed he stood a good chance of being acquitted on all three charges; the next hearing is scheduled for late-June. Laughingly noting that there was "no such thing as justice in Libya", Tarnesh joked that it was fortunate for him that a son of the Leader with no official position (a reference to Saif al-Islam) could trump a Prime Minister.

ARTICLE STRIKES A CHORD

¶6. (C) Post spoke with a number of Libyans who had read Tarnesh's column. The broad consensus was that Tarnesh had given voice to commonly held frustration with what they view as an arbitrary and fruitless "development" program. (Note: Tarnesh is a regular columnist and is well and favorably known in Libya's sterile media environment as the author of articles that gently criticize and poke fun at government incompetence and inconsistencies. End note.) A young taxi driver who had until recently managed his family's clothing store on Djeraba Street complained bitterly that the GOL had given his family less than a week's notice that the store was slated for destruction, and had ultimately provided compensation for only one-tenth of its value. Noting that he had to delay his wedding because his family finances had suffered, he echoed comments by other Tripolitanians to the effect that the development projects and related destruction of existing structures had been badly coordinated by the GOL.

¶7. (C) Comment: Tarnesh's case underscores the personal and at times petty nature of intra-regime politics in Libya, where the limits of public discourse remain narrowly circumscribed. It is blatantly obvious to local observers that the rush to tear down old facades and put up new buildings as evidence of the revolution's benefits (keyed to the 40th anniversary of the revolution, which will fall on September 1, 2009) has placed a considerable burden on a system characterized by limited capacity. Libya, however, remains a place where one does not lightly tell the emperor he has no clothes. End comment.

SUBJECT: PETRO-CANADA SIGNS 30-YEAR PACT WITH LIBYA

REF: TRIPOLI 474

¶1. (SBU) Summary: Petro-Canada has signed a series of 30-year contracts with Libya's National Oil Corporation (NOC), bringing its old agreements into line with Libya's preferred EPSA-IV contract standard. The new deals stem from Libya's ongoing efforts to secure tougher terms from foreign oil companies, and mark the growing importance of Libya to Petro-Canada. End Summary.

DONE DEAL - AT LAST

¶2. (SBU) On June 19, representatives from Petro-Canada and the NOC signed a total of six contracts covering all of Petro-Canada's acreage in Libya. The contracts were crafted under the NOC's EPSA IV agreement template, which has become the preferred framework for all international oil companies (IOCs) working in Libya (reftel). An agreement signed by the NOC and Petro-Canada in December 2007 was recently ratified by the General People's Congress, paving the way to sign the actual contracts.

¶3. (SBU) Under the new deals, Petro-Canada has committed to pay a $1 billion signing bonus and invest $3.5 billion in the redevelopment of several large producing fields, and $460 million in oil and gas exploration. Petro-Canada will pay 50% of all development costs and 100% of all exploration costs. The company had to accept a lower production share (a flat 12% for all six contracts, regardless of location), but hopes to double its current production levels to at least 200,000 barrels of oil per day over the next five to seven years.

LIBYA OF GROWING IMPORTANCE TO PETRO-CANADA

¶4. (SBU) As the latest company to renegotiate its presence in Libya, thereby extending its presence to 2038 (its existing deals were set to expire in 2015), Petro-Canada has now opened up new opportunities in both exploration and redevelopment projects, with a predominant focus in the prolific Sirte basin region. According to local contacts with the company, the renegotiation of the contracts is consistent with Petro-Canada's efforts to re-position itself globally. Petro-Canada had not previously regarded Libya as an area central to its operations, given the company's exposure stemming from its Alberta operations and gas production in Syria. This new deal elevates Libya to a priority area of operations for the company, with prospects for substantial growth.

¶5. (SBU) Comment: Petro-Canada's re-negotiation is the latest in an emerging trend of contract extensions/renegotiations (reftel). The NOC is waging a concerted campaign to re-negotiate or extend existing contracts under better terms, principally with respect to production share. For their part, international oil companies - mindful of the high price of oil and limited venues for new exploration and production - have so far swallowed hard and signed up. End comment.

of reftel tasker.

- OBJECTIVE MASSEY NAME TRACES: Names for Libyan foreign fighters recovered in the Objective Massey raid in September 2007 were passed in GRPO liaison channels to the External Security Organization (ESO). As of late November 2007, the ESO provided traces on those individuals (see TD-314/77022/07 for further details).

- COOPERATION WITH SYRIA: Post assesses that Libyan-Syrian cooperation has been robust and productive. The ESO maintains active channels of communication with its sister organizations in the Syrian Arab Republic concerning efforts to stop Syrian citizens from traveling to Iraq to conduct terrorist operations and to stop the transit of foreign fighters through Syria. See TD-314/69907-07 and TD-314/68798-07 for ESO Director Musa Kusa's assessment of Syria's efforts. Syrian Military Intelligence (SMI) transferred 27 Libyan foreign fighters to the custody of the Government of Libya (GOL) in late December 2007 (see TD-314/82371-07 for further details). Information provided by ESO in liaison channels suggests that over 100 Libyan foreign fighters have been transferred from Syria to the custody of the GOL in the past two years.

- DOMESTIC ACTION TO STEM FOREIGN FIGHTER FLOWS: Libyan officials have expressed willingness to take greater domestic action and to cooperate in regional and multi-lateral efforts to prevent Libyan citizens from traveling to Iraq to engage in terrorist operations. Post's assessment is that the GOL has calculated that returning extremists pose a potentially serious threat to the regime's stability, and that efforts to stem the flow of Libyan foreign fighters to Iraq are in its strategic best interest. See TD-314/034705-08 for details on ESO's detention of all known Libyan Iraq veterans that returned to Libya in 2004 and 2005. The ESO's leadership has focused on counter-ideological measures, cooperation with neighboring states in the Sahara and Sahel region, and development of more stringent measures to sceen and track young men traveling to/from Libya. (See TD-314/69655-07 for details on combating extremist ideology; see TRIPOLI 120 and TRIPOLI 430 for analysis of factors enabling recruitment of eastern Libyans as foreign fighters; see TD-314/019998-08 and TD-314/019732-08 for details on ESO's cooperation with other North African states to combat foreign fighter flows; see TRIPOLI 248 for details on human and technical surveillance employed at airports by the Internal Security Organization (ISO) and ESO to prevent Libyans from traveling to Iraq and elsewhere to engage in terrorist operations.) Indicating that Libya intends to improve the safety of its travel documents, Libya's National Security Council requested from the Charge on May 7 a list of U.S. companies that produce passports and travel documents with advanced security features, which Post provided shortly thereafter. The GOL facilitated a port security training program under EXBS auspices in March 2008. A parallel training program for airport security (fraudulent document detection and passenger screening techniques) is scheduled for July 2008, and a follow-on training program for land border crossing points is expected to take place in fall 2008. Post's assessment is that the flow of foreign fighters from Libya to Iraq and the reverse flow of veterans to Libya has diminished due to new procedures adopted by the GOL (see TD-314/027806-08 for further details).

SUBJECT: NEGOTIATIONS OVER MIL-MIL MOU CONTINUE

REF: A) JACUBEC-CARNAHAN EMAIL 06/17/2008, B) TRIPOLI 481 , C) TRIPOLI 478 (NOTAL)

CLASSIFIED BY: Chris Stevens, CDA, U.S. Embassy Tripoli, Dept of State.
REASON: 1.4 (b), (d)

¶1. (C) Summary: After two days of negotiations to attempt to finalize language for a military-to-military memorandum of understanding (MOU), the U.S. and Libyan teams identified four areas of disagreement requiring further consultations with their respective capitals: 1) whether language referring to Libya's decision to abandon WMD could be modified; 2) whether language referring to Libya's decision to abandon state-sponsorship of terrorism could be deleted; 3) whether language providing security assurances to Libya could be amended or deleted, and; 4) whether there is flexibility with respect to including language that provides for reciprocal visits to weapons research language that provides for reciprocal visits to weapons research & development facilities. The Libyan team, possibly reflecting direct guidance from Muammar al-Qadhafi, made it clear that unless security assurances are included, it could recommend postponing the signing of an MOU altogether until outstanding bilateral "political issues" - believed to be a reference to ongoing government-to-government negotiations for a comprehensive settlement of outstanding terrorism-related claims against Libya - are resolved. End summary.

¶2. (C) Representatives from several U.S. Department of Defense offices (Office of the Secretary of Defense, the Office of General Counsel and the Joint Staff) traveled to Libya to meet with officials of the Government of Libya (GOL) on June 22-23 to attempt to finalize language (ref A) for a military-to-military (mil-mil) memorandum of understanding (MOU).

U.S. Participants:

- Patricia Jacubec, Office of African Affairs, International Security Affairs, Office of the Secretary of Defense
- Linda Lourie, Office of General Counsel, U.S. Department of Defense
- Lt. Colonel Paul Estavillo, Joint Staff Strategic Plans and Policy Directorate, U.S. Department of Defense
- Lt. Colonel Kyle Carnahan, Defense Attache, U.S. Embassy - Tripoli
- John Godfrey, Political and Economic Chief, U.S. Embassy - Tripoli
- Mabruk Bin Said, Interpreter

GOL Participants:

- General Ahmed al-Zwayy, Director of the Bureau of Technical Cooperation & the National Committee, Interim People's Committee for Defense
- Colonel Mukhtar Osman, Chief of Staff for General al-Zwayy
- Muhammad al-Suala, Legal Advisor, People's Interim Committee for Defense

U.S.: MOU USEFUL VEHICLE TO EXPAND MIL-MIL COOPERATION

¶3. (C) The U.S. team, led in its presentation by Jacubec, stressed that, from its perspective, the two sides were close to finalizing language for a mil-mil MOU, which it understood the Libyan Interim People's Committee for Defense (MOD) had stipulated as a requirement for expanded mil-mil engagement. The MOU would not be a formal treaty or agreement, but rather an MOU between the U.S. DOD and the Libyan MOD to expand bilateral military cooperation in areas of mutual interest. Jacubec also asked for the GOL's views on when, where and by whom the mil-mil MOU could be signed.

¶4. (C) The U.S. team then commented on specific points on which the two sides differed. The U.S. team indicated that the reference to Libya's decision to renounce terrorism as a political adjunct had been included since abandoning weapons of mass destruction programs and state-sponsored terrorism were the commitments that had facilitated the lifting of sanctions against Libya. On security assurances, the U.S. recognized that this was an important issue for the GOL; however, an informal MOU of the type envisioned was not an appropriate vehicle in which to articulate a commitment to guarantee Libya's sovereignty and security. The U.S. was interested in the possibility of discussing such issues in greater substance with the GOL, but the team was not in a position to address those issues in the context of an MOU. On assistance to development centers, the U.S. requested clarification as to the type of development centers the MOD wished to visit.

GOL: NO REFERENCE TO TERRORISM; SECURITY ASSURANCES "ESSENTIAL"

¶5. (C) General al-Zwayy offered a strong introductory statement.

(Note: al-Zwayy then left to attend other duties; the balance of the negotiations were conducted by Osman and al-Suala. End note.) Stressing his personal involvement in negotiations under the U.S.-U.K.-Libya Tri-lateral Steering and Coordination

TRIPOLI 00000505 002 OF 003

Committee (TSCC) that led to Libya's decision to abandon WMD, al-Zwayy said the GOL "rejected" including any reference in the preamble to Libya's decision to abandon state-sponsorship of terrorism. In addition, language referring to abandonment of WMD aspirations should be amended to read " ... [recognizing Libya's decision to] renounce voluntarily programs THAT COULD HAVE led to the production of weapons of mass destruction ... " to emphasize that Libya had not/not actually attained WMD.

¶6. (C) On security assurances, al-Zwayy adopted an even harder line. Reiterating arguments we've heard before, he complained that the U.S. had "given gifts" to Iran and North Korea in an attempt to persuade them to abandon their WMD programs. The U.S. had promised in the course of TSCC negotiations that it would help Libya acquire missiles and other conventional weapons to replace SCUD-C's and other weapons Libya surrendered; those promises had not, from the GOL's perspective, been met. The U.S. had persuaded Libya to abandon its WMD programs, which it had done voluntarily, and therefore "owed" Libya security assurances. The mil-mil MOU was, from the GOL's perspective, of a piece with earlier negotiations under the TSCC rubric; including in the MOU security assurances envisaged in the TSCC negotiations was therefore natural. Claiming that the General People's Committee for Foreign Liaison and International Cooperation (MFA-equivalent) had insisted on including language providing security assurances, al-Zwayy dismissed the distinction by the U.S. team between an MOU and a political agreement as a "meaningless bureaucratic reason". Characterizing the U.S. as "a great country" and stressing positive bilateral commercial ties, particularly in the oil and gas sector, al-Zwayy suggested that the U.S. was being petty by not offering assurances to Libya on "sensitive issues" such as security and defense.

¶7. (C) Continuing, al-Zwayy said a mil-mil MOU would be "meaningless" unless it contained security assurances. If/if the U.S. was not willing to offer such security assurances, the Libyan military "could" recommend postponing the signing of a mil-mil MOU altogether until "political issues were resolved" and the MOU was "complete", i.e., included security assurances. (Note: al-Zwayy's reference to "political issues" was believed to be a reference to ongoing government-to-government negotiations regarding a comprehensive settlement of outstanding terrorism-related claims against Libya in U.S. courts. End note.) Legal Advisor al-Suala echoed al-Zwayy, stressing that security assurances were "essential" to the spirit of the MOU and did not/not exceed the scope of the MOU from the GOL's perspective. Al-Zwayy and al-Suala rejected Jacubec's characterization of the MOU as a non-binding document that only encompassed a desire to cooperate in mutually-agreed areas.

LIBYA WANTS ACCESS TO U.S. WEAPONS R&D FACILITIES

¶8. (C) After considerable discussion concerning section two ("Areas of Cooperation") - assistance to and the exchange of visits between development centers - Osman and al-Suala clarified that, from the GOL's perspective, such language would encompass visits by Libyan military officers and scientists to U.S. weapons research and development (R&D) facilities, and reciprocal visits to Libyan facilities by U.S. officials. Carnahan explained that in the U.S., unlike in Europe, private companies perform a majority of weapons-related R&D. The USG could not instruct private U.S. companies to facilitate visits by foreign governments; however, the U.S. could agree to help facilitate such visits, as it had for a recent visit by Libyan military officers to an American Motors Corporation facility at which military vehicles the GOL wishes to purchase are manufactured. Jacubec suggested that guaranteed visits to U.S. weapons R&D facilities would, from the U.S. perspective, necessitate a separate MOU with U.S. DOD elements responsible for weapons R&D; however, with concurrence from Washington, the U.S. could/could agree to reference interest in finalizing such an agreement in the mil-mil MOU. Claiming that the Libyan side had stressed its interest in R&D in all previous discussions with the U.S. on mil-mil cooperation, al-Suala and Osman stressed that the issue was "critical and essential" from the GOL's perspective, and pushed hard to amend the language to explicitly refer to reciprocal visits to weapons R&D facilities.

¶9. (C) The Libyan side offered no details on when, where and by whom the mil-mil MOU could be signed. At the conclusion of the negotiating sessions, the two teams agreed that further consultations with their respective capitals were needed to clarify positions on the following issues:

- Whether language in para three of the preamble referring to Libya's decision to abandon WMD programs could be amended to refer to a decision by Libya to " ... renounce voluntarily programs THAT COULD HAVE led to the production of weapons of mass destruction ... " to emphasize that Libya had not/not actually attained WMD (U.S. action);

- Whether the reference in para three of the preamble to Libya's decision to abandon state-sponsorship of terrorism could be deleted (U.S. action);

- Whether references in para three of the preamble affirming the commitment of the U.S. to ensure Libya's security and independence could be amended or deleted (U.S. and Libyan action);

- Whether there is flexibility with respect to including language that provides for reciprocal visits to weapons R&D facilities (U.S. and Libyan action)

¶10. (C) Comment: Al-Zwayy's inflexible stance on security assurances and removal of references to state-sponsorship of terrorism may have been approved at the highest levels of the regime. As reported ref B, we learned after recent discussions concerning the disposition of Libya's C-130 fleet that Muammar al-Qadhafi personally briefed the Libyan team before they met with their U.S. interlocutors and provided specific guidance on export license guarantees. It appears likely that al-Zwayy's warning that the Libyan side could postpone signing a mil-mil MOU until "political issues" had been resolved that would facilitate (from the GOL's perspective) including security assurances reflected his understanding of al-Qadhafi's marching orders. The position conveyed by al-Zwayy is consistent with a parallel message recently delivered by another senior regime official to the effect that political and military issues were, from the GOL's perspective, intricately intertwined and could not be addressed as discrete issues (ref C). Despite our efforts to delineate between an MOU to facilitate routine cooperation and a high-level political-military agreement that could incorporate security assurances, the regime appears to have calculated that the U.S. would be willing to consider including security assurances if/if a comprehensive settlement of outstanding terrorism-related claims is achieved. End comment.

¶11. (U) The DOD team did not have an opportunity to clear on this cable.

SUBJECT: FATHI EL-JAHMI'S SON ASKS EMBASSY TO STOP VISITING HIM

REF: A) TRIPOLI 401 , B) TRIPOLI 411 , C) TRIPOLI 478 (NOTAL)

CLASSIFIED BY: Chris Stevens, CDA, U.S. Embassy - Tripoli, Dept of State.
REASON: 1.4 (b), (d)
¶1. (C) Post received on June 23 a letter addressed to P/E Chief, which had been sent via Libya's domestic postal service. The handwritten letter (text below), dated May 22, was signed by Muhammad el-Jahmi, the eldest son of detained human rights activist Fathi el-Jahmi.

Begin text of letter:

Dear (P/E Chief):

If your visit is motivated by concern and care for the condition of our father, Mr. Fathi el-Jahmi, we believe we are more concerned and care more for him than you. If your visits to him are merely to check on him and the status of his health, we members of his family visit him continuously and can inform you that he is in good health. I wish to inform you that your frequent visits to him in the hospital are causing us problems; I urge you stop visiting our father.

On behalf of Fathi el-Jahmi's family,

Muhammad el-Jahmi

End text of letter

¶2. (C) As reported ref A, P/E Chief attempted to visit Fathi el-Jahmi on May 14 to check on his welfare and whereabouts. P/E Chief encountered three members of el-Jahmi's family - son Muhammad and daughters Lamia and Hana. Muhammad el-Jahmi, clearly unhappy that an Emboff was present outside his father's room at the Tripoli Medical Center, declined to speak with P/E Chief. In a brief conversation, Lamia el-Jahmi told P/E Chief that the el-Jahmi family, and Muhammad in particular as the eldest son, were under "tremendous pressure" from officials of the Government of Libya (GOL) and the Qadhafi Development Foundation (QDF). The family believed contact with Emboffs was "very dangerous" for them and for Fathi el-Jahmi. The family's visit on May 14 had required several weeks to orchestrate. Muhammad had been particularly anxious to avoid giving the appearance that the family had coordinated its visits with the Embassy - something GOL and QDF officials had warned him against doing - and the coincidental visit by P/E Chief upset him greatly. Lamia confirmed that the family had received threats.

¶3. (C) Comment: Although Muhammad el-Jahmi made it clear on May 14 that he was unhappy that P/E Chief's attempted visit coincided with that of the family, it is not clear whether the letter above was written under duress. The letter refers to "continuous" visits by the family to Fathi el-Jahmi; however, before May 14, the family had been unable to visit el-Jahmi since April 3 and had in fact indirectly requested Post's assistance in facilitating a visit. Qadhafi Development Foundation Executive Director Dr. Yusuf Sawani and senior regime figure Abdullah Sanussi used identical phraseology - " ... frequent visits ... " in complaining to Post that P/E Chief had visited el-Jahmi too often, warning that continued efforts to do so would have consequences for the broader bilateral U.S.-Libya relationship (refs B, C). Post suggests that NEA/MAG and/or DRL reach out to Fathi el-Jahmi's Boston-based brother, also named Muhammad el-Jahmi, to confirm whether son Muhammad was pressured to write the letter in an attempt by the GOL and QDF to forestall further visits. End comment.

¶1.   (C) In a meeting with MFA Secretary for the Americas Dr.
Ahmed Fituri on July 1, the CDA asked whether Fituri had pursued discussions with key GOL elements about the possibility of facilitating the release of detained human rights activist Fathi el-Jahmi.  In an earlier meeting, Fituri had said he would suggest that National Security Adviser Dr. Muatassim al-Qadhafi (one of the Libyan leader's sons) endorse a plan to release el-Jahmi and subsidize his travel outside Libya for needed medical treatment as a humanitarian gesture.

¶2. (S/NF) Fituri said he had broached the idea with Muatassim, who agreed with the logic of releasing el-Jahmi and agreed to take it up with other elements of the GOL's leadership. Muatassim later told Fituri that senior regime figure Abdullah Sanussi had been "very tough" in his response to the suggestion. (Note: Sanussi summoned GRPO Chief to an unscheduled meeting on June 7 in which he conveyed messages on el-Jahmi and other issues (ref A). Sanussi was until 2007 the director of Libya's military intelligence organization (DMI). He continues to play a significant role as an adviser to Saif al-Islam al-Qadhafi, another son of the Leader. End note.)

¶3. (S/NF) According to Fituri, Sanussi told Muatassim that Leader Muammar al-Qadhafi was personally following el-Jahmi's case and was upset that the U.S. kept raising it. (Note: The Leader reportedly took great offense at el-Jahmi's public criticism of him and his stewardship of the country. El-Jahmi's much-publicized remarks led to his arrest and detention. End note.) Fituri said he would broach the issue with Muatassim again to see if there was any possibility that the idea of releasing el-Jahmi could be revisited.

¶4. (S/NF) Comment: Muatassim's reported comments suggest that the message Sanussi delivered in early June was authored by al-Qadhafi himself. Persuading the GOL to release el-Jahmi will therefore probably entail persuading Leader Muammar al-Qadhafi himself that it is in Libya's interest to do so. End comment.

¶1. (C) Summary: The CDA met with the MFA Director of UN Security Council affairs on June 30 to press for Libyan support for improvements to the UNSCR 1267 sanctions regime, call for increased Libyan diligence with respect to the Islamic Republic of Iran Shipping Lines (IRISL), and reiterate strong U.S. support for Kosovo's independence. End summary.

1267 SANCTIONS PROCESS

¶2. (C) The CDA briefed MFA Director of UNSC affairs Tajouri al-Shiradi June 30 on U.S. support for a follow-on resolution to UNSCR 1735 designed to extend and improve the mandate of the 1267 sanctions regime against Al-Qaida and the Taliban, and urged Libya to publicly support the resolution (refs A and B). Al-Shiradi expressed satisfaction that the U.S. shared Libya's commitment to a "fair" 1267 sanctions procedure; however, he questioned the utility of releasing any information to the public regarding the basis for listing or de-listing entities. Governments, not/not the public, are best positioned to decide whether an individual or entity deserves to be sanctioned by the 1267 committee, he said.

IRISIL AND UNSCR 1803

¶3. (C) CDA raised U.S. concerns about recent attempts by the Islamic Republic of Iran Shipping Lines (IRISL) to avoid inspection and interdiction as envisioned by UNSCRs 1737, 1747, and 1803 (ref C). While al-Shiradi was unable to speak to concerns over IRISL directly, he said that Libya, a non-permanent UNSC member that joined with the U.S. to pass UNSCR 1803, was well aware of its international obligations. He said the GOL had recently circulated detailed information about its obligations under UNSCR 1803 to potentially effected Libyan entities, including shipping companies, maritime authorities, and banks.

KOSOVO

¶4. (C) CDA reiterated strong U.S. support for Kosovo's independence and repeated calls for Libya to recognize Kosovo's independence and consider participating in a July 11 donors' conference (ref D). Al-Shiradi said that Kosovo remains an issue of great importance to Russia and that there has been no change in Libya's position (which is not/not to recognize Kosovo's independence). As a result, participation in the donors' conference was not currently under consideration.

¶1. (C) Summary: In two recent cases, Government of Libya (GOL) officials have essentially blackmailed foreign embassies to issue visas to well-connected but unqualified Libyan visa applicants in exchange for routine diplomatic services. The experiences likely presage challenges Post will face as it expands the scope of its visa processing services in Tripoli. End summary.

¶2. (C) On June 29, Greek DHM Ioannis Stamatekos told Poloff that the GOL officially informed Greek Embassy officials in Tripoli in a meeting at the MFA that they would not/not clear a shipment of diplomatic goods through Libyan customs unless Greece reversed its position on 12 visa cases of interest to the Libyan authorities. The shipment contains alcoholic beverages from a private Danish duty-free supplier to the Greek Embassy. (Note: The supplier, Peter-Justessen, is the sole company authorized by the GOL to ship alcohol to foreign diplomatic missions in Libya. End note.) According to Stamatekos, the Libyans blocked the shipment after the Greek Consul in Tripoli denied tourist visa applications for 12 "well-connected Libyans". He noted the visa applicants did not actually intend to travel to Greece, but wanted to obtain a Schengen visa from the Greek Embassy since Greece has not yet incorporated biometric requirements into its visa application procedure.

¶3. (C) On June 30, Swiss Ambassador Daniel von Muralt told CDA that the Libyan authorities recently informed the Swiss Embassy that the Libyan Ministry of the Interior (equivalent) would not/not register the newly-arrived Swiss deputy chief of mission's vehicle and would not/not provide the vehicle with license plates unless Switzerland reversed its recent decision to deny a tourist visa to a well-connected Libyan. The Ambassador did not say how Switzerland reacted to the threat.

¶4. (C) Comment: The willingness of the GOL to extort other diplomatic missions to issue visas to prominent but unqualified Libyans reflects the extent to which politically-connected individuals are able to manipulate public institutions for their own benefit. In an opaque regime in which lines of authority are deliberately blurred to obscure power structures and mitigate accountability, corruption is pervasive. As Post moves to expand the scope of its visa processing services in Tripoli, we will likely face similar challenges. End comment.

The Great Socialist People's Libyan Arab Jamahiriya
The General People's Committee
For Foreign Liaison and International Cooperation

Note Verbale

The General People's Committee Secretariat for Foreign Liaison and International Cooperation (Americas Desk) sends its compliments to the U.S. Embassy in the Great Jamahiriya and further to the Embassy's dipnote #08/502 dated June 18, 2008 related to the ARB proceedings intending to review the cases of two Libyan nationals, Omar Khalifa Abu Bakr Al-Mahjoub and Abu Faraj Allibi, in the Guantanamo Bay detention camp and wishes to inform the esteemed Embasy of the following.

- The investigation, indictment, and court proceedings of these nationals will be carried out vigorously in accordance with Libyan criminal law.
- If the individual is not indicted, cannot be indicted due to a lack of criminal evidence, or is acquitted, he will remain subject to the law. Any criminal act, even if not of a terrorist nature, will expose its perpetrator to the full force of criminal proceedings, as is the case for all Libyan citizens. We cannot tolerate such acts under the law.
- Law enforcement officers in our security services, as well as judges and the general prosecutors' office in the judicial system, have the authority and qualifications to carry out their tasks in terms of monitoring, detecting, collecting evidence, investigating, and ensuring a fair trial, in addition to implementing sentences.
- Legislation in our country related to prisons guarantees that a person serving a prison sentence has clear and straightforward rights. Prisoners are rehabilitated according to their capacities and qualifications. We have people [in prison] who are carrying on their studies in high school and university.
- Regarding the [detainees'] relatives, there is no doubt that they wish to meet them [the detainees] and even to see them released. We think that they [the relatives] have nothing to offer the detainees except their moral support.

The General People's Committee Secretariat for Foreign Liaison and International Cooperation (Americas Desk) avails itself of this opportunity to renew to the esteemed U.S. Embassy the assurances of its highest considerations.

SUBJECT: LIBYA'S BERBER MINORITY STILL OUT IN THE COLD

CLASSIFIED BY: Chris Stevens, CDA, AmEmbassy Tripoli, State.
REASON: 1.4 (b), (d)

¶1. (C) Summary: Despite some evidence in 2007 of a thaw in Libya's decades-long marginalization of its Berber minority, the Government of Libya (GOL) has recently renewed its vigorous denials that any ethno-linguistically distinct Berber communities exist on Libyan territory. In May, Libyan leader Muammar Qadhafi made an unprecedented visit to the Berber heartland to praise the "Arab belonging and destiny" of the Libyan people, and to decry "foreign intelligence plots" to fracture Libyans along ethnic or sectarian lines. Post's efforts to visit areas with significant Berber populations and to meet with government officials to discuss Libya's Berber heritage have met with angry GOL denials and accusations of "unacceptable interference" in Libya's domestic affairs. The GOL took the unusual step of forbidding all Embassy personnel from visiting the town of Zuwara, a large Berber community. The GOL's hard line on Libya's Berber minority underscores that sectarian and ethnic identity remains a sensitive issue for sectarian and ethnic identity remains a sensitive issue for influential elements of the regime. End summary.

DESPITE MELLOWING, OFFICIAL DENIAL THAT LIBYA IS ANYTHING BUT HOMOGENEOUS PERSIST

¶2. (C) In 2007, the GOL showed some evidence of mellowing its long-standing denials that any Berber community exists on Libyan territory. (Note: Post and other international observers estimate that 25,000 to 150,000 ethnic Berbers live in Libya. End note.) The GOL for the first time granted permission to the Amazigh (or Berber) World Congress to host a large gathering in Tripoli in August 2007. PM Baghdadi al-Mahmoudi and Saif al-Islam Qadhafi, Qadhafi's second oldest son and president of the Qadhafi Development Foundation, made high-profile visits in August and September 2007 to the predominantly Berber communities around Zuwara, Nalut, and Kabao to announce major infrastructure investments designed to revitalize Libya's historic Berber heartland.

¶3. (C) In May 2008, Libyan leader Muammar Qadhafi himself made an unprecedented visit to meet with a number of obstensibly Berber tribes in Jadu; however, in contrast to Saif al-Islam's travels, Qadhafi used his May 17 visit to vigorously deny Libya's Berber history. According to accounts in state-owned media, representatives of prominent Berber communities, including the Berber centers of Nalut and Kabao, issued a statement on the occasion of Qadhafi's visit praising the "Arab belonging and destiny" of all Libyans and rejecting "claims propagated by the envious agents of the West and its intelligence bodies to divide~ [Libya] under false ethnic, sectarian, and tribal slogans". A contact of the Embassy whose family hails from the Jadu area said that Qadhafi had privately warned the leaders of the community that, "You can call yourselves whatever you want inside your homes -- Berbers, Children of Satan, whatever -- but you are only Libyans when you leave your homes."

POST'S OUTREACH ON BERBER ISSUES DEEMED "UNACCEPTABLE INTERFERENCE" IN INTERNAL AFFAIRS

¶4. (C) In March, Post informed the GOL that an Emboff planned to travel to Zuwara (the unofficial capital of Libya's Berber community located approximately 100 km west of Tripoli) to meet with local officials to discuss Libya's Berber heritage. On April 1, MFA Americas Desk Officer Muhammad Ayad convoked A/DCM and Poloff to deny the existence of any Berber community in Libya and to accuse Post of "unacceptable interference" in Libya's domestic affairs. All Libyans are Arabs who migrated to Libya from the Arabian Peninsula approximately 1,000 years ago, he explained, adding that no Libyans speak any language other than Arabic. Responding to a comment by A/DCM, he angrily insisted that the Berber language was "merely a dialect or accent" of Arabic, likening it to the difference between Maghrebi and Shami dialects of Arabic. Sharply criticizing Emboffs for "misunderstanding" Libya, Ayab cautioned Post "not to try to find obstacles" to better bilateral U.S.-Libya relations by intefering in purely local matters. He added that "this issue (the Berbers) is too sensitive for us (Libya) to discuss".

¶5. (C) Ayab also passed a diplomatic note articulating the GOL's objections (para 7); he called the next day to recall the first iteration of the note and pass a more sharply worded version (para 8) that denied permission for Emboffs to visit Zuwara and threatened that the GOL could not/not guarantee mission personnel's safety if they insisted on making the trip. The ostensible concern was that members of the Berber community would be angered by the implication that they were members of a minority group, an implication that the dipnote likened to depriving them of their citizenship, and could assault Emboffs. (Note: Emboffs have previously visited the Jebel Nafusa area and Zuwara, where members of the Berber minority take great pride in their distinctive ethno-linguistic heritage and take pains to tell visitors that they are not/not Arab, prefer not to speak Arabic and do not inter-marry with Arabs. Zuwara is widely known for reverse discrimination: Berber inhabitants, who constitute the majority of the town's population, insist on speaking only the Berber language, even with members of the town's Arabic minority. End note.)

Following the Zuwara visit request, the Emboff identified in Post's notification of the planned travel and his spouse faced heightened surveillance and harassment. A senior Libyan official told CDA in early April that the proposed visit raised concerns within the security services about Post's efforts to report on political developments in Libya in general, and about Emboff's outreach to Libyans in particular.

¶6. (C) Comment: MFA officials and locally engaged staff who have seen the diplomatic notes are convinced that only a very senior regime figure, possibly Muammar al-Qadhafi himself, could have authored such sharply worded language in official correspondence. Whether al-Qadhafi actually authored the replies or not, the official rhetoric that attended his visit to Berber country, together with his remarks in Jadu, highlight the fact that for him and other senior elements of the GOL, anything suggesting that Libya's population is not ethnically and religiously homogeneous (there are also significant numbers of Tuareg in the southwest) is extremely sensitive. End comment.

Ref: 2008/515

The General People's Committee Secretariat for Foreign Liaison and International Cooperation sends its compliments to the US Embassy in the Great Jamahiriya, and further to the Embassy's dip note # 08/262 dated March 26, 2008, it wishes to inform of the following:

- In Great Jamahiriya, there is nothing called Berber community, and the use of this term denotes lack of true knowledge of the history of the region in general and Libya in particular, and does not reflect the reality and nature of the homogeneous Libyan society.
- All Libyans come from Arab origins; they came from the Arab Peninsula by land (Barr) and that's why some tribes that had arrived earlier in Libya are called "Barbar" (or Berber).
- This is interference in internal affairs, and it is not acceptable, and this is rejected by Libyans who have sacrificed more than 750 thousand martyrs for the sake of their sovereignty.
- The demographic structure in Libya is a homogenous one that belongs to Arab origins; their language is Arabic (with all the meanings this word may have) and there is nothing what we might call "community".
- This visit is not permitted for the said person or any other one, and therefore, we shall have no responsibility whatsoever for a visit of this kind.

The General People's Committee Secretariat for Foreign Liaison and International Cooperation avails itself of this opportunity to renew to the esteemed US Embassy the assurances of its highest considerations.

Ref: 2008/515

The General People's Committee Secretariat for Foreign Liaison and International Cooperation sends its compliments to the US Embassy in the Great Jamahiriya, and further to the Embassy's dip note # 08/262 dated March 26, 2008, sent to General Protocol requesting the GPC's assistance in arranging a visit by the US Embassy Political Attachi Mr. Joshua Harris to Zuwara city on April 9th, 2009, and the purpose of the visit according to the dip note is to learn about the Libya's Berber community, and requesting arranging meetings with (The Secretary of the Basic People's Committee of Zuwara/ An appropriate local official that works with the city's Berber community/ Representatives of the Zuwara Berber community, including any involved in teaching the Berber language).

While the General People's Committee Secretariat for Foreign Liaison and International Cooperation find this request unusual, it expresses its protest, and requests the Embassy to clarify what is the Berber community that you wish to visit? And who asked you to do so? And is this area you want to visit is inside the United States or in Libya? And can we inspect the minorities living in America such as (the blacks, the Red Indians, and the Chicano~)?

Libyans refuse such interference in their internal affairs and sovereignty for the sake of which they sacrificed more than 750 thousand martyrs, and you know well how they sacrificed and are still doing so for the sake of their Arab homeland, their nationalism and religion.

You know well how many Libyan citizens went to fight in Afghanistan and Iraq to defend the fatherland and religion and to resist foreign interference.

Therefore, we shall not be responsible for any assaults that might happen to any American that tries to interfere in the internal affairs of the country whatever was his capacity or his purposes, and we do not find assaults unusual from any group that might be destitute of its citizenship and called "community or colony" within its own country.

This request is therefore very unusual. We rejected it, and we request a response and an explanation for it.

The General People's Committee Secretariat for Foreign Liaison and International Cooperation avails itself of this opportunity to renew to the esteemed US Embassy the assurances of its highest considerations.

SUBJECT: GOL SENDS MIXED SIGNALS ON WHETHER IT COULD CUT OIL PRODUCTION

TRIPOLI 00000532 001.2 OF 003

CLASSIFIED BY: Chris Stevens, CDA, U.S. Embassy - Tripoli, Dept of State.
REASON: 1.4 (b), (d)

¶1. (C) Summary: In a recent meeting, the head of Libya's National Oil Corporation (NOC) reiterated that Libya could/could cut oil production as a response to U.S. legislation facilitating attachment of Libyan assets and lawsuits against it; however, other GOL sources cautioned that his remarks were targeted primarily at the domestic Libyan audience. He said GOL leaders were "working hard" on issues related to resolving outstanding terrorism-related claims against Libya in U.S. courts and well understood the urgency of moving quickly to do so. Ghanem equivocated on whether a Development and Production Sharing (DePSA) bid round to foreign oil companies for re-working of existing fields would be necessary for Libya to produce 3 million barrels/day of oil by 2012, but made it clear that the NOC would not/not open a DePSA round unless and until it was broadly agreed among senior GOL officials that such a mechanism was politically palatable. Ghanem seemed eager to play a positive role in resolving the claims compensation issue; his remarks suggested that the GOL is using a model for contributions akin to that it ultimately adopted in the case of the Bulgarian medics. End summary.

¶2. (C) The CDA met with Dr. Shukri Ghanem, Chairman of Libya's National Oil Corporation (NOC), on July 3 to discuss energy sector developments and U.S.-Libya cooperation. Ghanem was accompanied by Dr. Abdullah Ballut, Libya's OPEC Governor; P/E Chief attended as notetaker. The CDA asked Ghanem to clarify his remarks at the Jeddah Energy Conference on June 22 to the effect that Libya may/may effect a unilateral cut in oil production in response to Section 1083 of the 2008 National Defense Authorization Act (the so-called "Lautenberg Amendment"), adopted in January 2008, and the No Oil Producing or Exporting Cartels Act of 2008 (the so-called "NOPEC" bill), which was passed by the House in May and is now before the Senate. Ghanem's remarks in Jeddah suggested that while Libya has increased its oil production in recent years, the threat of potential asset seizure (under the Lautenberg Amendment) and exposure to lawsuits for price manipulation (under NOPEC) may drive the GOL to cut production despite the cost to the country's ambitious economic development program.

GHANEM REITERATES CLAIM THAT LIBYA MAY CUT OIL PRODUCTION

¶3. (C) Known for his candor, Ghanem explained that he meant what he said: Libya may choose to cut production as a reaction to what it perceives to be unfair U.S. Congressional legislation. He lamented the "illogical" damages award in a U.S. federal court of $6 billion in the UTA bombing case. With more than 20 other terrorism-related claims compensation cases in litigation in U.S. courts, Libya's exposure to other "overly harsh" judgments - motivated in his judgment by an irrational desire to make Libya pay for perceived past misdeeds - was considerable. Focusing on the potential seizure of Libyan assets under the Lautenberg Amendment, to include oil production-related payments involving U.S. and European companies, Ghanem asked how Libya could reasonably be expected to increase production in a political-economic environment in which the attendant profits were at considerable risk of attachment.

¶4. (C) Asked by P/E Chief why he had chosen to threaten a production cut in June and not earlier in the year after adoption of the Lautenberg Amendment, Ghanem declined to give a direct answer. When pressed, he said only that his remarks were motivated by both the Lautenberg Amendment and the proposed NOPEC bill. (Note: Ghanem himself has staunchly defended OPEC during his tenure as NOC Chairman, arguing that current production levels are sufficient and that price speculation and global political tension, to include inflammatory comments by world leaders, are to blame for high oil prices. End note.) In a separate meeting on July 1, MFA Secretary for the Americas Dr. Ahmed Fituri characterized Ghanem's remarks in Jeddah as having been made for domestic Libyan consumption and advised the CDA not to attach too much meaning to them.

¶5. (C) Noting that he well understood the consequences of high oil prices for the U.S. economy, Ghanem reprised themes from his Jeddah remarks in explaining spikes in oil prices. U.S. Congressional legislation in the 1980's to enforce sanctions against Iran and Libya had limited needed investment in production and refining capacity, which involved long lead-times of 10-20 years. Absent such "reckless" legislation, he claimed

Iranian and Libyan production would have been some 6 million barrels/day and 4 million barrels/day at present. (Note: Libya currently produces some 1.7 million barrels/day. End note.) More recently, U.S. Energy Secretary Bodman had warned the CEO of Italian energy giant Eni against investing in Iran, which was unhelpful. U.S. foreign policy decisions - he lambasted "blind" U.S. support for Israel and the decision to invade Iraq - and the reluctance to allow offshore drilling and production along U.S. coasts were among the factors that had brought to an end the era of cheap, easy oil. The market was now entering a period of "peak oil" in which demand was high and surplus production capacity limited. The devaluation of the dollar, speculation by investors about future oil prices and political uncertainty exacerbated price volatility.

GOL FOCUSED ON RESOLVING U.S. CLAIMS ISSUES

¶6. (C) Noting that senior GOL officials were working "very hard" on a mechanism for comprehensive settlement of all outstanding terrorism-related court cases in U.S. venues, Ghanem stressed that the GOL well understood that time was of the essence. It was impossible to overstate, he said, the impact the court cases and compensation claims could have on Libya in terms of oil production and its bilateral relations with the U.S. Referencing the UTA decision and decrying the independence of the U.S. judiciary, he said it was "inconceivable" that "a judge in some small village (sic)" could issue damages awards against Libya for billions of dollars. On reports that some GOL elements opposed to reaching a comprehensive claims settlement agreement, Ghanem conceded that certain senior regime figures who felt Libya had not been adequately compensated for its decision to abandon its WMD aspirations and renounce terrorism had strongly opposed any direct GOL contribution to a claims compensation fund, especially when they learned that the USG would not contribute, either.

U.S. COMPANIES EXPECTED TO DO WELL IN FUTURE EPSA BID ROUNDS

¶7. (C) Commenting on recent extensions of production contracts with Eni, Petro-Canada and Occidental Petroleum under terms markedly more favorable for Libya, Ghanem said the NOC had been "transparent and efficient" in negotiating contracts under its Exploration and Production Sharing Agreement (EPSA) rubric. Libya had produced 3.7 million barrels/day in the early 1970's and would - all things political remaining relatively equal - hit 3 million barrels/day by 2012. Referencing the fact that they and many other senior GOL officials had studied in the U.S. during the 1970's at the high water mark of U.S.-Libya educational cooperation, Ghanem and Ballut stressed that they "had a soft spot" for American oil and gas companies, and expected U.S. companies to continue to fare well in securing EPSA contracts in Libya. Asked whether radical privatization and government restructuring proposed by Muammar al-Qadhafi in his March 2 address to the General People's Congress would impact the NOC's operations, Ghanem laughingly said he didn't have a crystal ball and had no way of knowing. "Al-Qadhafi keeps the crystal ball in his desk" and only he (al-Qadhafi) really knew whether the proposed changes would amount to much.

NO DePSA CONTRACTS ABSENT LIBYAN POLITICAL CONSENSUS

¶8. (C) Asked whether substantial investment in the redevelopment of existing fields through enhanced oil recovery operations under a Development and Production Sharing (DePSA) bid round to foreign oil companies would be a key to reaching 3 million barrels/day, Ghanem equivocated. When pressed, he referred to barrels/day, Ghanem equivocated. When pressed, he referred to Venezuela's negative experience in allocating DePSA contracts, when the Oil Minister was driven from office on related corruption charges. Libya had not yet developed a system for allocating DePSA contracts that provided sufficient political cover. Consequently, the NOC had adopted a dual approach: Libyan national oil companies were performing some DePSA work in the numerous smaller, scattered fields drilled since the 1960's while the NOC studied the two large fields - al-Haram and Entilat - in which foreign oil companies' expertise was clearly needed and developed a mechanism for obtaining political approval to give DePSA contracts to foreign companies. He conceded that the NOC had not yet determined how to resolve tension between international oil companies, who wanted production sharing arrangements rather than services contracts, and the GOL, which favored services contracts for DePSA work.

¶9. (C) Ghanem was adamant that he would not endorse allocation of DePSA contracts without a "national consensus" involving approval by the General People's Congress and senior regime elements. Explaining the political sensitivities involved, he said that do otherwise would expose him to accusations that the NOC had given oil to the U.S., which would give it to Israel, which had cut fuel shipments to the Palestinian Authority. In the context of domestic Libyan politics, DePSA contracts could expose him to charges that he had been party to a mechanism that effectively aided Israel and hurt the Palestinians, which was tantamount to political suicide.

¶10. (C) Comment: This was the Embassy's first meeting with Ghanem, who has been elusive, since 2006. He seemed eager to play a positive role in resolving the claims compensation issue, and demonstrated acute appreciation of the need to move quickly to do so. Ghanem's comments on DePSA work highlight how politically sensitive oil and gas issues are in the domestic Libyan political context, and suggest that the NOC is not likely to determine whether and how to open a DePSA bid round to foreign companies soon. End comment.

¶1. (C) Summary. The GOL is "bound by the AU decision" to support a South Africa-led national reconciliation process in Zimbabwe and will not support a draft UNSC resolution calling for targeted sanctions on key Mugabe regime figures. Libya's top officials responsible for African affairs urged more time for African mediation efforts in Zimbabwe and bluntly told the U.S. not/not to get involved in the crisis. The GOL remains equally frustrated with both Chad and Sudan and has conditioned any future mediation on both countries' leaders offering a "real commitment" to a political settlement. End Summary.

¶2. (U) MFA Secretary for African Union Affairs Ali Treiki met with CDA on July 7. Libya's former ambassador to Zimbabwe, Mahmoud al-Azzabi, and Poloff also attended.

ZIMBABWE

¶3. (C) Responding to ref A demarche points, Treiki voiced displeasure with politically-motivated violence in connection with the June 27 elections in Zimbabwe, but stressed that Libya is "bound by the AU decision" to support a national reconciliation process mediated by South Africa. Libya will not/not support a draft UNSC resolution that called for an arms embargo and targeted sanctions on key Mugabe regime figures (ref A). Treiki urged more time -- "days and weeks" -- to allow African countries to mediate and reiterated his long-standing opposition to sanctions, which he called "unhelpful." UNSC sanctions on regime figures would only harden the regime and complicate African efforts to promote a national reconciliation.

¶4. (C) Treiki refused to offer his personal views on the AU's position on Zimbabwe but said that Libya has tried to support South Africa's mediation efforts. Libyan leader Muammar Qadhafi held a private meeting with Mugabe on the margins of the AU summit in Sharm El Sheikh. In the run-up to the presidential election, Treiki dispatched al-Azzabi, a top aide and former Libyan ambassador to Harare, to monitor the situation. Treiki voiced concerns that South African president Thabo Mbeki has a strained relationship with the Zimbabwe opposition. He criticized opposition leader Morgan Tsvangirai as "uneducated" and complained about his frequent reversals on whether or not to stand in the presidential elections.

¶5. (C) Using uncharacteristically blunt language, Treiki cautioned the U.S. not/not to get involved in the current Zimbabwe crisis: "really, do not get directly involved." He criticized Tsvangirai for seeking refuge in the Dutch Embassy in Harare in response to safety concerns rather than in a neighboring African country, noting, disapprovingly, that the opposition leader is seen as very "pro-Western."

CHAD / SUDAN

¶6. (C) Treiki reported that Chadian President Idriss Deby and Sudanese President Omar al-Bashir asked Qadhafi on the margins of the AU summit in Sharm El Sheikh to continue Libya's efforts to mediate in the on-going Chad-Sudan crisis (refs B and C). Treiki expressed frustration that both leaders "do not respect their agreements" and conditioned Libya's future efforts to mediate on a real commitment from both sides. Treiki was pessimistic on the future of the Dakar Accord Contact Group, describing the July 17 meeting in Dakar as "more show than substance" and noting that mediation would not be successful without a commitment from Deby and Bashir to a political settlement.

¶7. (C) Treiki voiced satisfaction with U.S. support for UNSC sanctions on JEM-affiliated individuals, including JEM faction leader Khalil Ibrahim (ref D). (Note: While Libya has consistently opposed sanctions on African governments, it has pushed for "consequences" for rebel leaders who refuse to participate in peaceful negotiations. End note.) Treiki offered lukewarm support to new UN/AU joint mediator Djibril Bassole, raising concerns about Bassole's lack of experience compared with former UN S/E Jan Eliasson and AU S/E Salim Salim.

¶8. (C) Treiki reiterated previous calls for Deby to make real concessions to opposition groups as part of a domestic political reconciliation. "Deby wants the opposition to surrender, not negotiate," he said. Deby is "not serious" about dialogue and refuses to accept that he cannot govern Chad from a Zaghawa tribal base that represents only 6% of the population. Libya remains concerned that Deby is still arming JEM leader Khalil Ibrahim while Sudan continually supports Chadian opposition groups.

¶1.    (C)  Following up on rumors that Chevron had resigned itself

¶1. (C) Following up on rumors that Chevron had resigned itself to withdrawing from Libya in March 2010 after completion of its current exploration program, Econoff met with a local representative of the company on July 2 to discuss the company's future here. Chevron is currently conducting exploration of its lone Libyan concession - a parcel in the remote Marzuq Basin, located in the far southwest of the country - which it won in the March 2005 exploration and production sharing (EPSA) round. Chevron is one of six U.S. exploration and production (E&P) oil and gas companies active in Libya.

¶2. (C) Under the terms of its EPSA contract, Chevron is required to drill at least one well in its concession, which is considered to be a high-risk greenfield area (no exploration had previously been done there). Its program of seismic exploration and analysis has been completed; a subcontractor will begin drilling the first of two test wells in August. The wells will be drilled to further explore two sub-surface structures of interest, the only promising areas found following the collection and analysis of thousands of square kilometers worth of seismic data. Disappointing seismic results have generated a great deal of pessimism about the likelihood of a significant find. Given the parcel's remote of location, a very large discovery would be needed to make a field worth the cost of development and linkage to an existing pipeline network for export. Although Emboff's source demurred on the chances of success, other well-informed contacts in the oil and gas sector have characterized the prospects for the block as dim, estimating a 2-3% chance that sufficient reserves would be found upon drilling to make production commercially viable.

¶3. (C) Comment: While Chevron continues to assess new EPSA opportunities in Libya, the company has reportedly adopted a fairly conservative approach to bidding that would likely disadvantage the company's efforts to secure new acreage in future EPSA bidding rounds. Oil and gas contacts have noted Chevron's reluctance to adopt the prevailing "auction mentality" and accede to draconian EPSA terms, particularly low production shares, that the NOC is currently stipulating. Chevron's Houston headquarters is still hoping to obtain a "development resource opportunity" for acreage currently under production, likely under the rubric of a Development and Exploration Production Sharing Agreement (DePSA); however, recent remarks by NOC Chairman Shukri Ghanem (reftel) suggest that a DePSA round isn't likely to occur anytime soon. Barring a major find in Marzuq, which seems unlikely, or a significant shift in the company's bidding philosophy, it appears that Chevron's window of opportunity in Libya may well be closing. End comment.

REASON: 1.4 (b), (d)

¶1. (C) Summary: European Union (EU) governments remain concerned about the on-going detention cases of Idriss Boufayed, Jamal al-Hajj, and nine co-defendants following the group's June 10 conviction on charges related to their plans to stage a peaceful public demonstration in Tripoli (ref A). European missions are focused on securing humanitarian release for Boufayed, who is terminally ill with cancer, and obtaining consular access to al-Hajj, a Danish citizen; however, they do not/not intend to raise the cases of the other nine detainees. France, on behalf of the EU presidency, is keen to press the case through quiet diplomacy with the Qadhafi Development Foundation (QDF) and remains open to coordination with the U.S. End summary.

¶2. (C) French Ambassador Francois Gouyette chaired a meeting of EU ambassadors in Tripoli on June 17 to discuss a coordinated European response to the recent conviction and continued detention of Idriss Boufayed, Jamal al-Hajj, and nine other self-described regime critics. (Note: France represented the EU presidency in Libya on behalf of Slovenia, which does not have representation here, in the first half of 2008 and retains the presidency through the end of the year in its own right. End note.) The eleven individuals were convicted on June 10 of planning to foment a rebellion against the "people's authority system" and of meeting with an official from a foreign government; sentences ranged from 6 to 25 years imprisonment. Ambassador Gouyette had unsuccessfully approached MFA U/S for European Affairs Abdulati Obeidi about the case in early June. EU ambassadors agreed on June 17 that they would not/not raise the case again with the MFA. EU diplomats in Tripoli report that the Europeans have two principal interests in the case: 1) securing humanitarian parole for Idriss Boufayed, who is currently undergoing treatment for advanced lung cancer in Sabratha General Hospital (ref B and previous), and; 2) obtaining consular access to Jamal al-Hajj, who holds Danish citizenship. EU missions do not/not plan to raise the case of the nine other convicted individuals who remain in detention.

¶3. (C) The French and Swiss Ambassadors reportedly maintain an active dialogue with Abdulsalem Salah, Director of the QDF's Human Rights Committee and a key interlocutor on the Bulgarian medics case, on the Boufayed case. Swiss Ambassador Daniel von Muralt told the CDA on June 30 that he was "confident" Salah would be able to arrange Boufayed's release on humanitarian grounds; however, he conceded European diplomats had not/not approached Saleh concerning the other ten detainees (including Jamal al-Hajj). Saleh reportedly promised to facilitate a three-way meeting between von Muralt, the QDF, and Boufayed's attorney to discuss the case. Von Muralt said he plans to use the meeting with Boufayed's lawyer to ask Boufayed if he wants Switzerland to push the QDF to allow him to seek medical care abroad. Both the French and Swiss Embassies in Tripoli say they are open to coordination with the U.S. on any future approach to the Libyans on the Boufayed case.

¶4. (C) While EU Ambassadors plan to continue lobbying for Boufayed's release through the QDF, the French Ambassador intends to push for consular access to Jamal al-Hajj through the MFA Department of Consular Affairs. French diplomats have noted that repeated requests for consular access by Denmark have been denied; however, they remain optimistic that a recent personnel change in the MFA's consular office might prompt a reversal. Danish Honorary-Consul George Wallen told us his efforts to secure consular access, most recenlty in mid-June, had been flatly rejected by the GOL, which in its latest meeting with him justified its unwillingness to facilitate access to al-Hajj case to the re-publication in February 2008 of cartoons in Danish print media depicting the Prophet Muhammad. French Poloff Pierre-Antoine Molina privately conceded that the legal case behind the EU's request for consular access was weak since al-Hajj also has Libyan citizenship - France would not/not provide consular access to a dual Libyan-French national in a reciprocal situation.

¶5. (C) Comment: Post does not share the Europeans' optimism that the QDF will be able to facilitate the quick release of the ailing Idriss Boufayed, or that the MFA's consular office will ultimately provide access to Jamal al-Hajj; however, there are few viable alternatives to the EU's quiet diplomatic overtures. The QDF's involvement in the case has so far been limited to facilitating Idriss Boufayed's "release" from prison to a hospital for medical care on humanitarian grounds; however, in a striking parallel with the ongoing detention of human rights activist Fathi el-Jahmi (ref C and previous), opposition websites report that Boufayed remains under heavy guard at the Sabratha Hospital. While he has received family visits, he is not able to leave the hospital. By contrast with the el-Jahmi case, in which European missions have expressed little interest, the EU's focus on the Boufayed case is high. European missions have historically avoided engaging with the GOL on human rights issues - their willingess to pursue a collective approach in the Boufayed case is a potentially hopeful sign. Post will continue to closely follow the EU's efforts on the Boufayed case; it is not clear that more direct U.S. engagement on this case would be helpful at this time. End comment.

'VIRTUAL WATER'

REF: TRIPOLI 438, STATE 39410

¶1.  (U)  On July 7th, the Political/Economic Assistants met with the Resident Representative of the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (FAO), Dr. Saad Elmedani Ahmed.  According to Dr. Ahmed, the Libyan government (GOL) has generally taken prudent steps to protect Libyans from the worldwide foodstuffs shortages by continuing subsidization of essential staples while reducing fees and taxes on the import and distribution of food supplies in general.

¶2.  (U)  According to Dr. Ahmed, the General People's Committee for Economy, Trade and Investment has recently taken steps to mitigate the effects of worldwide increases in food prices by boosting the purchasing power of ordinary citizens.  These include: production, consumption, and import service tax exemptions for basic commodities; production tax exemptions for locally-produced products used in the production of other goods; production and consumption tax exemptions of production and operation tools; a 75% fee reduction for laboratory analysis of operation tools; a 75% fee reduction for laboratory analysis of imported goods; a 50% reduction of fees for handling, storage and port processing of imported produce; and the establishment of a fund to achieve an equilibrium between prices and the average citizens' incomes to maintain their purchasing power and protect Libya's consumer economy from international prices fluctuations.

¶3. (U) Dr. Ahmed also mentioned Libyan efforts to use "virtual water" as a solution to its agricultural problems. He described "virtual water" as a mechanism by which water-poor states can achieve water and food security by purchasing water-intensive agricultural commodities from water-rich states that produce a natural surplus of these products. Libya is developing partnerships with countries like Mali and Sudan in the field of virtual water trade; Libya invests in irrigated agriculture in those countries in exchange for the right to purchase all of the crops produced in those areas in which Libya has invested. The produce is then bought by the GOL at a below-market price, offsetting the initial investment costs. According to Dr. Ahmed, the scheme benefits both countries: Libya gets water-rich, high-quality agricultural products for its market and Sudan and Mali are able to provide employment and a steady export market to more farmers.

REASON: 1.4 (b), (d)

¶1. (C) Summary: The long-awaited ratification of Oxy's contract extension in Libya has solidified its position as one of Libya's leading oil and gas players. The process by which the contract was finalized has shed light on what lies ahead for other foreign companies, all of whom are expected to be approached soon to sign similar deals. The extensions contain considerable benefits, including higher profits, anti-corruption measures and less state company obstructionism; however, they contain lower production shares and reduced bookable reserve levels, and mandate a heavy reliance on the thinly-stretched National Oil Corporation. Given projections for steadily rising global energy costs, it remains to be seen how long the new contracts will remain in place without amendment. End Summary.

¶2. (C) Following the well-publicized announcement of Occidental Petroleum's (Oxy) extension in Libya (Ref A), post's Econoff and Econ/Commercial Assistant sat down with John Winterman (protect), Oxy's Country Manager for Libya, to discuss the negotiation process and contract terms, and assess the playing field for other international oil companies (IOCs) active in Libya. Winterman's experience in his current position and former tenure as Oxy's Worldwide Exploration Manager for 7 years makes him one of the most knowledgeable observers of Libya's energy sector.

DONE DEAL - AT LAST

¶3. (C) Winterman confirmed the general contract terms outlined in press reports. Oxy and its partner OMV (Austria) signed a total of five Exploration and Production Sharing (EPSA) contracts with Libya's National Oil Corporation (NOC) on June ¶23. The contracts were based on terms of a "Heads of Agreement" memoranda signed between Oxy's Chairman and NOC Chairman Shukri Ghanem on November 24, 2007 (ref B). As reported in the press, Oxy paid a $1 billion signature bonus as part of the deal, and has committed to $2.5 billion (split 75/25 for Oxy/OMV) investment plan, with the NOC matching an equal amount for investment. Oxy intends to drill some 400 wells starting in 2011, requiring a minimum of 12-15 rigs working full-time. The contract extension allows them to bring in 50 additional staff, including 16 Amcits, all of whom already have their visas and residency permits.

¶4. (C) A two-person NOC negotiating team worked on all three agreements (Eni, Petro-Canada and Oxy). The NOC's driving force behind the negotiation process was Assam Ali Elmessallati, who bears the title Committee Member for Investment and Joint Venture Follow-Up. According to Winterman, Elmessallati stalled negotiations with Eni (the first of the three agreements that the NOC tackled), pulling a near-final agreement off the table in order to conduct further "internal reviews". According to Winterman, Elmessallati conducted "an internal socialization process" in which he circulated the agreement broadly to get as many Libyan government "fingerprints" on the deal as possible. His past role as architect of the EPSA IV process likely informed the effort, which garnered enough buy-in for the deal to move forward without the threat of last-minute opposition from parties who would have gone unconsulted absent his efforts. Winterman also noted that it was vital that these new EPSA deals be presented General People's Committee (Cabinet-equivalent) as "extensions" verses, as opposed to new deals that would have to be re-bid from scratch.

NEW TERMS ARE BROADLY BENEFICIAL

¶5. (C) The IOCs' previous deals were based on a fixed margin, meaning that companies were somewhat insulated from fluxuations in the market price of oil by receiving a fixed price for every barrel produced. The new EPSA deals, while resulting in a lower overall production share for the IOCs, removes that fixed margin, allowing companies to reap higher profits per barrel when oil prices are high. That, together with the fact that the NOC will now cover the costs for all taxes, royalties and fees, results in the IOCs making a great deal more money per barrel of oil produced. Winterman assesses that the IOCs will get their money back (i.e. signature bonuses and investment requirements) very quickly under the new EPSA deals, as greater revenue driven by high oil prices will generate rapid reimbursement of their outlays.

TRIPOLI 00000563 002.2 OF 003

¶6. (C) An additional element of the new terms is that the ties between the IOCs and their local Libyan operating partners (Zuetina in Oxy/OMV's case) are less direct, in two distinct ways. Development plans for existing fields are now no longer run through the Libyan operators, but have been negotiated directly with the NOC under the new agreements. This means that traditional Libyan national company resistance to new investment and technologies (i.e., the much lamented tendency to keep things "the old way") have been swept aside, paving the way (with NOC approval) for more ambitious field development that should boost Libya's national production much more quickly. (Note: The NOC claims it will increase national production from a current level of 1.75 million bbl/day to 3 million bbl/day figure by 2012-15. End note.). The new EPSA framework has a substantial new anti-corruption measure that will prevent state-run companies (infamous for skimming off the top of contracts) from being involved in the tendering process. The new tendering arrangement will be between IOC and NOC representatives only, so the state-run companies have been frozen out entirely. This new arrangement creates "Joint Project Teams" that should reduce the potential for graft, while at the same time allowing for faster work rates through a streamlined decision-making and tendering process. Finally, the EPSA agreements incorporate robust IOC-provided training programs for Libyan nationals, which should help to ensure the creation of Libya's next generation of energy sector experts.

TWO SHORTCOMINGS: BOOKED RESERVES SHARE SMALLER .

¶7. (C) The new contracts, which feature lower production shares (now in the 10-12% range, down from 20% or higher), mean that companies can no longer "book reserves" (i.e., demonstrate to stockholders that they are contractually guaranteed to have access to a proven quantity of oil and gas) to the degree that they have in the past. This creates a new paradigm for Libya that is playing out worldwide in a growing number of oil-producing countries where the state and its energy authority are demanding tough terms for in-country IOCs. Winterman assesses that this trade-off between booked reserves and profit is creating a new system where the old rules no longer apply; the thinking of IOCs' stockholders will have to evolve to reflect the fact that their companies' stock values should be evaluated differently in an environment where reserves are harder to replace. Because this new way of thinking is still evolving, lowered production shares have the potential to hurt companies' stock prices in the short term.

¶8. (C) An additional consideration in this regard is the recent surge of interest in Libya on the part of non-Western IOCs (particularly from India, Japan, Russia and China), who have won the bulk of concessions in the NOC's recent acreage bid rounds.

These government-owned companies are driven by the desire to book reserves to assure supply to their domestic markets in the years to come. Assuming that their exploration of Libyan acreage bears fruit in the discovery of exploitable reserves, they may find that NOC terms allow them to book less in reserves that they had hoped. With that prospect in the offing, the interest of companies primarily concerned with booking reserves may wane as they consider making the jump to producing entities.

..AND GREATER NOC INVOLVEMENT NOT A PANACEA

¶9. (C) Although the new agreements carry substantial benefits, the more central involvement of the NOC does not by itself guarantee more efficient operations. Winterman stressed that the NOC is still more concerned with "price over performance," and can often be a difficult sell when it comes to using the latest (more expensive) technologies to generate efficiencies and augment output. He also questioned whether the NOC would be willing and able to hold up its end of the investment burden, as it has shown reluctance to make the kind of substantial re-investments in existing fields that their $2.5 billion commitment under the Oxy deal requires. Delays are likely, particularly given the NOC's haphazard budgeting process. For example, the NOC only received approval for the current year's budget in June, and even that approval only resulted in flatlined spending along the same lines as the previous year. Also, although the NOC retains many skilled technocrats with long experience and educational ties to the U.S., that group represents a dying breed (nearing retirement age), and the NOC's bench strength is being rapidly depleted as many of its best personnel take more lucrative opportunities in the private sector in Libya and abroad. The fact that the Eni, Petro-Canada and Oxy deals were hammered out using a common text reinforces the notion that the NOC is seeking to simplify the terms under which companies operate, in part because of its own limited institutional capacity.

NEXT ON THE BLOCK: EVERYONE ELSE

¶10. (C) Winterman was confident in predicting that Repsol (Spain), Wintershall (Germany) and TOTAL (France) were the next IOCs who would be forced to extend their presence in Libya via the signing of new EPSA agreements. After that, the next major set of operators will be the companies of the Oasis Group, composed of U.S. firms ConocoPhillips, Marathon and Hess. This NOC approach is reportedly on the horizon, despite the fact that the Oasis companies paid $1.8 billion in December 2005 to reclaim their former Sirte basin acreage in concert with local operator Waha (the eponymous Libyan state-run oil company that took over the fields when they left) following two years of negotiations with the NOC. The Waha-Oasis group currently produces about 350,000 bbl/day, roughly one-fifth of Libya's total oil output. Econoff has been told separately by the Country Managers of both ConocoPhillips and Marathon that senior NOC officials have hinted that a new deal with the Oasis group should be negotiated soon.

¶11. (C) This will present a unique challenge for the Oasis group, as the two major shareholders (CP and Marathon) reportedly have very different corporate priorities in Libya. For Marathon, whose booked Libyan production accounts for some 60% of the company's worldwide total, a reduction in production rate under an EPSA could have serious repercussions for the company's share price. On the other hand, ConocoPhillips is judged to have sufficient worldwide booked reserves that a drop in its production share would not be such a major blow, and its overall size puts it in a better position to reinvest the greater financial returns stemming from a new deal. Both would greater financial returns stemming from a new deal. Both would benefit from being freed from the intransigence to change shown by their counterparts in Waha (who routinely deflect their proposals for field development projects), but it may prove difficult for the Oasis partners to adopt a shared approach when the NOC begins to press in earnest for a extension of their presence.

¶12. (C) COMMENT: Although the concession extensions carry some positive aspects, the fact that the NOC may be prepared to reopen negotiations with the Oasis group is troubling. If the Waha consortium is forced to renegotiate after cementing a deal less than three years ago at a cost of $1.8 billion, can it - or any other IOC operating in Libya - reasonably expect that the new agreements will stand the test of time? Given the GOL's political approach to economic policymaking, as well as its penchant for extracting maximum concessions for production of its hydrocarbon resources, how long would revenue from oil that could hit $175 or $200/bbl oil be allowed to accrue to foreign companies before the GOL would (again) seek a larger cut? While the answer to that question remains to be seen, it is clear is that the recent contract extensions have set Eni, Petro-Canada and Oxy apart as leaders in the Libyan energy sector. It is expected that they will account for at least 55% of Libya's total oil production if the terms of their contracts are fulfilled. End comment.

TRIPOLI 00000564 001.2 OF 002

CLASSIFIED BY: Chris Stevens, CDA, U.S. Embassy - Tripoli, Dept of State.
REASON: 1.4 (b), (d)
¶1. (S/NF) Summary: A close friend of National Oil Corporation (NOC) Chairman Shukri Ghanem told us that Ghanem is under pressure to provide $1.2 billion in cash or oil shipments to National Security Adviser Muatassim al-Qadhafi (son of Muammar al-Qadhafi), and may seek to resign soon out of fear that Muatassim or his confederates could seek revenge if the funds are not forthcoming. Muatassim reportedly intended to use some of the funds to establish a military/security unit and to support unspecified security upgrades he wanted to make in his capacity as National Security Adviser. Muammar al-Qadhafi, anxious to give the appearance of a pro-reform agenda, had recently asked Ghanem whether he would consider serving again as Prime Minister (a post he occupied in 2004-2006) after a government shake-up later this year. Frustrated by the efforts of conservative regime elements to block needed economic and political reforms - Ghanem does not assess that meaningful economic and political reform are possible until al-Qadhafi passes from the political scene - Ghanem did not accept and is looking for a way to politely decline without offending al-Qadhafi. Speculation about whose star is waxing or waning is a favorite subject of Tripoli's chattering classes and it remains to be seen whether Ghanem makes good on intention to step down; however, it appears there may be something to the claim that Muatassim approached him for a substantial sum of cash. The reported attempts by al-Qadhafi's sons to use the NOC as a personal bank, together with Ghanem's pessimism about the prospects for meaningful reform, suggest that the regime remains unchanged with respect to the way it conducts key elements of its business. End summary.

¶2. (S/NF) Ibrahim el-Meyet (strictly protect), a prominent Tripoli-based attorney and business consultant, told CDA on July 10 that Dr. Shukri Ghanem, Chairman of Libya's National Oil Corporation (NOC) intends to tender his resignation to Muammar al-Qadhafi soon, perhaps as early as the coming week. (Note: el-Meyet was a Libyan MFA official during the pre-revolutionary period of the Sanussi monarchy; his assignments included London, Paris, Cairo and New York, where he was a member of Libya's UN delegation. End note.) El-Meyet has known Ghanem for more than forty years and considers him a close friend. The two lived in London during the same period in the early 1970's, and their families socialize together at least once a week. El-Meyet spoke with Ghanem on July 5.

AN INDECENT PROPOSAL

¶3. (S/NF) El-Meyet said Ghanem felt compelled to resign because National Security Adviser Muatassim al-Qadhafi, a son of Muammar al-Qadhafi, had approached him in late June with a request for $1.2 billion. Muatassim suggested that if Ghanem could not quickly generate such a large sum in cash, he would be willing to accept oil allotments that he could sell privately as an alternative way to generated the funds. (Note: El-Meyet said other sons of al-Qadhafi (NFI) had recently levied demands for oil allotments that they could sell privately as well. End note.) Muatassim refused to say what the money would be used for, but el-Meyet said Ghanem had learned from another well-connected source that Muatassim intended to use some of the funds to establish a military/security unit akin to that of his younger brother, Khamis, and to defray the expense of unspecified "security upgrades" he wanted to make in his capacity as National Security Adviser.

AL-QADHAFI'S SONS - "UNDISCIPLINED THUGS"

¶4. (S/NF) Ghanem informed Muammar al-Qadhafi in early July about Muatassim's request. Al-Qadhafi laughingly dismissed it and flatly told Ghanem to ignore it; however, according to el-Meyet, Ghanem is "genuinely concerned" that Muatassim or his confederates could seek revenge against Ghanem or his family if Muatassim does not receive the funds and/or learns that his father was informed of the request. The courtly el-Meyet was unusually blunt in assessing al-Qadhafi's children as "undisciplined thugs", noting that "no one can cross or refuse such people (the al-Qadhafi family) without suffering consequences, particularly when the matter is to do with money".

consequences, particularly when the matter is to do with money.

¶5. (S/NF) In a long conversation with el-Meyet on July 5, Ghanem said that given the potential danger to him and his family stemming from Muatassim's request, he sees little choice but to resign. He had already drafted a letter of resignation and was waiting for al-Qadhafi to get through visits by Spanish Foreign Minister Moratinos (who was in town July 10) and the Union for the Mediterranean summit in Paris (on July 13) before submitting it. Noting that Ghanem was "the only real reformer left" in the GOL, el-Meyet expressed concern that Ghanem's resignation would seriously impact the GOL at a critical time. Ghanem is a comparatively well-respected technocrat who enjoys a reputation as one of the only senior GOL officials who can speak candidly, and at times openly contradict, Muammar al-Qadhafi. At a time when Libya is trying to push ahead limited economic reforms and oil prices are at a historically unprecedented high, losing Ghanem would be a serious blow.

NO MEANINGFUL REFORM POSSIBLE IN AL-QADHAFI'S LIFETIME

¶6. (S/NF) In their conversation on July 5, Ghanem expressed frustration to el-Meyet about the difficulty of implementing meaningful reforms in Libya as another reason for resigning. (Note: Ghanem pushed for reform during his stint as Prime Minister in 2004-2006; resistance from conservative regime elements to those changes ultimately prompted al-Qadhafi to replace Ghanem with al-Baghdadi al-Mahmoudi, who is widely viewed as being a more traditional figure with whom the old guard is more comfortable. End note.)

¶7. (S/NF) After several years worth of discussion during their family's weekly get-togethers, el-Meyet and Ghanem have concluded that there will be no real economic or political reform in Libya until al-Qadhafi passes from the political scene. Al-Qadhafi is focused on giving the appearance of reform - and is particularly mindful of U.S. perceptions of Libya's efforts in that regard - and therefore wants a PM with a reformist image. According to el-Meyet, al-Qadhafi asked Ghanem in mid-May whether he would serve again as Prime Minister if al-Mahmoudi leaves office later this year. El-Meyet said Ghanem did not say no - "no one - not even Shukri Ghanem - flatly tells the Leader no" - but did not express enthusiasm and was trying to find a pretext for declining that would not anger al-Qadhafi. (Note: Ghanem was among those reportedly being considered for the PM position in the run-up to the March session of the General People's Congress, at which it was expected that al-Mahmoudi would be sacked. El-Meyet said al-Qadhafi had in fact originally intended to replace al-Mahmoudi in March, but thought such a move would be too disruptive if taken in concert with the proposed radical privatization and government restructuring (details reftel) he called for in his GPC address. End note.)

¶8. (S/NF) Despite the rhetoric, el-Meyet said he and Ghanem believe that al-Qadhafi is not genuinely ready "in his heart and in his bones" to implement change, for two reasons. First, real change would entail undoing economic fiefdoms of regime loyalists whose profitability derives from political connections and who would be unable to successfully compete in an economy characterized by transparency and rule of law. Second, genuine reform would be a tacit admission that the Jamahiriya system, of which al-Qadhafi himself was the author, had failed. Al-Qadhafi perceives himself as "a superman of history" and is not able to admit fault or weakness. Cosmetic attempts at economic reform are acceptable and help advance al-Qadhafi's goal of reingratiating Libya with the West, but the shared assessment of Ghanem and el-Meyet is that meaningful economic and political reform will not occur while al-Qadhafi is alive.

¶9. (S/NF) Comment: Speculation about which senior GOL official's star is waxing or waning is a favorite subject of the chattering classes in Tripoli and we've heard reports before that Ghanem was unhappy with repeated intervention by old guard elements in his reform efforts and could resign. Whether Ghanem makes good on his stated intention to bow out remains to be seen, but the fact that el-Meyet is a sober-minded observer and enjoys a close relationship with Ghanem suggests that there may be something to the claim that Muatassim approached Ghanem for a substantial sum of cash. The reported attempts by al-Qadhafi's sons to use the NOC as a personal bank, together with the pessimism of el-Meyet and Ghanem about the prospects for meaningful reform, suggest that despite occasional rhetorical flourishes, the underlying dynamic of the regime remains unchanged in some key respects. End comment.

¶1. (C) French Poloff Pierre-Antoine Molina briefed Poloff on July 9 on a recently-signed civilian nuclear cooperation agreement between Libya and France. According to Molina, Libya U/S for European Affairs Abdulati Obeidi visited Paris on July 7-8 to formally sign the agreement, which was first discussed during President Sarkozy's July 2007 visit to Libya and initialed by Obeidi on the margins of Libyan leader Muammar al-Qadhafi's December 2007 visit to France (reftels). As a signatory to the EuroAtom treaty, France had been obligated to notify all EuroAtom members of its plans to pursue a civilian nuclear cooperation agreement with Libya and to wait for a stipulated period of time in which other members could register objections before proceeding. By July 2008, the waiting period had ended without objection and France could proceed. The text, identical to the December 2007 initialed agreement, establishes a vague framework for future cooperation in the field of civilian uses of nuclear energy but does not/not commit France to specific projects or investments in Libya.

SUBJECT: THE EU-LIBYA FRAMEWORK AGREEMENT: VENI, VISAS, VETO

REF: TRIPOLI 457

CLASSIFIED BY: John T. Godfrey, CDA, U.S. Embassy - Tripoli, Dept of State.
REASON: 1.4 (b), (d)

¶1. (C) Summary. The Government of Libya (GOL) remains keenly interested in pursuing a European Union-Libya Framework Agreement and views a more formalized partnership with the European Union (EU) as a "reward" for Libya's decision in July 2007 to release six foreign health workers accused of intentionally infecting over 400 Libyan children with HIV/AIDS. Certain EU members, unsure that a more formal cooperation mechanism would be beneficial and sensing Libya's eagerness, have used the threat of a veto to push their bilateral agendas, particularly with respect to commercial and human rights issues. One year after Libya and the EU agreed in principle to pursue an agreement, a sizeable perception gap exists between the two sides on the merits of a more formalized partnership. Despite occasional differences with the EU, most recently over the French-backed Union for the Mediterranean proposal, the GOL will continue to seek an EU framework agreement, in large part because of Muammar al-Qadhafi's desire to be taken seriously by European leaders. End summary.

BULGARIAN MEDICS CASE HAUNTS EUROPE

¶2. (C) Libya's much-heralded decision in July 2007 to allow six foreign health workers imprisoned since 1999 on charges of intentionally infecting children in Benghazi with the HIV/AIDS virus frames current discussions on an EU-Libya Framework Agreement. Widely seen by Europeans in Libya as a successful alignment of European and Libyan interests, the denoument of the Bulgarian medics case - particularly their immediate pardon upon their arrival in Bulgaria - remains a lasting embarrassment for key elements of the Libyan regime. The GOL, preoccupied with avoiding the public perception that it caved to foreign pressure to resolve the case, has trumpeted a putative EU framework agreement as a significant concession and a positive coup for Libyan diplomacy. In an hours-long televised news conference just days after the medics left, Foreign Minister Abdulrahman Shalgham and Under Secretary for European Affairs Abdulati Obeidi boasted that a draft agreement, initialed by EU Commissioner for External Relations Benita Ferrero-Waldner during her July 2007 visit to Tripoli, would pave the way for easier access to Schengen visas for Libyan citizens and increased EU infrastructure investments in Libya. Ferrero-Waldner's announcement in February 2008 that the EU Commission had submitted a recommendation to the Council of Ministers to grant a mandate to open negotiations with Libya stoked GOL hopes for rapid progress.

¶3. (C) French, Spanish, and German diplomats describe Libya's primary objective in pursuing an EU framework agreement as reducing the mandatory waiting period for Schengen visas for Libyan nationals from the current 10 days to 48 hours. Libya fails to understand that visa policy is not an EU competence, Spanish diplomats said, adding that the GOL hopes to publicly highlight reduced waiting time for Schengen visas as a "reward" for having resolved the medics case. According to French Poloff Pierre-Antoine Molina, the current Schengen regime for Libya gives each Schengen member 10 days to object to any Libyan applicant on security grounds. Libya hopes to lobby for a reclassification under the Schengen rules to shorten the waiting period to 48 hours. Libyans are particularly vexed that neighbors Morocco, Algeria, Tunisia, and Egypt are not subject to the 10 day waiting period. The July 2007 draft agreement notes that reclassifying Libyans for Schengen purposes would be contingent upon Libya abolishing all visa requirements for EU citizens, something the GOL has so far shown no inclination that it is prepared to do.

¶4. (C) The July 2007 EU-Libya draft also lays out cooperation in the fields of human rights, health, and development. U/S Obeidi informed French Ambassador Francois Gouyette in June 2008 that Libya agreed in principle to negotiate a human rights chapter within the framework agreement; however, Obeidi categorically refused to include discussions of individual human rights cases in the EU negotiations. The Libyans also envision EU commitments to fund health infrastructure investments in Benghazi, to provide "life-long" treatment for the Benghazi children (including treatment in Europe), and to provide continued support to Libya's efforts to develop a national HIV/AIDS strategy. (Note: European states already play a significant role in supporting Libya's HIV/AIDS efforts through the Benghazi International Fund, developed in connection with the Bulgarian medics case, which the Belgian Red Cross plays a lead role in shepherding. End note.) In addition, the GOL has claimed that draft language initialed by Commissioner Ferrero-Waldner "commits" the EU to facilitating access to European markets for Libyan food exports, to providing technical assistance to archeological restoration projects in Libya, and assistance to archeological restoration projects in Libya, and to funding a "surveillance mechanism" along Libya's land and sea borders to combat illegal migration.

VENI, VIDI, VETO

¶5. (C) Certain EU members, sensing Libya's eagerness to move ahead, have threatened to block a framework agreement as a means by which to secure bilateral concessions, chiefly on commercial and human rights issues. Italian Economic and Commercial Counselor Domenico Bellantone said that Italy is prepared to veto any framework agreement unless Libya ends a series of discriminatory commercial practices that target Italian firms operating in Libya. Italy particularly wants the GOL to lift a pernicious requirement that any contract with an Italian firm be approved by the office of the Prime Minister (a requirement other states' firms are not subjected to), and to permit Italian nationals evacuated from Libya in the 1970's to visit Libya. French and Greek diplomats in Tripoli have hinted that they may also dangle a veto threat to resolve commercial disputes. The Netherlands have approached certain EU members about a possible veto over Libya's outstanding private debt to Dutch firms. Danish Consul-General George Wallen recently told EU Ambassadors in Tripoli that Denmark would veto a framework agreement with Libya unless the GOL lifts bans on Danish imports and Danish participation in infrastructure projects in Libya (prompted by a Danish magazine's re-publishing in February 2008 of cartoons depicting the Prophet Muhammad). Denmark also wants the GOL to release Jamal al-Hajj, a Danish-Libyan dual-national arrested on February 16, 2007 in connection with plans to hold a peaceful political demonstration. Maltese diplomats have said Malta is considering a veto over dissatisfaction with Libya's maritime patrols in its designated Search and Rescue (SAR) area and continuing concerns over the lack of cooperation by the GOL in efforts to stem the flow of irregular migrants from Libya to Europe.

¶6. (C) European diplomats believe that apart from help in combating illegal migration from sub-Saharan Africa and South Asia through Libya to Europe, Europe has little to gain from a closer partnership with Tripoli. In absence of a more formal agreement, some European countries have pursued bilateral cooperation that they privately assess as being more nimble and effective than broader cooperation under an EU framework agreement might be. Italian diplomats characterized a recent donation of six vessels to Libya's coast guard and an offer to train Libyan border security officials as Italy's bilateral response to what they view as a lack of meaningful EU engagement on illegal migrant flows through Libya. Greek DCM Ioannis Stamatekos lauded Italy's move and said Greece may follow suit. Maltese Poloff Daniel Malina said that Malta, lacking resources to make a large equipment donation, hoped to keep the critical migration issue on the EU's radar during Council deliberations over the Commission's mandate to pursue the framework agreement.

DON'T RAIN ON MY CHARADE

¶7. (C) Twelve months have passed since Ferrero-Waldner initialed a draft memorandum on an EU-Libya framework agreement; however, a year of inaction does not appear to have dampened GOL perceptions that relations with Europe are on an up-swing. While senior European diplomats in Tripoli are quick to point out that formal negotiations with Libya on any kind of European-Libyan cooperation agreement have yet to even begin, many GOL officials speak of key Libyan negotiating positions, such as the 48-hour Schengen visa point, as if they're already in place. Tripoli Airport Director Youssef al-Jeribi told Poloff (incorrectly) in March that Libyans no longer need to wait 10 days to obtain Schengen visas. Similarly, many Libyans persist in thinking (again, incorrectly) that over $400 million in EU "compensation" payments to the Libyan victims of the 1999

Benghazi HIV/AIDS outbreak have facilitated the latest European rapprochement. A series of high-level European visits, most recently that of Spanish Foreign Minister Miguel Moratinos, have helped attenuate the GOL's disappointment over what it perceives as slow progress on the framework agreement and on implementing commitments made during al-Qadhafi's visits to Spain and France in December 2007.

¶8. (C) Comment: Libya's interest in a closer partnership with Europe seems sincere; however, the GOL's foreign policy, particularly at the senior levels, remains somewhat fickle. Libyan leader Muammar al-Qadhafi's visit to Madrid and Paris last December sparked a surge of pro-European rhetoric in Tripoli - in one instance, Qadhafi threatened to pull Libyan investment from sub-Saharan Africa to redirect to his new European friends. More recently, though, al-Qadhafi orchestrated a meeting of Arab Maghreb Union leaders in Tripoli to publicly disparage Sarkozy's Union for the Mediterannean proposal (reftel). Characterizing the proposed union as "insulting", he claimed it would undermine Arab and African member states' commitments to the Arab League and African Union, and told former British Prime Minister Tony Blair he was concerned that the proposal represented an effort by southern European states to create a North African bulwark against illegal migration from sub-Saharan Africa and to "further legitimize" Israel. Despite such disagreements, Qadhafi's interest in being taken seriously, particularly by his "friends Nicholas (Sarkozy) and Silvio (Berlusconi)", will continue to drive the GOL's keen interest in finalizing a framework agreement with the EU. End comment.

SUBJECT: U.K. VISIT TO RABTA CHEMICAL WEAPONS PRODUCTION FACILITY

REF: TRIPOLI 466

CLASSIFIED BY: John T. Godfrey, CDA, U.S. Embassy - Tripoli, Dept of State.
REASON: 1.4 (b), (d)

¶1. (C) Summary: The U.K. Deputy Head of Mission told us the recent visit by U.K. chemical weapons experts to the Rabta chemical weapons production facility (CWPF) had "greatly reassured" the U.K. that Libya was committed to converting the facility to pharmaceuticals production, meeting the deadline for destroying stocks of chemical weapons agent and dealing with the OPCW in a more transparent way. End summary.

¶2. (C) A U.K. team comprising Chris Rampling, Clive Rowland, Shailesh Patel and Jim McGilly visited Libya July 6-9. FCO official Chris Rampling gave us a readout of his meeting on July 7 with officials from the MFA's International Organizations (MFA/IO) department and GOL's lead interlocutor on CWC issues, Dr. Ahmed Hesnawy; U.K. Embassy Deputy Head of Mission Mark Matthews subsequently gave us a readout on July 10 of the team's visit to the Rabta facility and their conclusions. The U.K. team stressed that a major objective for their visit was to re-establish contact with Dr. Ahmed Hesnawy and other key GOL interlocutors on CWC issues, with whom they have not had direct contact for some time.

MEETING WITH DR. HESNAWY & MFA/IO: LIBYA AGREES MORE TRANSPARENCY NEEDED

¶3. (C) Rampling led the U.K. team's meeting on July 7 with the MFA's International Organizations (MFA/IO) department and Dr. Ahmed Hesnawy, Libya's lead interlocutor on CWC issues. Rampling stressed the need for greater transparency from the GOL as to the reasons that conversion of the Rabta CWPF from chemical weapons to pharmaceuticals production had been delayed. Rampling said he "suggested, but not explicitly" that Libya consider submitting a new national paper at the next OPCW meeting. Hesnawy blamed Italian company PharmaChem, with which it has contracted for conversion-related work, for delays in conversion work. He agreed that greater transparency could help alleviate concerns about Libya's activities, and suggested Libya would submit a new national paper.

¶4. (C) Rampling also urged the GOL to be more transparent about the contract with Italian firm SIPSA Engineering for destruction of chemical agent at Rabta. Rampling said Hesnawy bristled when asked whether the destruction contract with SIPSA Engineering contract had actually been signed. Complaining that the Italian Embassy in Tripoli had called regularly - "they are pushing us too hard on this" - to ask whether the contract had been signed, Hesnawy stressed that Libya would "sign when we're ready to sign, and not before". As reported reftel, Hesnawy told us in June that contract negotiations with SIPSA had been completed and terms were mutually understood; however, the contract itself had not yet been formally approved by all relevant GOL entities. (Note: Rampling told us that despite the fact that Italian officials in Rome and at the OPCW deny that Italy's government has played a direct role in the SIPSA contract, Italian Embassy officials in Tripoli freely admitted that they were actively involved in trying to get the contract finalized and signed. End note.) Hesnawy expressed confidence that Libya would "easily meet" the deadline for destruction of its chemical agent.

RABTA VISIT: U.K. TEAM "GREATLY REASSURED"

¶5. (C) U.K. DHM Mark Matthews told us the U.K. team was "greatly reassured" by its visit to the Rabta CWPF on July 8 that the GOL had been transparent about its conversion and destruction activities. GOL officials - Hesnawy accompanied the team on its visit - were "very cooperative". The U.K. team had full access to the Rabta CWPF and was able to take photographs during their five-plus hour visit. The team reported that "significant" construction and conversion work had been performed at the former CWPF. The U.K. team had "no concerns" about Libya's proposal to retain the sandbag-covered enclosure berm that the original conversion plan envisioned removing. GOL interlocutors reiterated earlier arguments that retention of the berm would help preclude damage to the production facility's equipment that could occur during removal and, more importantly, help product the facility from sand storms prevalent in the area.

¶6. (C) The U.K. team was not/not allowed to visit the chemical weapons destruction facility. Hesnawy said only site preparation work was underway there, and that there was nothing of substance to see. Hesnawy told the U.K. team that some equipment for the destruction facility would be obtained equipment for the destruction facility would be obtained locally, with some to be brought in from abroad, including destruction monitoring equipment that may/may be purchased from a U.K. company. Hesnawy may/may travel to the U.K. in October to meet with representatives of the U.K. company; the U.K.'s Ministry of Defense may/may provide training on use of the destruction monitoring equipment. Rampling told us on July 7 that he intended to pull Hesnawy aside to raise the issue of establishing a system to identify and track proliferation sensitive production equipment; however, Matthews told us in his readout that Rampling had ultimately not/not raised the issue.

¶7. (C) Separately, MFA/IO official Adel Ben Issa told us on July 14 that the request for the U.S. team of CWC experts to visit Libya July 20-24 had been forwarded to MFA Secretary for European Affairs Abdulati Obeidi, Libya's lead interlocutor for Tri-lateral Steering Coordinating Committee (TSCC) issues. (Note: Obeidi has been in Paris in connection with the Union for the Mediterranean event recently held there, and just returned to Tripoli. End note.) Ben Issa said all the indications were positive that the U.S. team's visit would be approved, and that he expected to receive official permission for the visit from Obeidi within a day or so.

SUBJECT: QADHAFI FOUNDATION CONTINUES DIALOGUE ON RELEASE OF FORMER LIBYAN ISLAMIC FIGHTING GROUP MEMBERS

REF: A) TRIPOLI 182 , B) TRIPOLI 320

CLASSIFIED BY: John T. Godfrey, CDA, U.S. Embassy - Tripoli, Dept of State.
REASON: 1.4 (b), (d)
¶1. (C) Summary: An ongoing dialogue between the quasi-governmental Qadhafi Development Foundation (QDF) and the Libyan Islamic Fighting Group (LIFG) has resulted in the release and reintegration of some 130 former LIFG fighters into Libyan society thus far (reftels). The dialogue, initially led directly by Libyan leader Muammar al-Qadhafi's son Saif al-Islam, aims to convince LIFG members in Libyan detention facilities to renounce violence and resume their lives as normal Libyan citizens. Approximately 90 LIFG members remain in Libyan prisons; discussions with them are ongoing and it is expected that they may be released soon. End Summary.

¶2. (U) Saleh Abdulsalam Saleh, Director of the Human Rights Committee of the QDF and a senior adviser to Saif al-Islam al-Qadhafi, provided an update on July 13 to CDA and Poloff regarding the QDF-LIFG dialogue.

FORTY ADDITIONAL FIGHTERS RELEASED IN JUNE

¶3. (C) According to Saleh, talks between the QDF and LIFG have thus far resulted in the release of 131 former LIFG fighters - 91 in April (ref B) and an additional 40 in June. Saleh carefully emphasized that the talks were part of "a dialogue", vice negotiations, that had been underway for over a year and a half under the personal patronage of Saif al-Islam al-Qadhafi, son of Muammar al-Qadhafi. Saleh described the dialogue as unconditional, noting that the only thing required of LIFG members was " ... a willingness to change ideas on the use of violence". He stressed that the dialogue emphasizes the reintegration of former fighters, particularly with respect to helping them secure work after their release. He also confirmed press reports that the QDF had paid 10,000 Libyan dinar (about 8,300 USD) to each released fighter to help them re-establish themselves after their release, and had additionally paid monthly stipends to former fighters until they secured jobs. He said the "vast majority" of those released in April and June had already secured work; only a small number remained unemployed.

QDF USES OUTSIDE MEDIATORS TO FACILITATE DISCUSSIONS

¶4. (C) Saleh said that Ali al-Salabi and Numan Ben Othman (the latter is a former LIFG member), usually accompanied by a QDF official, have represented the QDF in the dialogue. (Note: al-Salabi resides in Dubai and Ben Othman resides in London; both travel to Libya for their mediation work. End note.) Abdullah al-Sadiq, Abu Munther al-Saadi, and Abu Hazim al-Sharif have represented the LIFG leadership. The semi-official QDF mediators meet with the LIFG leadership at the Abu Salim prison, located on the outskirts of Tripoli, every two to three weeks. (Note: The Abu Salim prison is formally managed by military police; however, it is the facility at which most political prisoners are housed and the Internal Security Organization (ISO) plays a large role in administering it. End note.) The most recent meeting took place in mid-June; it is expected that the next will take place in early August.

THE LIFG IS NO LONGER JUDGED TO BE A VIABLE ORGANIZATION INSIDE LIBYA

¶5. (C) Saleh characterized the LIFG as "not present on the ground in Libya", noting that the vast majority the known remaining members in Libya - about 90 individuals - are currently in Libyan government detention. (Note: A number of individuals affiliated with the LIFG are outside Libya. End note.) The LIFG as a terrorist organization is "completely gone", Saleh said. The QDF remains in contact with the 131 fighters released to date through local administrative authorities ("lajnaat al-shabiya"), and the QDF and Libyan authorities monitor former LIFG members to ensure they have "become citizens again and have peaceful ideas".

¶1. (C) Summary: The Libyan Foreign Bank (LFB), Libya's

longtime conduit for international trade, is pursuing a substantial program of expansion involving a ten-fold increase in its capitalization and creation of an onshore bank. Its chairman is aggressively seeking new investment opportunities in Africa and beyond, and is contemplating whether and how to get into the U.S. market. The LFB recently doubled its capitalization of Bahrain-based Alubaf Bank, of which it has a 95 percent share. Regarding much-anticipated GOL reform initiatives, the LFB's Chairman expects a reprise of past efforts that featured form over substance. End Summary.

¶2. (SBU) CDA and Econoff met with Dr. Mohammed Abdullah Bayt Almal, Chairman of the Libyan Foreign Bank (formerly known as the Libyan Arab Foreign Bank) on July 16 to discuss recent changes at the LFB and its plans for the future. Established in 1972 as an offshore bank, the LFG has been Libya's leading institution for transactions essential to the conduct of international trade (issuing letters of credit, providing currency exchange services, etc.). The LFB has historically been the only Libyan bank that handled foreign currency accounts; Bayt Almal confirmed that it still does not possess any Libyan dinar-denominated accounts.

ALUBAF BANK

¶3. (C) CDA asked about press reports detailing recent initiatives made by Bahrain-based Alubaf Arab International Bank. Bayt Almal confirmed that a proposal to double Alubaf's capital to $100 million and to appoint Bayt Almal to the Board of Directors were approved by shareholders in a meeting on July ¶9. He offered that Alubaf Bank nearly collapsed after a significant number of Iraqi-owned accounts were closed in 2003, but said the bank had since rebounded. He confirmed that the LFB owns a 95% share of Alubaf's Bahrain branch and 100% of its branch in Tunisia (ref A). Libya's Central Bank owns 100% of LFB, and is therefore the ultimate owner of Alubaf.

DIVERSIFIED & SEEKING A PRESENCE IN THE U.S.

¶4. (SBU) The LFB's foreign interests are diverse and growing. It currently has "participation" (i.e., interests) in thirty-seven foreign entities located in twenty countries, from Mexico to China. Most of its interests are focused in sub-Saharan Africa, including every country in the Maghreb except Morocco. Bayt Almal estimated the LFB's current capital at $1 billion, with assets in excess of $21 billion worldwide. We had heard and reported previously that all Libyan government and financial institutions had divested themselves of holdings and accounts in the U.S. in response to potential seizure of assets under Section 1083 of the 2008 National Defense Authorization Act (the so-called Lautenberg Amendment. According to Bayt Almal, the LFB continues to hold U.S. dollar accounts and - despite efforts by the Libyan Investment Authority and other Libyan government entities to limit their exposure in the U.S. (ref B) - is actively exploring the possibility of establishing a "strategic partnership" with a major U.S. bank and investing in a U.S.-based bank.

LAND HO: MOVING ONSHORE

¶5. (SBU) Bayt Almal said that the LFB planned to open an onshore bank in Libya soon, contingent on approval by its parent institution, the Central Bank (CB). A plan currently before CB Governor Farhat Ben Gdara calls for a ten-fold expansion of the LFB's capital, from $1 billion to $10 billion. Conceding that LFB had aimed high, Bayt Almal said he would be happy with $6-7 billion, and expected to get it. Part of the justification for expanded capitalization involves establishing an onshore entity, which would allow LFB to diversify the range of products it offers in the Libyan market. With the continuing reform of the Libyan banking system, to include the purchase of stakes in Libyan banks by foreign entities (refs C, D), the LFB wants to ensure that it will remain competitive. It intends to inaugurate risk management and asset management services, which would both be entirely new service lines for the bank. (Note: Risk management and asset management are areas CB Governor Ben Gdara told us are most in need of help. End note.) In anticipation of this step, the LFB has expanded its training efforts, sending employees abroad for hands-on training at partner institutions in Europe (Britain, France, Belgium, and Germany) and the Middle East (Jordan and the UAE). Bayt Almal cited a dearth of trained employees as one of the biggest stumbling blocks to banking reform in Libya.

AL-QADHAFI'S PROPOSED GOVERNMENT REFORMS - "FORM OVER SUBSTANCE"

¶6. (C) Responding to a question about expected privatization and government restructuring stemming from Muammar al-Qadhafi's dramatic speech to the General People's Congress on March 2 (refs E, F), Bayt Almal wearily noted that Libya had "been through this before". He referred to his own experience in 2000, when the Libyan Cabinet underwent wholesale changes, leaving only Bayt Almal (then the Finance Minister) and the Foreign Minister in a "Prime Minister-plus two" formulation. During that round of reform, other ministries were re-labeled as "Haya" (translated as "institution" or "entity"). Despite the semantics, the old structures were essentially left in place. Bayt Almal expected a similar outcome at the end of the current reform exercise. He predicted that foreign affairs, defense, finance and the security services would be left intact in their current guises as "sovereign ministries" that would report directly to the Prime Minister-equivalent, a formulation al-Qadhafi himself hinted at in his March 2 address.

¶7. (C) Biographical Note: Bayt Almal was born in Egypt in 1948 and spent his childhood in Benghazi, despite the fact that his family originally hails from Misurata. He spent 1970-1978 in U.S., where he obtained an MA in accounting (in Muncie, Indiana) and PhD (at the University of Kentucky in Lexington) in finance. He then returned to Libya, where taught accounting at Garyounis University in Benghazi before serving as Secretary of Finance (1992-2000) and Auditor General (2003-2005). Various sources report that he served a three-year prison sentence in 2000-2003 in connection with an embezzlement case in Benghazi (Emboffs were not able to corroborate this story during their office call). Bayt Almal was married in 1970 while in the U.S., and he has seven daughters (two of them AmCits by birth), all of whom currently reside in/around Misurata. End biographical note.

CLASSIFIED BY: John T. Godfrey, CDA, U.S. Embassy - Tripoli, Dept of State.
REASON: 1.4 (b), (d)

¶1. (C) Summary: Four years after re-establishing diplomatic relations, the Government of Libya (GOL) remains deeply concerned about efforts to cover internal political issues and actively seeks to prevent Emboffs from traveling in-country and engaging with Libyans. The GOL has actively enforced new strictures to prevent certain foreign diplomats from traveling outside Tripoli without prior permission and a travel permit. The measures have been justified on security grounds; however, they appear to be largely motivated by a desire to circumscribe reporting on internal political issues and to specifically target U.S. diplomats. While perceptions of foreign interference are known to be a particularly neuralgic issue for the GOL, recent actions to limit our activities nonetheless go beyond the pale, the more so since since they appear to specifically target U.S. diplomats. Since March, there have been five instances of proposed in-country travel by Emboffs - involving five different officers and four different putative destinations - that the GOL has effectively blocked. Given that the regime's other recent measures on sensitive bilateral issues appear to have been authored at the highest levels, engagement by senior officials in Washington with their GOL interlocutors will likely be necessary to mitigate the current constraints on Post's ability to conduct in-country travel and engagement with Libyans. End comment.

ATTEMPTS TO CONDUCT IN-COUNTRY TRAVEL, ENGAGEMENT STRIKE A NERVE

¶2. (C) As reported ref A, an attempt to visit the historical Berber heartland in March prompted an angry response from the MFA and a prohibition against travel to the city of Zuwara by Emboffs. MFA interlocutors angrily denounced Post's attempt to engage with the Berber community as "unacceptable interference" in Libya's domestic affairs. Following the Berber incident, CDA and P/E Chief spoke with MFA counterparts to clarify the mechanism by which proposed in-country travel could be coordinated through the MFA to avoid complications.

¶3. (C) Following the protocol established in those discussions, post proposed in early March that Poloff visit the southern city of Sabha (located some 650 km southeast of Tripoli, in the Fezzan Province) to meet with Libyan officials to discuss local government and migration issues. The MFA claimed to support the visit and offered to facilitate meetings with local Libyan officials. Post formally advised the MFA of Emboff's travel plans on March 30; however, on April 19, the MFA asked that the visit be delayed to allow additional time to arrange meetings with the Basic People's Congress in Sabha. The MFA also requested changes in the language of the diplomatic note advising the GOL of the proposed visit. Post sent a new diplomatic note, incorporating the MFA's suggested changes, on April 22 regarding Poloff's proposed visit to Sabha on May 6, and was in regular contact with the MFA concerning trip logistics from May 1-6.

EMBOFF DETAINED TO PREVENT TRAVEL TO SABHA

¶4. (C) On May 6, Libyan security officials pulled Poloff out of line on the tarmac at Tripoli International Airport while he attempted to board a commercial flight from to Sabha. A plainclothes security official took Emboff's travel documents; other plainclothes security officials and uniformed police prevented Poloff from boarding the flight. A uniformed police officer told Poloff he was not allowed to wait on the tarmac and escorted him inside the terminal, where he was directed to report to the senior security official on site at the airport to retrieve his travel documents. Poloff was subsequently detained for approximately an hour in the senior security official's office, where he was surrounded by four to six uniformed and plainclothes security officials and two armed guards in uniform. Security officials attempted to question Poloff about his work at the Embassy and accused Poloff of not having a valid residence permit to remain in Libya. Poloff was told during the course of questioning that his luggage had not been loaded on the aircraft because security officials had decided well before the flight that he would not be allowed to travel. (Note: The MFA was aware that Poloff intended to travel on May 6 and gave no indication that there was any problem with the proposed trip no indication that there was any problem with the proposed trip. End note.) Nearly two hours after he was to have boarded the flight, security officials informed Poloff that he must "leave the airport immediately" without further explanation.

¶5. (C) Following the incident at the airport on May 6, the MFA sent Post a diplomatic note asking that the Sabha trip be "delayed". A senior Libyan official told CDA on May 8 that while the MFA would attempt to coordinate with security officials to reschedule the visit, elements of the security apparatus, particularly the External Security Organization (ESO), were deeply uncomfortable with attempts by reporting officers to travel in-country and engage with Libyans outside of narrowly circumscribed official channels. To date, the MFA has not arranged the requested Sabha visit; Post has been informed that all Emboffs are currently banned from traveling to Libya's third largest city.

MFA ATTEMPTS TO REQUIRE THAT ALL DIPLOMATS OBTAIN "PERMISSION" FOR IN-COUNTRY TRAVEL

¶6. (SBU) As reported ref B, the MFA sent to Western European and North American missions on May 19 a diplomatic note requiring that all diplomatic missions obtain "permission" (the Arabic wording is exact) for diplomats and/or members of their families to travel more than 70 km outside of Tripoli, regardless of the purpose of travel. Per guidance in ref C, Post has adopted a policy of notifying the GOL of travel by Emboffs and their families outside the 70 km radius. Add language on 'ya'ani greater Tripoli area"

SECURITY SERVICES OBSTRUCT CHARGE'S TRAVEL TO BENGHAZI & POINTS EAST

¶7. (C) On May 23 - after receipt on May 19 of the MFA note requiring permission to travel and before receipt of ref C guidance on May 23 - security officials attempted to prevent CDA and two Emboffs from making a trip to Benghazi and eastern Libya for tourism. Four security officials, who identified themselves as External Security Organization (ESO) officials, met CDA inside the terminal at Tripoli International Airport and demanded to see his travel permit. Security officers were overheard discussing in Arabic the arrival of "the Americans" in the terminal. The officials noted that they were informed on May 22 that three Emboffs would attempt to travel to Benghazi. The ESO officials told CDA that the Emboffs would not be allowed to travel to Benghazi because they had not obtained permission to do so. CDA and Emboffs nonetheless attempted to check in for the flight; however, a security official physically went behind the airline counter to instruct the agent not to allow them to check in for their flight. After multiple phone calls to senior MFA and security officials, the security officials at the airport agreed to allow the officers to travel; however, they refused to allow Emboffs to ride on the same airport shuttle bus with other passengers and kept them under close observation.

¶8. (C) A Buraq Air agent told CDA and Emboffs during the encounter on May 23 that all Libyan-owned airlines with domestic service - Buraq Air, Libyan Arab Airlines, and Afriqiyah - received instructions from GOL officials in May that they were not to allow U.S. diplomats to board domestic flights from Tripoli without special permission from security organizations. The Buraq agent clarified that the instructions applied only to U.S diplomats, vice the entire diplomatic community.

¶9. (C) In Benghazi, security officials subjected CDA and Emboffs to a steady stream of harrassment. A security officer met CDA and Emboffs on the tarmac in Benghazi and immediately began questioning them about their trip. During a road trip from the Benghazi airport to Susa (some 200 km northeast), four security officials closely followed CDA and Emboffs. When they stopped at a scenic overlook, a security official in one of the chase cars got out and took numerous photographs of CDA, Emboffs and their locally-hired driver from a distance of five to ten feet. CDA confronted the official, who refused to identify himself and refused to stop taking photos. The same individual aggressively snapped hundreds of photographs of CDA, Emboffs, and the locally-engaged driver during the subsequent two days of their trip to eastern Libya. The driver, who is from Benghazi and is regularly used by Emboffs when they visit the east, said security officials routinely question him "for hours" after each visit by Emboffs and had instructed him to report any trip coordination with Emboffs at least 24 hours before their planned arrival in Benghazi. (Note: P/E Chief traveled to Benghazi and eastern Libya in early May and used the same driver, who is also used by PD officers when they travel in the east. End note.) Following Poloff's May 22 phone call to arrange a pick-up from the Benghazi airport, the driver had notified local security officials that the CDA and Emboffs planned to travel to Benghazi.

EMBOFFS DENIED "PERMISSION" TO TRAVEL IN SUPPORT OF U.S. PROGRAMS

¶10. (C) In late June, Post formally advised the MFA via diplomatic note that two Emboffs would accompany an Export Control and Border Security (EXBS) team to Benghazi, where they planned to conduct a three-day course on July 12-15 for 50 Libyan officials responsible for airport security and passenger screening. Post provided detailed information on Emboffs' proposed travel and clearly stated that they were to provide logistical support to the U.S. delegation. On July 9, the MFA informed Post via diplomatic note that Emboffs would not be permitted to travel to Benghazi in support of the EXBS training program (text of note sent via email to NEA/MAG). The note provided no explanation for denying permission to Emboffs to travel in support of the program. Post has cancelled the Benghazi portion of the airport security training course; a parallel EXBS airport security training program at the Tripoli International Airport is currently underway. In a meeting on July 15, MFA Americas Department Director Matari expressed frustration and conceded that such decisions were driven by security organizations, but said he would see what he could do to help. He advised that Emboffs seek in the interim to obtain the travel permit mandated in the May 19 diplomatic note to facilitate their in-country travel.

¶11. (C) On July 9, Post formally advised the MFA via diplomatic note that the Public Affairs Officer, CDA and their son would travel on July 20 to the Graeco-Roman ruins at Cyrene (east of Benghazi) for tourism. The PAO also intended to meet with representatives of the Global Heritage Fund, who received a USG grant for archaeological work being done at the Cyrene site. Despite daily inquiries between July 14 and 20, the GOL failed to issue travel permits for PAO and CDA. Inquiries to airline officials suggested that Emboffs would not be allowed to board the flight to Benghazi without travel permits; the trip was therefore cancelled.

TRAVEL RESTRICTIONS APPEAR TO TARGET U.S. DIPLOMATS

¶12. (C) In addition to instructions prohibiting Libyan air carriers from boarding U.S. diplomats for domestic flights from Tripoli, the May 19 diplomatic note requiring diplomats and their families to obtain permission for travel more than 70 km outside Tripoli appears to be targeted at western diplomats, particularly those from the U.S. The requirement for travel permits has been on the books for some time; however, it has not been consistently enforced. Diplomats at the embassies of Egypt, Tunisia, Algeria, Jordan, Chad and Sudan told Emboffs

Egypt, Tunisia, Algeria, Jordan, Chad and Sudan told Emboffs their missions did not receive the MFA's note requiring travel permits and are not required to notify the GOL in advance of in-country travel. Egyptian and Tunisian diplomats laughed off the suggestion that they would comply with the requirement, noting that if the GOL tried to enforce it against them, their governments would immediately reciprocate with similar strictures on Libyan diplomats accredited to Cairo and Tunis. European diplomats report that while certain EU embassies provide the GOL with advance notice of their travel (the U.K., for instance), there are no known instances in which the GOL has restricted a European diplomat or their family from traveling outside Tripoli. Several eastern European missions that received the May 19 note told us they have no intention of complying with the requirement; personnel from those missions have subsequently traveled without incident (and without permits) to Benghazi, Sabha and Ghadames.

¶13. (C) Comment: Despite comments by senior GOL officials attesting to the desire for broader and deeper ties, significant elements of the regime, particularly within the security apparatus, remain deeply skeptical of U.S.-Libya bilateral re-engagement in general, and of Emboffs' travel and outreach in particular. The GOL maintains an expansive definition of "unacceptable interference" in its domestic affairs; security organizations regard any effort to engage with Libyans and to report on domestic issues as dangerously subversive, reflecting the regime's overweaning focus on pre-empting any potential challenge to its authority. While perceptions of foreign interference are known to be a particularly neuralgic issue for the GOL (witness the March 2006 attack on the Italian consulate in Benghazi and the December 2007 arrest of a Lukoil executive on charges of industrial espionage), GOL officials appear to harbor particular concerns about U.S. diplomats. Blunt demarches by senior GOL officials (refs D, E) have underscored the GOL's concern. Recent actions by the GOL to limit our activities nonetheless go well beyond the pale, particularly since they appear to have specifically targeted U.S. diplomats. We now have five instances of proposed in-country travel by Emboffs (involving five different officers and four different putative destinations) since March that the GOL has effectively blocked. Given that the regime's other recent counter-productive measures on the bilateral front appear to have been authored at the highest levels (refs A, D and F), engagement by senior officials in Washington with their GOL interlocutors will likely be necessary to mitigate the current constraints on Post's ability to conduct in-country travel and engagement with Libyans. End comment.

¶1.   (C) Summary: The arrest in Geneva of Hannibal al-Qadhafi, son of Muammar al-Qadhafi, and his wife has prompted a serious diplomatic fissure between Switzerland and Libya, which has accused Swiss police of using unnecessary force, of having violated Hannibal's diplomatic immunity, of having violated diplomatic protocol by not granting Libyan diplomats immediate consular access to him, and of deliberately seeking to embarrass Libya because of Switzerland's "well-known" dislike of Arabs
```

Libya because of Switzerland's "well known" dislike of Arabs. Efforts by the Swiss government to accord Hannibal preferential treatment earned no quarter from the GOL, which has reduced the number of flights between the two countries, ceased issuing visas to Swiss citizens seeking to travel to Libya, and harassed Swiss companies in Libya. Since Hannibal's arrest a week ago, two Swiss companies have been closed on the pretext that their registration papers were not in order and one Swiss businessmen has been detained for irregularities with his residency permit. Diplomatic efforts to smooth over the incident are underway: the Swiss Foreign Minister spoke with her Libyan counterpart today, and a high-level Swiss delegation is scheduled to arrive in Tripoli tomorrow for talks aimed at restoring equilibrium to bilateral relations. The GOL's reflexive efforts to attack Swiss commercial interests and cease issuing visas to Swiss citizens underscore the extent to which the regime treats business as an extension of politics and the sensitivity of anything to do with the al-Qadhafi family. The incident also reflects the gap - perceived by some to be growing - between average Libyans, who take a dim view of the al-Qadhafi clan's embarrassing and repeated falls from grace, and a hidebound regime that sees the state as an extension of the al-Qadhafi family empire. End summary.

ABUSING THE HELP

¶2. (C) Swiss Ambassador Daniel von Muralt gave CDA and A/RSO an extensive readout on July 22 on the recent arrest in Geneva of Hannibal al-Qadhafi, son of Muammar al-Qadhafi, and the subsequent rift in Swiss-Libyan bilateral relations. Hannibal and his wife, who is nearly nine months pregnant, together with a sizeable retinue of bodyguards and assistants, were in Geneva for the delivery of their child. Two of their household staff, a Moroccan man and a Tunisian women, contacted a Swiss NGO to complain that Hannibal and his wife had physically abused them. The NGO contacted Swiss police and warrants were issued by a Swiss magistrate for the two. Swiss police informed Libyan diplomats at the Libyan missions in Geneva and Bern that they intended to take Hannibal and his wife into custody for questioning about allegations that they had physically abused their assistants and detained them illegally by confiscating their passports. (Note: Von Muralt explained that a large number of Arabs, many of them wealthy citizens of Gulf states, visit and live in Switzerland and have a reputation of abusing their domestic help. The scope of the problem is such that some Swiss NGO's essentially specialize in "rescuing" domestic help who are abused, physically and otherwise, by their well-heeled employers. End note.)

HANNIBAL REFUSES TO GO QUIETLY

¶3. (C) Swiss police officers arrived at Hannibal's room at the Hotel President Wilson on July 15 to serve the warrants, but were told by Libyan diplomats at the hotel that Hannibal and his wife did not intend to surrender themselves into custody. After an hour and a half of fruitless negotiations, Swiss police used a hotel key to enter the room. Von Muralt said two bodyguards posted just inside the door of the suite's entryway physically attacked the Swiss officers, who subdued the bodyguards and relieved them of their concealed sidearms. The bodyguards did not have permits for the weapons. The Swiss officers, some of whom had drawn their sidearms when attacked by the two bodyguards at the entrance, then forced open the doors to the suite's bedrooms; Hannibal's wife and three year-old daughter were hiding in one and he was hiding in another with six other bodyguards and other members of his entourage.

PREFERENTIAL TREATMENT ...

¶4. (C) Swiss officers took Hannibal's wife to a hospital, where she remained under police custody. Hannibal was taken in an armored sedan (vice a police van) to the Ministry of Justice building, where he was held in a private room July 15-17.

Emphasizing the special treatment accorded to Hannibal, Von Muralt said Hannibal, a chain smoker, was allowed to smoke despite a prohibition against doing so in all Swiss public buildings. In addition, von Muralt said that although Swiss law permitted authorities to detain Hannibal incommunicado for 2-8 days, he was permitted to make a telephone call shortly after his arrest. Swiss authorities assumed he would call his father, Muammar al-Qadhafi; however, Hannibal insisted on speaking instead with his sister, Aisha al-Qadhafi. Von Muralt said contacts close to the al-Qadhafi family told him that Hannibal has lived in fear of father since a series of incidents in which he assaulted Italian police officers in Rome (2001), attacked police in Paris after being stopped for speeding on the wrong side of the Champs Elysees while inebriated (2004) and received a four-year suspended prison sentence from a French court after beating his pregnant girlfriend, who refused to let him into their hotel room (2005). Hannibal was banned from traveling in the European Schengen zone between 2005 and 2008; he successfully obtained a visa from the Swiss Embassy in Tripoli in February 2008.

... EARNS NO QUARTER FROM AN ANGRY AISHA

¶5. (C) Aisha al-Qadhafi arrived in Geneva on July 17 and promptly issued a statement to the press in which she accused Swiss police of having used excessive force, and the Swiss government of discriminating against Arabs and perpetrating a "deliberate plot against the al-Qadhafi family". Aisha closed her remarks by noting that Libya's response to Hannibal's arrest would be in line with the proverb of "an eye for an eye, and a tooth for a tooth", prompting speculation in the media that the GOL would retaliate against Switzerland. Noting that it would have been better had she not come, von Muralt sharply criticized Aisha's statement as "highly inaccurate" and said her attempts at mediation hurt, rather than helped, efforts to quietly resolve the incident. Eventually, Hannibal and his wife were released on bail - 200,000 Euros for Hannibal; 300,000 Euros for his wife, who is accused of perpetrating most of the alleged physical abuse - and flew from Geneva to Tripoli late on July 17 on a private aircraft, together with Aisha, six of the bodyguard cohort and various other assistants. The two bodyguards who assaulted Swiss officers and carried the unregistered handguns remain in detention in Geneva.

GOL COUNTER ATTACKS ON THE DIPLOMATIC FRONT ...

¶6. (C) Noting that he had been officially convoked by the Ministry of Foreign Affairs on five different occasions since July 15, von Muralt stressed that GOL officials were more focused on mitigating damage to the al-Qadhafi family reputation and saving face than on the fact that Hannibal's behavior had been egregious. Von Muralt's primary MFA interlocutors have been the MFA U/S-equivalent for European Affairs, Abdulati Obeidi, and the MFA Secretary for Adminstrative Affairs, Muhammad Kaim. MFA officials had presented to von Muralt a series of demarches and diplomatic notes accusing the Swiss government of having used excessive force (particularly with respect to detaining Hannibal's wife), of having violated Hannibal's diplomatic immunity, of having violated diplomatic protocol by not granting Libyan diplomats immediate consular access to him, and of deliberately seeking to embarrass Libya because of its "well-known" dislike of Arabs.

¶7. (C) Von Muralt noted that Swiss officers had only drawn their weapons because they were physically assaulted by armed bodyguards, that Hannibal was not/not entitled to diplomatic immunity (he entered Switzerland on a diplomatic passport but was not accredited to the Swiss Government as a diplomat), that Libyan diplomats were not entitled to immediate consular access

Libyan diplomats were not entitled to immediate consular access because he was not an accredited diplomat, and that Switzerland had a proud history of racial tolerance and diversity (one in five residents is a foreigner). (Note: Libyan MFA officials have insisted that Article 36 of the Vienna Conventions provides for immediate consular access; von Muralt said Switzerland's interpretation, based on international practice, was to provide access within four to six days. End note.)

... AND ATTACKS SWISS INTERESTS

¶8. (C) The GOL also moved swiftly to exact reprisals against Swiss interests in Libya. The Libyan People's Bureau (embassy-equivalent) in Bern ceased issuing visas to all Swiss travelers on July 17. GOL officials reduced Swiss Air's connections to Tripoli from three flights per week to one and Libya's Air Afriqiyah reduced its flights to Geneva from three flights per week to one. Swiss companies in Libya have been summoned for inspections of their registration documents and, in the case of Swiss nationals, checks of their residency permits. Two Swiss companies, ABB and Stukey Co., have been closed since July 15 for alleged irregularities in their registration papers and the Swiss national country representative for ABB has been in detention since July 19 on charges that his residency papers were not in order. Von Muralt estimated that another 20 Swiss companies were at risk of being shuttered unless the diplomatic impasse is resolved quickly. The GOL has provided a small detachment of National Police to guard the Swiss Embassy and Residence, and has suggested to von Muralt that angry Libyans, upset by Swiss treatment of Hannibal, could stage popular demonstrations against the Swiss mission.

HIGH-LEVEL NEGOTIATIONS UNDERWAY, BUT OUTCOME UNCLEAR

¶9. (C) Emphasizing that the Swiss government is keen to put the relationship back on an even keel, von Muralt nonetheless stressed that Switzerland "really doesn't need Libya for anything". There are 41 registered Swiss nationals in Libya, of whom 25 are dual Libyan-Swiss nationals. He suggested that while the Swiss Foreign Ministry was working to resolve the issue, there were limits to how much they were willing to concede. Swiss Foreign Minister Micheline Calmy-Rey spoke by telephone with Libyan Foreign Minister Abdulrahman Shalgham on July 22. Von Muralt said Shalgham insisted that Switzerland had violated the Vienna Conventions by not granting immediate consular access, but backed away from accusations by Aisha al-Qadhafi and other MFA officials that Swiss police had used undue force and that Swiss officials deliberately sought to embarrass Libya.

¶10. (C) A senior Swiss delegation is scheduled to travel to Tripoli on July 23 for talks to "smooth things over"; however, von Muralt noted that Hannibal and his wife are out on bail and are currently required to return to Geneva to stand trial. Should they fail to appear, the Swiss judge could issue an Interpol arrest warrant. If that were to happen, von Muralt speculated that the GOL would take "drastic measures" and the Swiss Embassy could be shuttered. Von Muralt suggested to MFA official Abdulati Obeidi on July 20 that the GOL retain good legal counsel and pursue an out-of-court settlement with the Tunisian and Moroccan who pressed the charges, which could obviate the need for Hannibal and his wife to appear before a court in Geneva. The Swiss are making contingency plans to quickly close their mission should that become necessary. The embassy has continued to operate normally since Hannibal's arrest, to include issuing visas, but may cease visa issuance if Libya does not quickly resume issuing visas to Swiss citizens. Von Muralt noted that the Swiss Embassy issues some 9,000 visas each year to Libyans.

¶11. (C) Comment: The GOL's reflexive efforts to attack Swiss commercial interests and cease issuing visas to Swiss citizens underscore the extent to which the regime treats business as an extension of politics and the sensitivity of anything to do with the al-Qadhafi family. Von Muralt dismissed the possibility that his mission would be threatened by angry Libyans. Noting that Switzerland is a large source of second-hand vehicles (a sizeable market in Libya) and a popular venue for medical care and banking for well-heeled Libyans, he said several non-official Libyans had privately expressed the wish that the Swiss had kept Hannibal, who is unpopular here, in custody. He also noted that the single remaining Swiss Air and Air Afriqiyah flights were booked with Libyan elites, who would not view favorably a complete cessation of direct air connections to Geneva. Hannibal's repeated falls from grace highlight the broad gulf between average Libyans, who view the al-Qadhafi family as unsophisticated upstarts from a historically inconsequential part of the country (Sirte) who routinely embarrass Libya, and senior regime officials, who view the state as an extension of the al-Qadhafi family empire. The Swedish ambassador, who is based in Tunis but accredited to Libya, told CDA on July 21 that the "deep-seated, visceral" hatred many Libyans feel for the al-Qadhafi family has grown in recent years to the point that he does not expect that one of al-Qadhafi's children will be able to succeed Muammar al-Qadhafi. He was posted in Tripoli in 1986-1990, and said the popular perception of the ruling family has deteriorated considerably since then, in part because al-Qadhafi's sons have comported themselves so poorly as they have come of age. End comment.

¶1. (S/NF) CDA convened an EAC meeting on July 21 to discuss recent threat reporting (reftel) and the attack on the U.S. Consulate in Istanbul. The following personnel attended: CDA, CONS, DAO, MGT, PAO, GRPO, RSO. The EAC considered recent threat reporting and the shooting attack in Istanbul, and their possible impact on Libya. GRPO contacts reported no additional specific threat information concerning U.S. or any other western interests in Libya beyond the non-specific information in reftel. The EAC concluded that Post's current security posture was appropriate and that it would reconvene as new information became available.

¶2. (S/NF) Local police and intelligence sources are aware of Post's ongoing concerns regarding threats to U.S. and western interests in Libya and in the region.

SUBJECT: A COMMERCIAL CAUTIONARY TALE: BECHTEL'S BID FOR SIRTE PORT PROJECT FALLS FLAT

CLASSIFIED BY: John T. Godfrey, CDA, U.S. Embassy - Tripoli, Dept of State.
REASON: 1.4 (b)

¶1. (C) Summary: An unsuccessful year-long bid by U.S. firm Bechtel to build a commercial port in the Libyan city of Sirte has shed light on how decisions about large foreign investment projects in Libya are made. Bechtel's bid went through several evolutions, including signing a memorandum of understanding with the Prime Minister and a resolution by Libya's the Prime Minister and a resolution by Libya's Cabinet-equivalent to give the company the contract. In the end, the contract evaporated after apparent late-innings intervention by senior regime figures. Despite a year's worth of effort, $1 million worth of expenses, numerous high-level visits, and formal decisions by the GOL to bless the contract, the company's efforts were ultimately unsuccessful, underscoring the fact that Libya's much-trumpeted bidding process is less than transparent, and that the GOL's formal structures do not have the final word on major foreign investment projects. The fact that an operator with Bechtel's savvy and deep pockets was ultimately unable to secure its contract serves as a cautionary tale for the many U.S. and western companies seeking to enter Libya's booming market. End summary.

PROMISING BEGINNINGS ...

¶2. (C) U.S. engineering and consulting giant Bechtel has just declared as dead a year-long attempt to secure a $1 billion cost-plus contract to build a commercial port in the Libyan city of Sirte. Bechtel began its pursuit of the Sirte port contract in July 2007, when senior Bechtel representative Charles Redman (strictly protect), former U.S. Ambassador to Germany, arrived in Tripoli for discussions at the invitation of the Qadhafi Development Foundation (QDF), a quasi-governmental entity headed by Saif al-Islam al-Qadhafi, son of Muammar al-Qadhafi. During the initial visit, QDF representatives encouraged Bechtel to bid on several small infrastructure projects so the company could "prove itself". Redman made it clear that Bechtel wanted, but did not need, business in Libya and had a record that spoke for itself. Eventually, QDF representatives invited Bechtel to execute two projects: a new commercial port facility at Sirte and management of an industrial city adjacent to the Ras Lanuf oil facility. The QDF proposed that Bechtel partner with the Libyan Economic and Social Development Fund (ESDF) to execute the Sirte Port project.

¶3. (C) This initial burst of positive energy dissipated over the next six months. Bechtel slowly made progress on a contract for the Sirte port project, but its relationship with General People's Committee (GPC) for Transportation, its primary interlocutor on the deal (apart from the QDF), became increasingly difficult. This primarily manifested itself in a lack of responsiveness on facilitation of visas for Bechtel representatives, prompting Bechtel to seek support from other quarters of the Government of Libya (GOL) to facilitate travel by its negotiators and technical staff. In November 2007, then Deputy Foreign Minister Muhammed Siala remarked publicly during a visit to Washington that Bechtel would not secure the Sirte port contract if Secretary Rice failed to visit Libya by year's end.

LEAD TO HIGH-PROFILE COMMITMENTS

¶4. (C) After months of go-slow negotiations, Bechtel experienced an apparent breakthrough in February, when Redman received an urgent call from Minister of Transportation Elmabruk, who asked that the company's team be in Sirte on February 25 to "sign the contract". Although the company was still in the midst of conducting a laborious due diligence review of the contract (key provisions of which had not been finalized), they were convinced to rush a delegation to Sirte in time for a signing event. At that event, Prime Minister al-Baghdadi al-Mahmoudi and Bechtel signed a memorandum of understanding (MOU) committing the two sides to finalizing the contract as soon as possible. In addition, the General People's Committee (Cabinet-equivalent) issued Decision #158 on March 3, which was effectively an announcement of contract terms that granted permission to the GPC for Transportation to sign a contract with Bechtel. Following these public steps by the GOL, Bechtel reported that the GPC for Transportation appeared to be working in earnest to finalize an English-language version of the contract.

RADIO SILENCE BROKEN BY BAD NEWS FROM SAIF AL-ISLAM'S INTERMEDIARY

TRIPOLI 00000595 002 OF 002

¶5. (C) With expectations running high that a final deal was imminent, Bechtel pressed on with negotiations and a fully-vetted contract was presented to the Transportation Minister in early May. From that point on, all communication with the QDF, GPC for Transportation and Libyan Ports Authority (another key player in the deal) went dead. Sensing that something was amiss, Bechtel representatives continued to inquire about that status of the contract, but received no response. On July 14, Abdulhakim el-Ghami, described as "an intermediary for a person very close to Saif al-Islam", called Redman to inform him that the port project had been canceled. (Note: Redman told us el-Ghami, who is based in Munich, appears to be a key conduit for Saif al-Islam's dealings with foreign companies. End note.) Bechtel received no explanation as to why the contract was cancelled, but el-Ghami encouraged the company to "seriously consider" undertaking a different, unspecified infrastructure development project.

¶6. (C) Comment: Bechtel's experience throws into stark relief the fact that economic and commercial decisions ostensibly finalized by even the most senior levels of the GOL can be overturned by influential elements operating outside the formal government structure. Libyan officials have made much of recent measures designed to ensure transparency and predictability in bids for commercial contracts; however, the reality is that contracts of any size, particularly those involving foreign companies, are subject to intense maneuvering by regime insiders jockeying to ensure that they company they happen to champion wins the prize. Bechtel's story also reinforces post's understanding of Saif al-Islam's key as a principal gatekeeper for large foreign investment projects in Libya, a process he manages through the QDF and the National Engineering Services and Supply Company (NESSCO - further details will be reported septel). The silver lining in this tale of woe is that Bechtel's power division has been awarded a project management job for construction of a new power plant outside Sirte; however, the sorry denouement of the company's efforts to secure the Sirte port contract have dampened its for seeking any new major projects in Libya in the near future and should serve as a cautionary tale for other U.S. companies considering major investment projects here.

SUBJECT: EUROPEAN OIL COMPANIES EXTEND CONTRACTS IN LIBYA

¶1.  (SBU) Summary: Libya's National Oil Corporation (NOC) has signed extensions for a pair of exploration and production signed extensions for a pair of exploration and production sharing agreements (EPSAs) with Spain's Repsol, France's Total, Austria's OMV, and Norway's Saga Petroleum, continuing its policy of redefining old contracts under the new EPSA IV framework. The joint investment commitment in the new deal should help boost Libyan production significantly in the years to come. End Summary.

¶2. (SBU) In a widely-anticipated move, a consortium of European oil companies has extended its contracts in Libya. A new EPSA agreement signed on July 17 with a four-company consortium operated by Spain's Repsol covers two blocks, NC115 and NC186, in the Marzuq Basin, and extends the duration of the contracts to 2032. This represents an additional 15 years for NC-115, and from five to nine years (depending on the specific fields) in block NC-186. The deal ensures the exploitation of the vast resources discovered in both blocks, whose remaining proven oil reserves at the end of 2007 totaled 765 million barrels.

¶3. (SBU) Within the new framework, the production share for the European consortium will be reduced from 25% to 13% for NC-115 and from 40% to 12% for NC-186. Under the former agreement, the production share was 75% for the NOC, 10% for Repsol, 7.5% for OMV, and 7.5% for Total in Block NC-115; and 60% for the NOC, 12.8% for Repsol, 9.6% for OMV, 9.6% for Total, and 8% for Saga. The new agreement represents 87% for NOC, 5.2% for Repsol, 3.9% for OMV, and 3.9% for Total for block NC-115. In block NC-186 the new percentages run 88% for the NOC, 3.84% for Repsol, 2.88% for OMV, 2.88% for Total and 2.4% for Saga. The new contract also includes a $1 billion signature bonus payable by the consortium over three years, and a gross investment requirement in excess of $4 billion, of which 50% will be covered by the NOC, in an effort to reach a steady-state production level of 380,000 barrels of oil per day.

¶4. (SBU) Comment: Repsol, OMV, Total and Saga Petroleum have followed other major actors in Libya in acceding to pressure by the NOC to convert to the new EPSA-IV framework, which features significantly reduced production shares for international oil companies (IOC's). The revised deals have allowed IOC's to guarantee access to significant deposits of high-quality oil while also securing new field development opportunities jointly funded by the NOC. The expected increase in production under this deal should make a significant contribution to the NOC4s aspiration of doubling Libya's oil output to more than 3 million barrels per day in the coming years. End comment.

SUBJECT: LIBYA IMPOSES NEW CURRENCY REQUIREMENT FOR TOURISTS

REF: 07 TRIPOLI 987

¶1. (SBU) Post received January 3 a copy of a note sent from the GOL's Civil Aviation Committee to airlines announcing that as of 7 January, all tourist visa holders -- except bearers of Egyptian and Tunisian passports -- will be required to present USD 1000 or the equivalent in another convertible currency as a requirement for entry to Libya. On January 6, the Consular Section was able to confirm with the MFA's Head of Consular Affairs, Ahmed Ameish, that the law would take effect January 7.

Ameish stated that travelers checks, bank statements and credit cards would not/not be accepted; the requirement is for "currency". (Note: The Egyptian and Tunisian Embassies have confirmed that their citizens are not/not subject to the new requirement. End note.)

¶2. (SBU) Similar to the passport translation requirement (reftel), this law has apparently been on the books for a number of years, but was not enforced in the recent past. Ameish provided no reason for the change.

¶3. (SBU) Foreign airlines (British, KLM, Swissair, Lufthansa) indicate that they will not/not be checking currency holdings at the time of check-in at European airports. As in the case of the passport translation, it is not clear to us, other diplomatic missions or the airlines how the currency requirement will be implemented. We will likely only obtain a clearer picture over time as the parameters of who is turned back shape up. The U.K. and Italian Embassies are advising on their respective Foreign Office websites that citizens from their countries traveling on tourist visas comply with the new rule.

¶4. (SBU) The Embassy received notification of this requirement via a copy of the Civil Aviation notice that was sent to airlines, which Swissair forwarded to us. We received no notification from the GOL. We learned from the U.K. Embassy on January 6 that the Libyan People's Bureau in Rome notified EU embassies there about ten days ago that the new requirement would be implemented. The EU Embassies in Tripoli learned about the currency requirement shortly after the New Year's holiday from their counterparts in Rome and have since met in Tripoli to discuss options for engaging the GOL.

¶5. (SBU) Comment: There is considerable speculation as to the reasons for implementation of the rule. The U.K. and Italian missions are convinced that the new strictures will be broadly applied; the German and Dutch missions have insisted they will not apply to European and North American travelers. Citing unconfirmed reports, the latter contend that the strictures are designed to prevent more sub-Saharan African guest workers from entering Libya. While it is not clear which sub-Saharan Africans are able to enter Libya visa-free and which obtain tourist visas on arrival, the Civil Aviation note specifies that even citizens of countries exempted from entry visa requirements are subject to the new rule (except, again, Egyptians and Tunisians). As with the passport translation issue, the MFA was unable to articulate any reason for the currency requirement (beyond that it was already on the books), nor did it provide any advance notice to missions in Libya. Both changes will be enforced by Immigration, rather than the MFA's Consular Affairs Department. End comment.

SUBJECT: EXBS AIRPORT TRAINING PROCEEDS DESPITE SECURITY SERVICE OBSTRUCTION

REF: (A) TRIPOLI 144, (B) TRIPOLI 588

CLASSIFIED BY: Chris Stevens, CDA, Embassy Tripoli, Department of State.
REASON: 1.4 (b), (d)

¶1. (C) Summary. On July 20-22, a three-member Customs and Border Protection team traveled to Libya to provide airport security training to approximately 30 Libyan customs, security, and counter-narcotics officials at Tripoli International Airport. The program was enthusiastically received by the participants; however, senior elements within the security services erected significant obstacles to the training program, including delaying visa issuance for the U.S. team for several including delaying visa issuance for the U.S. team for several weeks, confiscating all training materials and physically preventing the distribution of written course materials to program participants, denying "permission" for Embassy officials to travel with the visiting U.S. team to Benghazi for a second course module, and attempting to strong-arm the trainers into providing a written "assessment" of Libya's current airport security posture. End summary.

U.S. TRAINS 30 AIRPORT OFFICIALS UNDER EXBS AUSPICES

¶2. (C) On July 20-22, a three-member delegation from the Department of Homeland Security's Customs and Border Protection (DHS/CDP) directorate traveled to Libya to provide classroom and practical training to approximately 30 Libyan customs, security, and counter-narcotics officials under Export Control and Border Security (EXBS) auspices. The course, requested by the Libyan authorities on the margins of an EXBS port security program in Tripoli in February, focused on airport security at Libya's largest airport, Tripoli International Airport (ref A). The course included modules on passenger screening, luggage screening, behavioral analysis, and targeting / threat assessment. The course consisted of one and half days of classroom instruction in a conference room at the airport and one and a half days of practical "live" exercises on the airport floor. The acting director of the airport, Izzeddin al-Naas, attended the training's opening session while a senior official within the uniformed police service at the airport participated in the entire program.

SECURITY SERVICES ERECT NUMEROUS OBSTACLES

¶3. (C) Despite high-level political support for the EXBS airport course from the Libyan side, security services erected numerous obstacles to the smooth implementation of the training course. Once scheduling and visa difficulties were sorted out (a process which took several months) and dates for the visit were agreed, Post received a diplomatic note stating that Embassy officers would not/not be permitted to travel to Benghazi to provide logistical support to the U.S. delegation during the three-day portion of the course at Benghazi International Airport (ref B). (Note: Post informed the Libyan authorities via diplomatic that two officers would accompany the DHS/CBP team to Benghazi. End note.) The Libyan authorities did not/not offer a reason for denying travel permission. Post informed the Ministry of Public Security (General People's Committee for Public Security, or GPCPS) that, if the GOL refused to authorize Embassy officers to accompany the team to Benghazi, Post would be forced to cancel the Benghazi part of the program; while GPCPS offered to "intervene" with the security services, they were unable to reverse the decision and Post was forced to cancel the three-day Benghazi course.

¶4. (C) On July 20, the DHS/CBP trainers and Poloff arrived at Tripoli International Airport to begin the training program. The director of airport security met the officers outside the classroom and informed them that the trainers would not/not be permitted to distribute written training materials to any course participants until security officials had had sufficient time to "review" the course materials. Security officials confiscated 50 training manuals and several boxes of gifts the trainers had brought to distribute to the participants, including DHS hats, keychains, and small pocket tools such as screwdrivers and pocket knives. Poloff immediately requested meetings with the civilian director of the airport and the director of uniformed police at the airport (who was the senior Libyan participant in the course) to request their assistance releasing the course materials; both officials promised their assistance and conceded deep disappointment with the security services' decision to confiscate the course materials. Despite repeated assurances that they would release the course materials, security officials did not/not allow the trainers to distribute any written materials throughout the three-day course. At the course's conclusion, the director of airport security physically locked all written course materials in his office to prevent their distribution to the Libyan participants.

¶5. (C) On July 21, the director of airport police apologetically informed Poloff that he did not/not have the authority to grant Poloff permission to accompany the U.S. team on a one-hour walking tour of the Tripoli airport. An External Security (ESO) official demanded that Poloff accompany him to a security office at the airport and copied down details of his Libyan diplomatic ID. After 30 minutes, the official agreed Poloff could participate in the tour; however, a total of five security officials accompanied Poloff at distances of less than five feet throughout the orientation tour. In addition, on July 22, the director of airport security approached the U.S. delegation to demand that they produce a detailed, Arabic-language report praising security procedures at Tripoli International Airport prior to the team's departure from Libya. The director stressed that the report must be received the same day and must provide a detailed "official" U.S. assessment of screening and interdiction procedures at the airport.

¶6. (C) Comment. While mid-level officials within the Libyan law enforcement community appear genuinely interested in cooperation and training programs, the GOL's designated authority for law enforcement training -- the GPCPS training department -- does not/not have the authority to issue visas to U.S. trainers, to facilitate in-country travel for visiting experts, or to organize access to Libyan government facilities for U.S. delegations. The training department has expressed interest in an EXBS land border security program targeting narcotics trafficking and human smuggling along Libya's porous southern border with Niger; however, Post's experience is that security services will retain control over the pace of U.S. law enforcement cooperation in Libya. The EXBS airport program, while warmly received by the 30 Libyan participants, should serve as a cautionary tale for hopes of ramped-up law enforcement cooperation under both EXBS and ATA auspices in the near future. End comment.

AVIATION

¶1. Flight Safety Foundation Workshop in Libya: The Flight Safety Foundation's CAAG (Controlled Flight Into Terrain and Approach and Landing Accident Reduction Action Group) brought its internationally regarded Approach and Landing Accident Reduction (ALAR) Tool Kit workshop to Tripoli, Libya last week. Libyan aviation professionals said that this was the first time a non-governmental international aviation safety event has been held in Libya. The workshop was hosted by Afriqiyah Airways of Libya and organized by Capt. Samir Abussada, a Libyan commercial pilot. More than 50 aviation professionals from Chad, Egypt, Libya and Tunisia attended the workshop. They represented civil aviation authorities, air traffic management organizations and several airlines in the region. [Flight Safety Foundation, 7/21/08]

CONSTRUCTION

¶2. Seokwang Gets Contract: South Korean builder Seokwang Construction Co Ltd has announced that it has won a 493 billion won ($475.5 million) order to build houses in Libya. Seokwang said in a filing to the Korea Exchange that it had secured the deal from SMI-Hyundai Corporation Ltd., which has a well-established presence in Libya. [Reuters, 7/3/08]

¶3. Impregilo finalizes Libya contract to build university centers: Impregilo SpA said it has finalized contracts to build three university centers in Libya after the Libyan government approved construction plans. Impregilo said that the 'initial' authorization covered three buildings for a total of approximately 400 million euros. Impregilo said work will start on the three centers in the next few months and is expected to be completed by 2011. The contracts were signed by Impregilo Lidco, which is 60 percent owned by Impregilo and 40 percent by Libyan Development Company and the ODAC (Organization for Development of the Administrative Centers). [Thomson Financial, 7/7/08]

¶4. Spain's Sacyr Signs Libya Deal: Spanish construction firm Sacyr Vallehermoso has announced that it has signed three building deals in Libya worth 600 million euros through its subsidiary Svlidco. The contracts involve the construction of public service networks to provide gas, drinking water, telephone services and road construction in the cities of Bengazhi and El Beyda. Svlidco, which is 60 percent owned by Sacyr and 40 percent owned by the Libyan government, hopes to sign the final contracts within six to eight months, according to a company statement. [Reuters, 7/14/08]

¶5. Hill International Signs Contract: U.S. firm Hill International announced today that it has received a contract from the Libyan Organization for the Development of Administrative Centers (ODAC) to provide pre-construction and design management services on behalf of the Libyan Ministry for Higher Education in connection with 27 new university campuses across Libya. The one-year contract has an estimated value to Hill of approximately $11.5 million. The overall $5 billion university construction program is expected to be completed by December 2011. The campuses will range in size and diversity, accommodating 2,500 to 13,500 students in various regions throughout the country. [Businesswire, 7/15/08]

¶6. Movenpick to Open Resort in Libya: Movenpick Hotels & Resorts has signed a management contract with Libya's Bank of Commerce & Development for an urban resort hotel with over 500 units to open in Tripoli in 2010. Movenpick Hotel Diar Assalam will be situated in the most upmarket residential district of Tripoli as part of a multipurpose development whose planned features include a commercial center and a yacht club. To be located directly on the waterfront, the upscale resort will offer 320 rooms and suites, nine villas as well as 213 serviced apartments. Among these are several restaurants, a conference hall accommodating 400 delegates as well as a spa complex. [Libyainvestment.com, 7/18/08]

¶7. Libya to Expand Cement Production: Libya's government is planning to expand cement production to 15 million tons by 2011 from 8 million, a government official has told Reuters. The Tripoli government awarded licenses to four foreign companies -- out of 24 applicants -- earlier this month to set up cement-related operations to exploit natural resources including iron ore, lime and clay, according to Khalifa Ahmed al Badr, head of the state-owned National Mining Corporation. Badr did not name the four foreign firms which won the licenses to operate in Libya but said these companies have to form partnerships with Libyan firms whether state-owned or private ones. "The National Mining Corporation fixed the minimum share of the Libyan side in the partnership operation at 50 percent," said Badr, adding the bid winners have also to pay 25,000 dinars ($21,150) as upfront payments. [Reuters, 7/22/08]

REGIONAL ISSUES

¶8. Energy projects with Egypt: Libya is planning an oil refinery and a natural gas pipeline in Egypt, helping boost investment in its Arab neighbor to $10 billion in the next two years, its prime minister has said. "We have now about $2 billion (of investments) and we expect that within a period of two years maximum this will reach $10 billion," al-Baghdadi Ali al-Mahmoudi told a news conference. "It was agreed that an oil refinery will be built west of Alexandria with Libyan funding and it will be used for Libyan crude," he added. The refinery would have a capacity of 250,000 barrels per day, Mahmoudi said, without giving further details. Plans also included a natural gas pipeline between the Egyptian coastal city of Alexandria and the Libyan city of Tobruk, Mahmoudi said. He did not say if the pipeline would carry Egyptian natural gas or Libyan natural gas or say when it would begin operating. Other investments could include agriculture, real estate, and further energy projects, Mahmoudi said. [Reuters, 7/3/08]

¶9. Portugal and Libya ink accords: OPEC-member Libya and Portugal have signed two accords to boost cooperation in the oil and gas industry and allow the north African country to carry out investments inside and outside Portugal, Libya's official news agency Jana said. The two countries signed a framework agreement and a memorandum of understanding on Saturday in Tripoli during a visit by Portuguese Prime Minister Jose Socrates. The framework agreement seeks to encourage cooperation in oil and natural gas, especially in the areas of exploration, drilling, distribution, refinery and oil supply. The agreement also aims to boost bilateral trade and invited Portuguese companies to carry out projects in Libya in sectors such as housing, renewable energy, water purification, sanitation and tourism. The memorandum of understanding stipulates that the Libyan Investment Corporation (LIC) explore the possibilities of investment on its own, or in partnership with the Portuguese Ministry of Economy, in tourist, real estate and petrochemical projects both inside and outside Portugal, Jana said. [Reuters, 7/20/08]

OIL & GAS

¶10. Gazprom in Libya talks: Gazprom, Russia's state-controlled energy company, has offered to buy all oil and gas available for export from Libya, threatening to grab greater control of Europe's energy supplies. Chief Executive Officer Alexei Miller made the proposal to Libyan leader Moammar Qadhafi during a visit to Tripoli on July 9, the Moscow-based company said in a statement. Libya exported about 1.53 million barrels of oil a day in 2006, almost enough to supply Italy. Gazprom considers the country its priority partner in North Africa and said it has registered a unit called Gazprom Libya in Tripoli. Less than a month ago the company opened its first African office in neighboring Algeria. [Bloomberg, 7/10/08]

¶11. Libya to Cut Oil Production Because of Pipeline Work: Libya will cut output by 5.7 percent because of pipeline maintenance, trimming supplies at a time of near-record prices. The repairs will shut down 100,000 barrels a day of production this week, Shokri Ghanem, the country's top oil official, said in telephone interview. Libya has already idled Total SA's 75,000 barrel-a-day al-Jurf field after a drilling accident in May. [Bloomberg, 7/15/08]

¶12. Star Consortium concludes $2 billion Libya deal: The Star Consortium, comprised of UAE-based Al Ghurair Investments' subsidiary TransAsia Gas International and ETA Ascon Star Group's Star Petro Energy, has concluded a $2 billion deal with the National Oil Company of Libya to set up a joint venture company to own and upgrade its Ras Lanuf refinery. The proposed Joint Venture Company will be incorporated and registered in one of the free zones in Dubai, with offices in Ras Lanuf, Tripoli and Dubai. [Libyainvestment.com, 7/15/08]

¶13. Houston-based NATCO Awarded Contract: NATCO has announced that it has been awarded a $24.9 million contract to provide membrane separation technology and equipment to capture CO2 for re-injection in Bouri, Libya's largest offshore oil field. Eni Oil Limited Libyan Branch operates the Bouri production platforms in the Mediterranean Sea, one of which will house the pre-treatment equipment and membrane systems intended to treat more than 160MM SCFD gas. [Reuters, 7/16/08]

¶14. Yara Deal with NOC: Libya's National Oil Corporation (NOC) and Yara International ASA of Norway, have completed a joint venture for the production and marketing of mineral fertilizer. This partnership agreement was signed on July 17 by Dr Shokri M. Ghanem for and on behalf of the NOC, Mr Mustafa Zarti on behalf of the Libyan Investment Authority, and Dr. Thorleif Enger, President and CEO of Yara International ASA. The planned Joint Venture will be owned 50% by YARA and 50% by the Libyan party (National Oil Corporation and Libyan Investment Authority) which includes the ammonia and urea plants located at Marsa el Brega in Libya, presently owned by the NOC. It is planned that the newly formed joint venture will commence the operation of the plants during the month of September 2008. This partnership agreement covers upgrading the existing production capacity at Marsa el Brega in Libya, and to study the feasibility of adding new fertilizer plants. [NOC website, 7/18/08]

¶15. Enppi, Petrojet Win $1.4 Billion Gas-Pipeline Contract in Libya: Petroleum Projects & Technical Consultations Co. (Petrojet) and Engineering for the Petroleum and Process Industries (Enppi) have reportedly won a $1.4 billion contract to expand Libya's natural-gas distribution network. The two Egyptian state-run companies will extend Libya's gas pipeline network by 1,000 kilometers (620 miles), the Egyptian Oil Ministry said today in a statement on its Web site. The contract is part of a Libyan project to link 500,000 homes to the gas network in five years, it said. Egypt and Libya also plan to link their electricity grids to facilitate power trading during periods of peak consumption, according to the statement. [Bloomberg, 7/18/08]

¶16. Libya wins better terms for oil field contracts: Four of Europe's biggest energy groups have rewritten two large oilfield contracts with Libya, agreeing to significantly reduced terms for the right to keep working there. Total of France, StatoilHydro of Norway, Spain's Repsol and Austria's OMV agreed to pay a $1 billion signing bonus for the contracts, which extend their stakes in the projects for another 10-15 years to 2032. The onshore fields, which lie 700km south of Tripoli, produce 300,000 barrels a day, with output expected to rise to 380,000 b/d in 2012. The two contracts cover block NC115, in which Total and OMV have 30 per cent stakes and Repsol the remaining 40 per cent. In the other block, Total and OMV each hold a 24 per cent stake, Repsol has 32 per cent stake and StatoilHydro holds the remaining 20 percent. [Reuters, 7/18/08]

¶17. Distance Learning Agreement signed between NOC and IHRDC: On Thursday 27th July 2008, the Libyan NOC signed a distance learning agreement with Houston-based International Human Resources Development Corporation (IHRDC) which is organized and authorized by British Petroleum (BP). Under this Agreement, IHRDC will install a distance learning system, which will allow 300 users access at the same time through NOC's main domain. 150 licenses are to be given to national companies, as well as NOC's affiliates, in order to expand the user's base of the distance learning process. IHRDC will provide training and workshops on the application of such system. [NOC website,

¶18. Verenex Makes Find: Verenex Energy, Inc., the Canadian explorer that operates in North Africa and France, has made its seventh oil find in Libya's western region of Ghadames. The exploration well, called 4/47-1A, tested at flow-rates between 1,399 and 1,535 barrels a day, according to Libya's state-run NOC in a statement on its website. Under a 30-year production-sharing agreement signed in 2005 by Verenex, Indonesia's PT Medco Energi International and Libya, the two foreign companies will take 13.7 percent of any output and the North African state 86.3 percent. Verenex is the operator of the concession. Medco said in February that all six wells drilled in area 47 had found oil, and that the concession held potential reserves of 1 billion barrels with a potential daily output of 75,000 barrels a day. [Bloomberg, 7/28/08]

¶19. Libyan Oil Shipments Resume with Switzerland: According to Head of the Swiss Oil Association Rolf Hartl, Tripoli has resumed oil supplies to Switzerland with its own ships, reversing a July 24 decision to halt shipments. A Libyan tanker arrived in Genoa with 80,000 tones of crude oil which will be transferred to the Swiss refinery of Collombey through an oil pipeline. Two Swiss citizens detained in Libya immediately after the arrest of Hannibal al-Qadhafi have been released, though they are not allowed to leave the country. The two work for a Swiss company in Libya, and were officially arrested for violation of immigration regulations. After 10 days in prison, they are now in the Swiss embassy in Tripoli, waiting for authorization to leave. [AGI, 7/30/08]

¶20. Boots & Coots signs hydraulic workover and prevention contract in Libya: Boots & Coots International Well Control of Houston, Texas has announced it has signed a multi-service contract with Libya's Harouge Oil Operations Company. The new contract, valued at close to US$15 million for a two year period, with optional one year extensions, provides for one hydraulic workover unit and a Safeguard prevention well control specialist for Harouge's Amal field. The hydraulic workover and prevention services provided under the contract give Harouge in-house first responder capabilities and will help the oil company achieve its field maintenance and production objectives. Boots & Coots currently performs services under hydraulic workover/snubbing and/or Safeguard contracts in the North African neighboring countries, Algeria and Egypt, as well as in West Africa, the Middle-East, Venezuela, India, Oman and domestically in the US. SUBJECT: A RIVER RUNS THROUGH IT: A CASE STUDY IN LIBYAN INFRASTRUCTURE MANAGEMENT

REASON: 1.4 (d), (e)

¶1. (C) Summary: Libyan authorities are scrambling to address the side effects of a veritable river of untreated wastewater running through downtown Tripoli in an area near Muammar al-Qadhafi's compound. The project, and the urgency with which the government is seeking to address it, sheds light on the broader wastewater problem afflicting Libya and the government's ad hoc efforts to address the issue. The focus on mitigating the stench near al-Qadhafi's compound, as opposed to protecting the broader public's health, is also telling. The belated the broader public's health, is also telling. The belated effort to tackle water and wastewater issues could create lucrative business opportunities for U.S. engineering and construction companies. End summary.

¶2. (C) Econoff met with a senior representative of the Biwater company in late July to discuss progress on their Libyan wastewater projects. Biwater Construction Limited is a Surrey, U.K.-based firm currently engaged in a turn-key program for the Libyan Public Works Authority to redevelop four wastewater treatment plants centered around the eastern Libyan city of al-Bayda. Econoff's interlocutor is a senior-level officer in the company.

SOMETHING IS ROTTEN IN TRIPOLI ...

¶3. (C) During a broader discussion of Libya's infrastructure needs, the Biwater representative said the Tripoli Public Works Authority recently approached Biwater with an urgent proposal that the company fix a problem stemming from a 1.8 meter diameter, 25 km-long pipe that runs through Tripoli. In particular, Libyan authorities are seized with repairs to a roughly 1 km stretch located close to Tripoli's city center, a section that runs parallel to Muammar al-Qadhafi's "Baab al-Azziziya" compound.

¶4. (C) The crux of the problem is that this pipe is leaking sewage and associated gases, and the smell has become decidedly pungent inside the al-Qadhafi compound. This has prompted panic among local authorities, who have been told that al-Qadhafi intends to spend a substantial portion of the holy month of Ramadan (which starts on/about September 1) at the Baab al-Azziziya compound. The Public Works Authority has been ordered to get rid of the smell by any means possible, and it is now scrambling to find a foreign contractor willing to take on the job. Senior GOL officials have apparently been tasked with fixing the problem, lending great urgency to the so far fruitless search for a foreign contractor. The companies approached by the GOL, including Biwater, have been told that they can "have whatever (future) contracts they want" if they can fix the odorous problem.

A RIVER (OF SEWAGE) RUNS THROUGH IT

¶5. (C) The large-diameter pipe, constructed of concrete and asbestos, was laid 4 meters underground in a natural wadi (ravine) more than 30 years ago. Although it was designed and intended to be used to convey rainwater runoff from Tripoli's occasional storms, the local municipality and private Libyans have over time run thousands of sewage lines into it. The combination of fecal matter and heat generates sulphuric acid, which has degraded the integrity of the pipe. Libyan authorities estimate that there are six areas of leakage along the pipe's length, but given the age of the pipes and the profusion of sewage connections, Biwater assesses that there are many more leaks. Over time, the pipe's capacity has been increasingly taxed; it is now completely full, with an estimated average flow-rate of about 1 foot per second. Given standard engineering assumptions for pressure and fluid density, it is estimated that the pipe is now dumping approximately 1 million liters of untreated sewage a day into the Mediterranean Sea.

¶6. (C) Since the pipe was never intended to handle sewage, it empties directly into the sea along a stretch of coast just a few hundred yards west of the city's most heavily-peopled public beach. The stench from the flow and the damage to water and sand are obvious. Given the pipe's age and the pressure it is under, any attempt to fix it carries considerable risk of a major rupture, with attendant health threats for nearby residents and environmental impact. The Biwater representative described this as a looming "humanitarian crisis" for the city" and complained that Libyan authorities have so far only evinced concern with fixing the section of pipe adjacent to al-Qadhafi's compound, rather than addressing the broader issue of establishing a viable sewage and wastewater treatment plan for the city.

CLEAR EVIDENCE OF A LARGER PROBLEM

¶7. (C) Biwater estimates that there are eight major wastewater pipes currently running through Tripoli and into the sea. Most of these are linked to one of Tripoli's three main water treatment plants, but two of these are largely non-functional, and the third is running at half-capacity. Biwater estimates that roughly 10 million liters of untreated sewage is dumped into the sea just off Libya's coast every day. Representatives of U.S. engineering company AECOM, after conducting an initial Libyan wastewater treatment assessment in 2007, told Econoff that they had identified a total of 46 untreated sewage effluent sources nationwide with the help of Libyan authorities. Libya does not currently have the capacity to recycle wastewater for agricultural or other uses, so all water (mostly sourced from the ancient desert aquifers tapped by the Great Manmade River Project) that goes down the drain is routed directly into the Mediterranean Sea. Combined with subsidized rates for water usage and a lack of conservation measures, Libyans on average use twice as much water per annum as the average EU citizen, according to Biwater's statistics. The net result is that Libya, an extremely arid country, is spending considerable sums to pump water from the desert to the more densely populated littoral, where it is used once and then dumped into the sea.

¶8. (C) Comment: More than thirty years of neglect and poor infrastructure management have generated major needs for the redevelopment of Libya's infrastructure. U.S. companies are already starting to see some business opportunities to address these problems, and sizeable further projects are under discussion. The complexity and scope of these problems call for high-technology, high-end engineering solutions. U.S. firms, which Libyan officials have shown a particular interest in engaging in this sector, should be well-placed to tackle these engineering challenges and to secure potentially secure lucrative contracts to do so. End comment.

REASON: 1.4 (b), (d)

¶1. (C) Summary: Libya's maritime business, in which Hannibal al-Qadhafi (son of Muammar al-Qadhafi) plays a large role, appears to be another key sector of Libya's economy that effectively falls under the al-Qadhafi family's sway. Projected increases in Libya's oil and gas production in the next 5-8 years are expected to generate concomitant growth in the maritime component of hydrocarbon transportation and production. Libya's private and state-run companies, which have a majority of that business, are expected to grow and retain their control of that lucrative sector. The use of government funding to capitalize Hannibal's "private" maritime transportation company, together with the fact that the national maritime transportation in which he plays a large role quickly halted Libyan oil shipments to Switzerland in response to Hannibal's recent detention in Geneva, highlight the close integration of private and public interests in many of Libya's key economic entities. Despite the ostensibly egalitarian nature of al-Qadhafi's "Jamahiriya", the reality is that the al-Qadhafi family and its close political allies own outright or have a considerable stake in most things worth owning, buying or selling in Libya. End summary.

¶2. (C) Econoff recently met with Talal Arebi, Chairman and General Manager of the Mariner for Maritime Transportation, Ltd. company to discuss Libya's oil and gas shipping industry, and to glean information about the ownership structure of Mariner and the General National Maritime Transportation Company (GNMTC). Mariner is reported to be owned and controlled by Hannibal al-Qadhafi, son of Libyan leader Muammar al-Qadhafi. The GNMTC is nominally state-owned, although Hannibal reportedly has a sizeable stake in and effectively controls it. The GNMTC was publicly linked to Hannibal during the Libya-Switzerland contretemps over his recent arrest and detention in Bern (refs A, B); the state-run company announced shortly thereafter that it was halting all oil shipments to Switzerland (Ref C).

MARINER ON THE GROW ...

¶3. (C) Mariner was established in 2000 in Cyprus, and merged shortly thereafter with unnamed Libyan company in a joint venture structure. It initially served as a broker between Libya's National Oil Corporation (NOC) and European firms for offshore oilfield transportation and shipping. The company subsequently expanded its services to include direct chartering of vessels. By 2003, it had purchased its first oil product storage vessel, adding a second the following year. With these two ships in hand, Mariner began to service offshore oil rigs operated by TOTAL (France) and Eni (Italy) in Libyan waters. The company now has three major areas of operation: offshore oil/gas platform support, shipping management and clean (i.e., refined) oil product transportation from Libya to foreign ports.

... AND SO FAR A NEAR-MONOPOLY PLAYER

¶4. (C) According to Arebi, Mariner now provides up to 75% of the NOC's requirements for transporting clean products to market, primarily in Europe. It is seeking to further expand its offshore support business by adding another 10-15 supply vessels to match the boom in offshore drilling that is expected to occur in the next several years. Arebi flatly stated that Mariner has no Libyan competition; however, it does compete with Italian and French companies for the offshore support business, and primarily Greek and Greek-Cypriot firms in the oil transportation sector. Addressing the role of Maltese companies, Arebi said Malta's primary competitive advantage was its shipyard and some re-supply capabilities, but noted that Maltese firms were limited because they typically did not own their own vessels.

¶5. (C) Asked about the company's financing, Arebi stressed that Mariner is "an entirely private company" that draws on foreign banks to underwrite major loans. Regarding political support by the Libyan government and/or regime figures (i.e., Hannibal al-Qadhafi), Arebi was coy, allowing only that the company has "enjoyed high-level support". He conceded that such support had been critical in getting the company launched, particularly with respect to gaining access to decisionmakers at the NOC and its subsidiaries, particularly Brega. He maintained that Mariner did not/not receive any government funding; however, a contact at the National Engineering and Supply Services Company (NESSCO) told us recently that Mariner had received financial support from the NOC as recently as late 2006. Separately, a prominent member of Libya's small community of elite businessmen told P/E Chief that the initial request for funds to capitalize Mariner had coincided with a decision by Muammar al-Qadhafi to steer Hannibal, who has had a checkered past, towards business pursuits in the hope that it would temper his behavior. (Note: The use of government funds to capitalize entities owned/controlled by al-Qadhafi's children has become common practice. Credible reports suggest that Muhammad, Saif al-Islam and Saadi al-Qadhafi have all benefited from considerable government financing and political backing in their business endeavors. End note.)

ANOTHER ANGLE: THE GNMTC AND LIBYAN NAVY

¶6. (C) In addition to Mariner, Hannibal al-Qadhafi is also reported to have a controlling interest in Libya's GNMTC. Hannibal's precise role in the company is unclear. He is decribed as a "consultant" in some sources; others describe him as playing a key management role in the company, particularly with respect to procurement decisions. According to its website, the GNMTC has a fleet of five crude oil, three "clean product" and two liquid petroleum gas (LPG) tankers in its fleet. GNMTC's operating capital was recently expanded to 600 million Libyan dinars (about $480 million), in addition to a new government-backed loan for $350 million to purchase an additional nine tankers. Opposition websites document alleged instances in which Hannibal has used his influence over the GNMTC to establish himself up as a broker for the purchase of vessels, thereby reaping millions of dollars worth of personal profit. Separate reporting (ref D) also address his Mariner equities and a controlling interest in Libyan naval contracts.

¶7. (C) Comment: Hannibal's stake in Mariner and prominent role in the GNMTC afford another example of the kleptocratic nature of al-Qadhafi's regime. While the Jamahiriya political ideology espoused by Muammar al-Qadhafi owes an intellectual debt to socialism and includes hefty doses of pseude-egalitarian rhetoric, the reality is that the al-Qadhafi family and its political loyalists own outright or have a considerable stake in most things worth owning, buying or selling in Libya (ref E). The extent and nature of the family's economic activities are deliberately obscured to help deflect public scrutiny and allegations of corruption; however, Hannibal's stake in Libya's maritime sector - like those of his siblings in other industries - is an open secret in Libya's small, closed society. The quick decision by the GNMTC to halt oil shipments to Switzerland in response to Hannibal's detention in Geneva throws into stark relief the seamless private-public nature of many of Libya's key economic entities, a reality that will complicate nascent efforts to encourage economic reform and greater transparency. End comment.

¶1. (C) UK Embassy PolOff told P/E Chief on August 10 that HMG's Embassy in Tripoli had recently received a request from the Foreign and Commonwealth Office to vet a request for a license to export to Libya a sizeable quantity of automatic rifles. UK company York Guns, acting as the intermediary between an unidentified Ukrainian arms manufacturer and procurement officials at Libya's Temporary People's Committee for Defense (MinDefense-equivalent), has requested an export license to deliver 130,000 Kalashnikov automatic rifles (NFI on model) to Libya in the fourth quarter of 2008. According to UK PolOff, it is not clear what the rifles would be used for; attempts to solicit further information from York Guns representatives and Government of Libya (GOL) officials have "raised more questions than they answered".

¶2. (C) He said the UK had received no answer as to whether the weapons would be used to equip Libyan military units, and in any event was skeptical that such would be the case given the quantity involved. (Note: Information available to the DATT suggest that Libya's armed forces comprise approximately 90,000 personnel, of which some 60,000 are in the ground forces. The London-based International Institute for Strategic Studies puts the total number of military personnel at 76,000. End note.) UK PolOff noted that the UK is concerned that the intention may be to re-export the weapons, particularly to armed rebel factions backed by Khartoum and/or Ndjamena in the Chad/Sudan conflict. He thought the license request would not be approved.

¶3. (SBU) In a similar case reported in open source media in April, Italian police arrested a number of Italian arms traffickers in February 2007 who were finalizing arrangements for the delivery of 500,000 Chinese-manufacture T-56 automatic rifles to Libya. The 500,000 represented the initial tranche of a deal that was to have included one million automatic rifles and 10 million rounds of ammunition. Media reports and Italian contacts indicated that Italian authorities concluded from their investigation that the weapons were to have been re-exported from Libya to Chad and Sudan.

¶4. (C) Comment: The fact that York Guns and GOL officials have been vague about the intended end-use of the 130,000 Kalashnikov rifles raises potentially troubling questions about the extent to which Libya is still involved in supplying military materiel to parties involved in the Chad/Sudan conflict. End comment.

TRIPOLI 00000666 001.5 OF 002

CLASSIFIED BY: Chris Stevens, CDA, Embassy Tripoli, Department of State.
REASON: 1.4 (b), (d)

¶1. (C) Summary: Reaction among ordinary Libyans and well-informed contacts to news that the U.S. and Libya finalized a comprehensive claims settlement agreement has been enthusiastic. Coverage in state-owned media has been positive but limited, in part to minimize questions about the parameters of the compensation package and potential criticism from old guard elements. Some informed contacts have characterized the agreement as a "grand opening" in U.S.-Libyan bilateral relations, as compared to the "soft opening" between the re-establishment of diplomatic ties in 2004 and the signing of the claims agreement in 2008. There are high expectations in some quarters that the U.S. will seek to capitalize on the new tenor of the relationship to press Muammar al-Qadhafi to open further political space - particularly with respect to respect for human rights, freedom of the press and an expanded role for civil society - in what remains a tightly-controlled society. End summary.

OFFICIAL MEDIA REACTION POSITIVE, BUT NOT EXTENSIVE

¶2. (C) The reaction of state-owned media and the public to news of the comprehensive claims settlement agreement signed on August 14 during the visit to Tripoli by NEA A/S David Welch has been positive. State-owned Libyan television and newspapers carried coverage and articles August 14-16 highlighting comments by MFA Secretary for the Americas Dr. Ahmed Fituri to the effect that the agreement had " ... opened new horizons for Libyan-American relations, based on mutual respect, and serious and productive cooperation, which will result in progress and prosperity for both countries and their peoples". Fituri also stressed that the agreement represented the turning over of a new leaf in bilateral U.S.-Libya relations and was expect to facilitate improved people-to-people relations between the two countries. Longer term reaction in state-owned press has been limited; there have not been editorials or analytical pieces extolling the benefits of the agreement or predicting commercial windfalls as there were in the wake of French President Nicholas Sarkozy's visit in July 2007, or Muammar al-Qadhafi's visits to Madrid and Paris in December 2007. MFA Americas DeskOff Muhammad Ayab told us the GOL had chosen not to highlight the U.S.-Libya agreement in the press to mitigate potential questions about the parameters of the deal (the GOL has not released publicly the amount of the humanitarian fund that is to compensate U.S. and Libyan victims) and to avoid potential backlash from old guard elements who might criticize the regime for having "capitulated" to the U.S.

REACTION AMONG LIBYANS POSITIVE ...

¶3. (C) The observed reaction among Libyans has been very positive. Shopkeepers, dry cleaners, neighbors and taxi drivers have all expressed effusive congratulations to Emboffs in the week since the agreement was signed. Locally-engaged staff have been equally enthusiastic, offering felicitations and expressing hope that an important corner in bilateral relations has indeed been turned. Reaction among well-connected and informed contacts - typically a more hard-bitten, reserved group - has also been positive. The expectation is that resolution of the key outstanding political irritant will facilitate more robust U.S. commercial involvement in Libya and help remove the specter of a potential relapse into the "bad old days" of sanctions, a fear fueled by the decision of the U.S. Congress to pass the Lautenberg Amendment in January 2008.

¶4. (C) Husni Bey, scion of a well-connected, wealthy Benghazi-based family prominent in key business sectors, likened the agreement to a "grand opening" of U.S.-Libyan bilateral relations after the 2004-2008 "soft opening" during the period between re-establishment of diplomatic ties and finalization of the claims agreement. Ibrahim el-Meyet, a former senior MFA official turned business lawyer (and occasional adviser to al-Qadhafi's regime) described the agreement as "a remarkable achievement", noting that he had not believed it possible for the U.S. and Libya to resolve such a complicated issue so quickly. Hotel developer/businessman Muhammad al-Obeidi - a cousin of MFA Secretary for European Affairs Abdulati Obeidi, who played a key role in the negotiations - noted for us that while he was "delighted" at the news of the important agreement and "expected great things", he had lost 100 L.D. in a bet with colleague (al-Obeidi wagered that the deal would not be finalized and signed before the U.S. presidential elections in November).

... BUT EXPECTATIONS HIGH THAT U.S. WILL PRESSURE AL-QADHAFI ON POLITICAL SPACE, HUMAN RIGHTS

¶5. (C) While reaction to news of the agreement has been positive, there are high expectations in some quarters that the U.S. will pressure al-Qadhafi and the GOL more publicly and directly to open further political space in what remains a closed, tightly-controlled society. Acting on Libyan state media reports that the Secretary planned to visit soon in the wake of the agreement, a journalist and human rights activist called P/E Chief to express hope that she would press for greater press and civil society freedoms during her expected visit. The contact, who is under indictment for authoring an editorial criticizing ill-coordinated government development programs, expressed frustration that public rhetoric about reform has not been consistent with the results to date. Echoing the soft opening/grand opening formulation, a contact who works for the Ministry of Justice-equivalent and the Ministry of Interior-equivalent told us he hopes the U.S. will now pressure the GOL more directly to pursue needed legal reforms. (Note: Libya's legal code, an amalgam of Italian, British and Islamic Shari'a law, has not been substantially revised since the 1950's. We understand that a draft of a new legal code is currently being reviewed by various government ministries. End note.)

¶6. (C) A contact in the eastern Libyan city of Benghazi, told us that Benghazi residents had expressed hope on hearing of the agreement that the U.S. would seek to capitalize on the new tenor of the relationship to press the GOL for improved respect for human rights. Of particular concern, for residents of the eastern province of Cyrenaica is the case of detained human rights activist Fathi el-Jahmi, who hails from a prominent tribe there. Easterners, a number of whom regard el-Jahmi as a symbol of courageous resistance against what they perceive as an illegitimate regime, have been "disappointed" that the U.S. did not push harder and more publicly for el-Jahmi's release. They also felt that the U.S. "disappointed" their expectations in 2004-2008 (i.e., before the agreement was signed) by not pressing al-Qadhafi harder to open further political space. "Frankly", our contact said, "we are now hoping that the U.S. does what we all expected it to do during the past four years - to make it clear to the al-Qadhafi clan that their 35 year period of honey is over". Easterners have also been frustrated that Cyrenaica has not benefited economically under al-Qadhafi's regime to the extent that Tripoli, Sirte and other areas viewed more favorably by the regime have.

¶7. (C) Comment: Libyan reaction to news of the U.S.-Libya claims settlement agreement is a mixture of relief and high expectation. Libyans are genuinely pleased that a key political irritant in the bilateral relationship has been resolved, seemingly reducing the likelihood that U.S.-Libya relations could lapse back into something akin to the sanctions period. There is also the belief that expanded political and economic engagement with the U.S. and the West, which is expected to accelerate with the lifting of the Lautenberg Amendment and potential asset seizure, will help solidify internal Libyan reforms undertaken in recent years. Many Libyans hope that expanded engagement with the U.S. will include U.S. advocacy for political reform and greater respect for human rights. A key challenge for al-Qadhafi will be to temper expectations that fully normalized relations with the U.S. will prompt an immediate shift in the nature of the regime and its reluctance to move quickly on political reform. End comment.

REASON: 1.4 (d)
¶1. (SBU) Summary: On August 19, a storage tank for crude oil caught fire during routine maintenance operations in Ras Lanuf, the site of Libya's largest oil refinery and a petroleum port. The fire was isolated to one tank after burning for two days. There were no casualties and oil experts from the port of Ras

There were no casualties and oil exports from the port of Ras Lanuf were not immediately affected. The long-term impact on production and the tank farm is not yet clear. The incident highlighted, however, shortcomings in the capacity of Libya's National Oil Company (NOC) and the Government of Libya to respond to such incidents. End Summary.

¶2. (C) According to Ian MacIntosh (strictly protect), General Manager of Petro-Canada in Libya, the fire began the morning of August 19 inside one of the thirteen tanks at the Ras Lanuf facility, and pressure caused by the fire helped prompt a leak of oil through a faulty valve at ground-level. Oil spread into a ditch, surrounded by a dirt berm encircling the tank. That oil then caught fire as well, further heating the tank from outside. The tank in which the fire began has a capacity of 460,000 bbl. The structural integrity of the tank remained intact; however, there were concerns about whether that would hold. MacIntosh noted that public remarks by NOC Chairman Shukhri Ghanem that most of the oil in the tank was from fields developed by Petro-Canada were misleading. Only 2-4% of the oil in the tank was Petro-Canada's; the rest was NOC oil. Ghanem has also said that production would have to be reduced from 70,000 to 100,000 barrels per day (bpd); however, McIntosh told PolEcon Chief that Petro-Canada has not yet concluded that such would be the case.

¶3. (SBU) While some 1,000 Libyan police, firefighters and NOC employees were on-site by the end of the day on August 20, the incident has underscored real limitations in the capacity of the NOC and the GOL to respond to such issues. According to press reports, Libya was already producing below its full capacity of 1.85 million barrels per day (bpd) before the fire, in part due to a drilling accident last May in an offshore field which cut output by 45,000 bpd (see reftel). In addition, maintenance on a pipeline for associated gas in the Sirte region has reduced output by 100,000 barrels a day since July.

ENVIRONMENTAL DISASTER AVERTED

¶4. (C) Coincidentally, a new Health, Safety & Environment (HSE) officer for Petro-Canada arrived in Libya the day just before the blaze. He was quickly dispatched to the scene. MacIntosh stressed that the biggest value the HSE officer added was not what he did (oil firefighting capabilities here are limited), but rather, what he prevented officials of the NOC and GOL from doing. At one point, they were seriously considering emptying the burning tank (about 200,000 bbls of oil were still in the tank at that point) into the adjoining desert, which would have been "an environmental nightmare." The HSE officer dissuaded them from carrying out this plan.

AN INEFFECTIVE RESPONSE

¶5. (C) Comment: The reaction of the NOC and Libyan authorities has been judged by the tightly-knit community of international oil community (IOC) representatives here to have been ill-coordinated and ineffective, underscoring real limitations in the capacity of the NOC and the GOL to respond to such incidents. Efforts by the NOC to increase production from 1.8 million bpd to 3.0 million bpd will further stress the oil and gas infrastructure, much of which suffered for lack of maintenance during the period in which international sanctions against Libya were in place. End comment.

¶1. (C) Summary: In a lengthy, much-anticipated speech at an annual youth forum gathering, Saif al-Islam al-Qadhafi, son of Muammar al-Qadhafi, implicitly criticized past decisions of his father's regime, called for dramatic changes to Libya's system of governance, claimed that much of his program of social, political and economic reform had been achieved, and said he intended to withdraw from politics to focus instead on civil society and development work. Conceding that Libya had suffered from "stagnation" during the sanctions period, he focused on the government's ambitious development program. The decentralized Jamahiriya system instituted by his father was confusing and had not delivered results, and Libya needed a constitution to underpin a more transparent government structure and more predictable decisionmaking processes. Drawing a line between proposed government restructuring and greater participation by Libyans in their own governance, he called for a more robust civil society, judicial reform, greater respect for human rights, and more press freedoms. Describing Muammar al-Qadhafi as a historically unique figure whose powers and prerogatives could not be inherited, he criticized Arab regimes in which sons succeed their fathers and flatly rejected the idea that he would automatically assume a position of leadership by dint of being his father's son. In the most controversial portion of his remarks, Saif al-Islam claimed that the major foreign policy issues and reform agenda items had been resolved, and that he intended to withdraw from politics. Expected to be a speech in which he previewed his father's upcoming Revolution Day address and clarified reform efforts and perhaps his own role within the government, Saif al-Islam's speech has instead confused Libyans and raised more questions than it answered. There have already been a series of highly-publicized meetings and press articles calling for him to "return" to politics, suggesting that his announced intention to "disappear for awhile" may have been a ploy to engender statements of popular support, possibly to help buttress him against critcism from conservative regime elements unhappy with his reform agenda. Regardless of his intent, the speech has raised doubts about the long-term viability of the reform agenda and called into question whether Saif al-Islam is ready for a formal leadership role. End summary.

LIBYA'S FOREIGN POLICY ISSUES HAVE BEEN RESOLVED ...

¶2. (C) At at the third annual Libya Youth Forum near the southern city of Sabha on August 20, Saif al-Islam al-Qadhafi framed his remarks by saying that Libyan had resolved its major foreign policy issues and no longer faced external threats. (Note: The head of the Federal Express franchise in Libya, who bid on a contract to deliver equipment and supplies to the venue, said the remote site had been selected largely to facilitate better crowd control and security. Demonstrations, which were violently suppressed, broke out at last year's Youth Forum gathering in Benghazi, prompting state media to cut the television feed. End note.) Speaking at a desert venue by the Oubari Lakes, Saif al-Islam referred to the U.S.-Libya comprehensive claims settlement agreement signed by NEA A/S Welch in Tripoli on August 14 (ref A) and noted that embargoes and sanctions were now a thing of the past. The U.S. and other states were now contemplating selling arms to Libya, which had been "just a dream" a few short months ago. Saif's reference to the U.S.-Libya claims agreement drew loud, sustained applause from the crowd of young Libyans. In an implicit criticism of Libya's past foreign policy adventures, Saif al-Islam said that many of Libya's issues with the West had been "unnecessary battles in the first place".

... LEAVING IT TO FOCUS ON REMEDYING INTERNAL "STAGNATION"

¶3. (SBU) Saying Libya had been "in stagnation for decades" because of international sanctions, Saif al-Islam conceded that Libya was "also at fault" for its period of isolation. He cautioned that while there were many reasons for Libya's past foreign policy decisions, "now is not the time to talk about that". He instead focused on Libya's ambitious program of infrastructure development, much of which is designed to demonstrate tangible benefits of the Fatah Revolution in the demonstrate tangible benefits of the Fatah Revolution in the run-up to the upcoming 40th anniversary of the September 1, 1969 coup that brought Muammar al-Qadhafi to power. Conceding that infrastructure, housing and development had been neglected for too long, he also tacitly conceded that the current sudden spending spree had occasioned its own problems, saying that the rush to disburse 130 billion Libyan dinar (about USD 108 billion) worth of infrastructure contracts in the past year had led to "confusion and hysteria". In a nod to two key popular concerns, he specifically mentioned large investments in education and health care, claiming that foreign universities and foreign hospitals were being established in Libya.

JAMAHIRIYA SYSTEM HASN'T DELIVERED; NEW GOVERNMENT STRUCTURE & CONSTITUTION NEEDED

¶4. (SBU) Turning to governance, Saif al-Islam resurrected his call for a constitution, something he explicitly advocated in his 2006 Youth Forum speech in Sirte, which drew harsh criticism at the time from the Revolutionary Committees and other conservative regime elements. Reacting to that, Saif al-Islam had softened his language in his 2007 speech in Benghazi (ref B), using the term "social contract". In Sabha this year, he adopted slightly more forward leaning language, saying Libya "needs something, which is perhaps called a constitution - let's say a popular pact similar to the social pact or a pact of the mass of the people". Such a contract should stem from the popular authority of the people, he said, but stressed that a formal document of some kind was needed to enshrine and protect the will of the people against unconstitutional attempts to usurp power as in the recent coup in Mauritania.

¶5. (SBU) Criticizing the inchoate nature of the decentralized Jamahiriya system, he said Libyans are frustrated with the the existing system's failure to deliver basic services such as trash collection, pest control, water and electricity, and now want a clearly articulated system of rules that govern personal conduct, economic affairs and governance. Describing the bedrock of good governance as effective local government, he stressed that despite the rhetoric about popular local committees, the Jamahiriya system of his father had not delivered on that front. Describing the decision to dismantle formal decisionmaking structures and to effectively decouple the local and central governments as "a mistake", he called for a "new administrative structure" that would better integrate local municipalities and districts with the central government.

¶6. (SBU) Referring to Muammar al-Qadhafi's March 2 address to the General People's Congress, in which he called for government restructuring and radical privatization (ref C), Saif al-Islam conceded that he had been personally involved in the work of the committees tasked with implementing his father's vision. He emphasized that plans for restructuring the government are underway, and will involve reshaped local institutions and greater privatization. Arguing for aggressive privatization, he said "the state will not own anything" and "everything should be done by the private sector". (Note: As reported ref C, five committees were established to formulate plans for implementing Muammar al-Qadhafi's March 2 vision. Contacts have told us Saif al-Islam established shadow committees staffed by personnel from the Economic Development Board (EDB) and National Planning Council (NPC); the final recommendations for implementing al-Qadhafi's vision reflected heavy input from the shadow committees. End note.) Referring obliquely to reports of fierce infighting over recommendations about restructuring and privatization, Saif al-Islam noted that "many things that were not nice" had happened in the course of recent intra-government debates, but stressed that those issues had been resolved.

CIVIL SOCIETY, JUDICIAL REFORM, HUMAN RIGHTS & PRESS FREEDOMS NECESSARY

¶7. (SBU) Drawing a line between proposed government restructuring and greater direct participation by Libyans in their own governance, Saif al-Islam explicitly called for a more robust civil society, judicial reform, greater respect for human rights, and more press freedoms. Stressing that the best guarantee of "democracy, liberty and human rights" was "a strong, independent, enduring civil society" akin to that in the U.S., he argued that Libya urgently needs a more robust civil society if it is to develop further. Noting his personal involvement in sending an estimated 12,000 Libyan students abroad to Europe, Australia and the U.S. to study, he predicted that great strides would be made when those students returned to work in Libya, and called on Libyan youth to establish civic associations to help ensure government accountability.

¶8. (SBU) Citing corrupt judicial systems in the former Soviet Union and elsewhere in the Middle East, Saif al-Islam called for a fair judicial system and rule of law, without which "all the things (reforms) that we do will be undermined ... and disappear". In a swipe at Muammar al-Qadhafi's famously mercurial style of leadership, Saif al-Islam linked human rights progress to a stable, clearly articulated political and judicial system, noting that "we want to have an administrative, legal and constitutional system once and for all, rather than change ... every year". In a line that drew sustained applause and wide press coverage, he noted that a new draft legal code was currently being reviewed by the government and said " ... the count-down towards building a state of institutions, constitutions, rule of law, and modern management has started with a set of new laws which is being presented to the people everywhere, incuding the new administrative structure of the country".

¶9. (SBU) The new legal code, he argued, was critical if Libya was to enshrine essential civil society concepts such as expanded respect for human rights and press freedoms. Conceding that "anybody could have violated your rights" in Libya before, he claimed those days were over. Softening his criticism of past abuses, he said Libya had not been in a position to simultaneously address development and human rights needs. With progress on the development front, respect for human rights was now necessary, in part to help sustain development efforts: "Libyans cannot build the Libya of tomorrow when they are scared and frightened of internal, external security apparatuses, the police and so on". (Note: The Qadhafi Development Foundation, headed by Saif al-Islam, announced an initiative the week before his speech to compensate families of prisoners killed during the government's suppression of a riot at the notorious Abu Salim Prison in 1995. End note.) He called for greater press freedom as a means to help ensure government accountabilitym noting that a more independent press would reveal "where the secret deals are taking place, where the problems lie, and where the conspiracies are being planned".

NO ONE CAN INHERIT MUAMMAR AL-QADHAFI'S POWERS & PREROGATIVES

¶10. (SBU) Criticizing the "forest of dictatorships" in the Middle East, he said modern Arab regimes were characterized by hereditary, dictatorial executives, "fanciful, ineffective parliaments" and human rights violations. Disparaging Arab governance, he complimented the state of Israel, in which a president could be forced from office on sexual harassment charges, and a prime minister on corruption charges. Reprising nomenclature he used in his 2007 Youth Forum address in Benghazi (ref B), Saif al-Islam nonetheless described Muammar (ref B), Saif al-Islam nonetheless described Muammar al-Qadhafi's role as a "redline" that was beyond criticism and not subject to other government restructuring efforts. Likening his father's position in modern Libya to that of George Washington, Mustafa Kemal Ataturk and the Ayatollah Khomeini, he stressed that Muammar al-Qadhafi's role was historically unique and that neither he nor anyone else was entitled to inherit that mantle. He flatly rejected the proposition that he would automatically assume the position and prerogatives of his father by dint of blood relation. "This is not a private farm to be inherited", he said. For Libya to experience hereditary succession would put the country "at square one again" in terms of political development.

SAIF SAYS HE'LL WITHDRAW FROM POLITICS ...

¶11. (SBU) In the most publicized and controversial part of his address, Saif al-Islam said he would recuse himself from politics and instead focus on civil society and development work. Claiming that "the time of major battles has ended" - he referred to the U.S. claims agreement and foreign policy contretemps such as the Lockerbie bombing and the Bulgarian medics case - Saif al-Islam said "I have no more major battles and my position has become embarrassing". Justifying his prominent role in sensitive affairs of state, he admitted freely that he had intervened extensively in foreign affairs, government restructuring and development " ... because there were " ... no presently-functioning institutions and no administrative system (in Libya) which were capable of doing these jobs". Claiming that much of his program of resolving key foreign policy challenges, initiating government restructuring and development, and human rights reforms had been accomplished and that the rest was "on track", he said his central role was no longer needed or appropriate. Referring to George Orwell's novel "The Animal Farm" as a cautionary tale against the danger of would-be revolutionary leaders recapitulating the errors of the systems they had overthrown, he cautioned that it would be problematic if he were to continue his involvement in political issues. Noting that some regime elements "hated" his reform efforts, he stressed that Libya's future lies with clearly organized institutions and a robust civil society, rather than charismatic personalities. Addressing his future, Saif al-Islam claimed he would withdraw from affairs of state, perhaps "disappear for awhile" and focus on civil society and development efforts. Discounting the possibility that he would be lured back into politics, he stressed that he did not intend to return and said he would rightly be considered "a liar" if he did.

.. BUT THE MASSES SAY HE MUST "CONTINUE HIS REVOLUTIONARY JOURNEY"

¶12. (SBU) Reaction to Saif al-Islam's stated intention to withdraw from politics has been swift and well-coordinated. In a series of meetings held on August 24 at the People's Hall in Tripoli, members of the Revolutionary Committees, various youth organizations, professional associations, and local government committees issued strongly worded calls for Saif al-Islam to "return" to politics. The crowd at the People's Hall frequently broke into chants of "Keep up the journey, oh son of the brave man!" The dean of the lawyers' association, Bashir al-Tawir, said Saif al-Islam was "a revolutionary man who should continue his revolutionary journey". Striking a populist note, Muhammad Aribi, the People's Leadership Coordinator in Tripoli, claimed that "only America and Zionism" would benefit from Saif al-Islam's withdrawal from politics. Similar calls were issued at gatherings of youth organizations around the country that began the day after his speech, and a larger youth event - designed to lure Saif al-Islam back - is scheduled to take place in Benghazi shortly before Muammar al-Qadhafi's Revolution Day speech on September 1. The leadership of the national youth organization and Saif al-Islam's Libya al-Ghad (Libya of Tomorrow) organization reportedly threatened to resign en masse unless he continued in his political role. Unusually, the proceedings at the People's Hall were not covered by state radio or television, but were heavily covered by the Libya Fada'iya satellite channel and Ouea newspaper, both owned by Saif al-Islams 1/09 media group.

COMMENT

¶13. (C) Saif al-Islam's Youth Day speeches are closely followed as a barometer of reform efforts and a harbinger of policy initiatives.
Embassy contacts, who expected Saif al-Islam's remarks to clarify expectations about Muammar al-Qadhafi's Revolution Day speech early next week, were instead left confused about the state of the reform agenda and government restructuring, as well as Saif's own political future. Several noted that Saif al-Islam did himself a disservice by clearly departing from his prepared remarks in an attempt at a more improvised delivery. The halting, rambling speech exacerbated the perception that the typically charismatic Saif al-Islam was nervous. Key advisers Omran Bukhres and Dr. Yusuf Sawani were reportedly "beside themselves" that he had departed from the carefully crafted text they helped prepare. Several contacts also noted that there were junctures at which Saif al-Islam appeared to be restraining himself from going further in his remarks, particularly with respect to intra-governmental squabbling about restructuring and rumors that he was hated by conservative regime elements.

¶14. (C) Few take seriously Saif al-Islam's claim that he intends to withdraw from politics entirely, but there is confusion about what he intended to achieve by threatening to do so. The swift calls for him to "return" suggest a scripted plot to garner political credibility for him as a genuinely populist figure, possibly as a prelude to announcement of a more formal role for him during the upcoming Revolution Day speech. There have been reports on websites that the government restructuring could include a Social Leadership Council, to be headed by a senior figure. Some observers have speculated that his remarks on hereditary Arab regimes and Muammar al-Qadhafi's historically unique role were intended as a subtle warning to his own siblings, some of whom have recently become more naked in their ambitions. A contact with regular access to the family believes that Saif al-Islam intended to signal to his father dissatisfaction that he, Saif, has undertaken the most sensitive, labor-intensive work in the government without benefit of formal position, by contrast with his brother, Muatassim, who was named National Security Adviser last year.

¶15. (C) Saif al-Islam's claim that work on human rights, personal liberties and development was in "its last round" is broadly seen to be premature. The consensus among Libyans is that while Saif al-Islam has helped contribute to the beginnings of reform in some areas, much remains to be done. A line of thinking we've heard from some of our savvier contacts is that references to accomplishments and intra-government bickering were a tacit admission that he had not yet achieved all he hoped to, in part because of resistance from truculent conservative regime elements. The corollary to that interpretation is that he is still needed to keep those efforts in train. His remarks about closing the books on past mistakes have been interpreted by a number of contacts as a subtle signal to the Revolutionary Committees and other old guard regime elements that he is willing to put aside old grievances. The commonly-held view is that while Libya has made some strides in the right direction since Saif al-Islam's coming out party in 2003, when he previewed a reformist agenda in his first major public address, the gains that have been made to date are modest and not likely to endure absent the active advocacy and protection of a politically well-connected patron. Whether he was sincere in stating his intent to withdraw from politics or meant it as a coy means by which to engender popular support, the effect of Saif al-Islam's speech has been to raise doubts about the long-term viability of the reform agenda (if he in fact exits the scene) and to call into question whether he is really ready for a formal leadership role (if this is all part of an elaborate act of kabuki theater). All eyes are now on Muammar al-Qadhafi and his Revolution Day address on or about September ¶1. End comment.

SUBJECT: SCENESETTER FOR SECRETARY RICE'S VISIT TO LIBYA

CLASSIFIED BY: Chris Stevens, CDA, U.S. Embassy - Tripoli, Dept of State.
REASON: 1.4 (b), (c), (d)

¶1. (C) Embassy Tripoli and the Government of Libya are looking forward to your historic visit to Tripoli September 5. Coming on the heels of NEA A/S Welch's successful finalization of a comprehensive claims settlement agreement in Tripoli August 14, the GOL views your visit as a signature event in its decade-long effort to achieve reintegration into the international community, and as a tangible benefit of its strategic decision in 2003 to abandon its WMD programs and renounce terrorism. Key issues for your visit include:

-- Internal political issues

-- Bilateral relations

-- Human rights

-- Counter-terrorism cooperation

-- Sub-Saharan Africa

-- Regional issues, including Iraq and Iran

-- Energy sector and commercial opportunities

INTERNAL POLITICAL ISSUES

¶2. (C) Your visit comes days after the 39th anniversary of the September 1, 1969 military coup that brought Muammar al-Qadhafi to power. It is expected that al-Qadhafi will outline in his Revolution Day speech how the GOL will implement dramatic government restructuring and privatization he advocated in a key address in March. Al-Qadhafi's plan could represent his most radical experiment in governance since the late 1970's. Ordinary Libyans are concerned about the rising costs of food, fuel and other staples; privatization would strike a direct blow at the tacit pact - oil revenue-financed, cradle-to-grave subsidies in exchange for political quiescence - that has underpinned the regime for decades. Drawing a line between reform and greater participation by Libyans in governance, Saif al-Islam al-Qadhafi, Muammar al-Qadhafi's son and heir apparent, called for a more robust civil society, judicial reform, greater press freedoms and respect for human rights in a major speech August 20. A new legal code, which would be the first major change to Libya's judicial system since the 1950's, is currently under review. Saif al-Islam implicitly criticized past decisions of his father's regime, claimed he had achieved much of his own reform agenda and said he would withdraw from politics to focus on civil society and development work. Expected to clarify government reform efforts and his own political future, Saif al-Islam's speech has instead confused Libyans, raising doubts about the long-term viability of the reform agenda and calling into question whether he is ready for a formal leadership role. The issue of who might succeed Muammar al-Qadhafi looms large. The conventional wisdom is that it is Saif al-Islam's job to lose; however, some observers interpreted the appointment of another son, Muatassim al-Qadhafi, to the newly-created position of National Security Adviser in early 2007 as a sign that Muammar al-Qadhafi was hedging his bet.

BILATERAL RELATIONS

¶3. (C) Your visit - the first by a U.S. Secretary of State since John Foster Dulles' trip in 1953 and the most recent Cabinet-level visit since then-Vice President Nixon was here in 1957 - is viewed as the key component of a "grand opening" in U.S.-Libyan bilateral relations, as compared to the "soft opening" between re-establishment of diplomatic ties and finalization of the claims agreement (i.e., 2004-2008). The GOL also wants to see a fully-accredited U.S. ambassador posted to Tripoli and full visa services at the Embassy. The fact that most Libyans must currently travel to Tunis to apply for non-immigrant visas (the Embassy's security posture/infrastructure have not permitted broader visa operations to date) is perceived as a slight. Anxious to avoid the public perception that U.S.-Libya ties are chiefly about counter-terrorism cooperation, prospective military-to-military ties and hydrocarbon resources, the GOL is keen to emphasize cooperation in education (it wants to send more students to study in the U.S.), science and technology and culture. The GOL wants to be able to purchase lethal military equipment and would like to sign a civilian nuclear cooperation agreement. Despite high-level rhetoric, limited GOL capacity will significantly constrain efforts to quickly expand bilateral cooperation and engagement in all these areas.

¶4. (C) Libyan reaction to news of the recently finalized

TRIPOLI 00000680 002 OF 004

U.S.-Libya claims settlement agreement has been a mixture of relief and high expectation. Coverage in state-owned media has been positive, but muted; we're told the GOL did not publicly trumpet the agreement to avoid questions about the deal's parameters (it has not publicized the agreed amount of compensation to be distributed by the humanitarian fund) and to avoid criticism that it capitulated to U.S. demands. A recent editorial in the "Ouea" newspaper, owned by Saif al-Islam al-Qadhafi, expressed cautious optimism that bilateral relations had turned a corner and welcomed U.S. assistance in education and technology transfers, but squarely blamed the U.S. for past contretemps and cautioned against U.S. "interference" in Libyan internal affairs. Libya has balanced re-engagement with us by actively pursuing closer ties with Russia. Then-president Putin visited in March and resolved a thorny Soviet-era debt issue that paved the way for lucrative commercial contracts; he is expected to send his deputy to attend the September 1 Revolution Day festivities. In recent remarks, Saif al-Islam al-Qadhafi described Russia as "a key strategic partner" and said the GOL would support Russia in its position on Georgia. Libya is conflicted about re-engagement with the U.S. Conservative regime elements are still wary that our ultimate goal is regime change, while ordinary Libyans are genuinely pleased that a key political irritant in the bilateral relationship has been resolved. Many hope that expanded political and economic engagement with the U.S. will help solidify recent Libyan economic reforms.

HUMAN RIGHTS & POLITICAL FREEDOMS

¶5. (S) There are high expectations in some quarters that the U.S. will pressure al-Qadhafi and the GOL more publicly and directly to urge greater respect for human rights and open further political space in what remains a closed, tightly-controlled society. A number of Libyans are disappointed that this did not occur immediately after relations were re-established in 2004. The GOL has expressed tepid interest in a high-level human rights dialogue; however, they have cautioned that they view discussion of individual cases as improper interference in their internal affairs. The case of detained human rights activist Fathi el-Jahmi, viewed by many as a symbol of courageous resistance against an illegitimate regime, is a key bilateral irritant. Embassy officers visited him several times in February-April 2008 and a Human Rights Watch/Physicians for Human Rights team visited him in March 2008. Embassy officers have been denied access to him since April and the GOL falsely claimed he had been released from their custody (he remains in hospital under guard). Claiming to speak for Saif al-Islam al-Qadhafi, senior regime figure Abdullah Sanussi disparaged the Embassy's involvement in el-Jahmi's case and warned of the "potentially catastrophic effects" on bilateral relations of Post's democracy and human rights outreach efforts. We've also been told that Muammar al-Qadhafi has personally followed el-Jahmi's case and is upset that the U.S. keeps raising it.

¶6. (C) Embassy officers were also criticized for improper behavior after meeting in early 2007 with self-described regime critics led by Dr. Idriss Boufayed on the eve of a planned peaceful demonstration. The GOL arrested fourteen individuals to pre-empt the demonstration - two were released in May 2008, 11 were convicted in June 2008 and given sentences of 6 to 25 years imprisonment and one has not been seen since his arrest. Among the charges on which the 11 were convicted was having unauthorized communications with an official of a foreign government (i.e., the U.S. Embassy). Boufayed is terminally ill government (i.e., the U.S. Embassy). Boulayed is terminally ill with cancer; the Qadhafi Development Foundation and European governments have argued for his parole on humanitarian grounds. Saif al-Islam al-Qadhafi has publicly acknowledged past abuses and called for national reconciliation; however, human rights remains a neuralgic issue for the GOL. Absent a clear message that engagement on human rights will be a necessary adjunct of an expanded U.S.-Libya relationship, meaningful progress in this area is unlikely.

COUNTER-TERRORISM COOPERATION & EXTREMISM

¶7. (S) Libya has been a strong partner in the war against terrorism and cooperation in liaison channels is excellent. Muammar al-Qadhafi's criticism of Saudi Arabia for perceived support of Wahabi extremism, a source of continuing Libya-Saudi tension, reflects broader Libyan concern about the threat of extremism. Worried that fighters returning from Afghanistan and Iraq could destabilize the regime, the GOL has aggressively pursued operations to disrupt foreign fighter flows, including more stringent monitoring of air/land ports of entry, and blunt the ideological appeal of radical Islam. The Qadhafi Development Foundation brokered talks with imprisoned members of the Libyan Islamic Fighting Group (LIFG) that led to the release earlier this year of about 130 former LIFG members. The GOL considers the program an important means to signal willingness to reconcile with former enemies, a significant feature of Libya's tribal culture. Libya cooperates with neighboring states in the Sahara and Sahel region to stem foreign fighter flows and travel of trans-national terrorists. Muammar al-Qadhafi recently brokered a widely-publicized agreement with Tuareg tribal leaders from Libya, Chad, Niger, Mali and Algeria in which they would abandon separatist aspirations and smuggling (of weapons and trans-national extremists) in exchange for development assistance and financial support. Libya also cooperates closely with Syria, particularly on foreign fighter flows. Syria has transferred over 100 Libyan foreign fighters to the GOL's custody over the past two years, including a tranche of 27 in late 2007. Our assessment is that the flow of foreign fighters from Libya to Iraq and the reverse flow of veterans to Libya has diminished due to the GOL's cooperation with other states and new procedures. Counter-terrorism cooperation is a key pillar of the U.S.-Libya bilateral relationship and a shared strategic interest.

SUB SAHARAN AFRICA

¶8. (C) Having largely abandoned pan-Arab leadership aspirations, the GOL places a heavy premium on maintaining its perceived role as a leading state in Africa. Libya spearheaded establishing the Community of Sahel-Saharan States (CEN-SAD); the 10th anniversary of CEN-SAD's founding in September 1999 will occur shortly after your visit. Libya is deeply frustrated with its inability to deliver a sustainable peace between Chad and Sudan. Despite abortive UN/AU-led Darfur talks in Libya in October 2007 and the stillborn October 2007 Libya-brokered Chad cease-fire, the GOL remains actively involved in Chad-Sudan mediation efforts (it played a key role in re-establishing Chad-Sudan diplomatic relations in July 2008). But Libya recognizes it cannot broker peace unilaterally. The GOL views skeptically calls for an international observer force on the Chad-Sudan border under the March 2008 Dakar Accord and refers instead to the February 2006 Tripoli Accords (which also called for joint military observation of the Chad-Sudan border) and the October 2007 Sirte process as the platforms for a viable peace process. Hard experience - despite personal appeals by Muammar al-Qadhafi, the GOL failed to entice Darfur rebel leaders to attend the October 2007 Sirte conference - has prompted Libya to realize it is better positioned to pressure the regimes in Ndjamena and Khartoum than rebel movements. Libya believes the key to "fixing" Chad is to pressure Deby to address the deep, popular opposition to his government. The GOL has facilitated humanitarian relief through a key overland corridor running from Kufra, in southeast Libya, to Darfur. After years of failed unilateral intervention, Libya appears to appreciate UN/AU leadership of the Darfur political process and U.S. partnership in efforts to promote peace in and between Chad and Sudan. A visit by Special Envoy Williamson could help reinvigorate Libya's support for stalled international mediation efforts. On AFRICOM, the GOL has argued that any foreign military presence, regardless of mission, on the African continent would constitute unacceptable latter-day colonialism and would present an attractive target for al-Qaeda. AFRICOM's Deputy Commander visited Tripoli for low-key talks in January 2008 and General Ward plans to visit in October/November.

REGIONAL ISSUES

¶9. (S) Iraqi spokesman Ali Dabbagh recently met with Muammar al-Qadhafi, who expressed interest in pursuing closer relations with Iraq. It was agreed that a Libyan delegation would visit Iraq soon. Libyan-Iranian relations are complicated and increasingly contentious. Iranian First Vice President Davoudi, the highest ranking Iranian official to visit Tripoli in 25 years, signed a number of cooperation agreements during his January 2008 stop here as part of an apparent effort to garner support in the UNSC for heading off a third resolution on Iran's nuclear activity. Libya wanted Iran's help in smoothing over ties with Lebanon, which have been strained since the disappearance of Imam Musa Sadr during a 1978 visit to Tripoli. Iran's decision to demur appears to have factored into Libya's decision not to oppose a third UNSCR on Iran. Al-Qadhafi recently disparaged publicly Iran's nuclear aspirations, which prompted an angry rebuke in the Iranian press. Nonetheless, there are concerns about possible ties between state-owned Libyan banks and Iranian entities of particular concern. Ties with Syria are less contentious; Libya's new sovereign wealth fund announced last week that it had invested $200 million in a Syrian cement production venture. Claiming that it wants to emulate Dubai in its development approach, Libya has recently pursued closer ties with Arab Gulf states. A $500 million joint investment fund was announced during the August 2008 visit of Oman's Sultan Qaboos, his first since 1972. A number of similar investment projects have been established with the UAE, Qatar and Bahrain during a flurry of visits over the past year. Relations with Saudi Arabia remain strained.

ENERGY SECTOR & COMMERCIAL OPPORTUNITIES

¶10. (C) Libya's economy is almost entirely dependent on oil and gas. Libya has the largest proven oil reserves (43.6 billion barrels) and the third largest proven natural gas reserves (1.5 billion cubic meters) on the African continent. Libya currently produces about 1.7 million barrels/day of oil; only Angola and Nigeria produce more in Africa. Oil and gas infrastructure suffered during the sanctions period. The lifting of sanctions has opened the way for new exploration and improved production. New technology and refined management techniques introduced by international oil companies (IOC's) are a key part of Libya's plan to increase oil production to 3.0 million barrels/day by 2013. Most of Libya's oil and natural gas are exported to Europe - Italy, Germany, Spain and France are key customers. Major U.S. energy companies active in Libya include Amerada Hess, ConocoPhillips, Marathon, Chevron, ExxonMobil and Occidental. Joint ventures involving U.S. companies currently account for about 510,000 barrels/day of Libya's 1.7 million barrels/day production. A large number of small to mid-sized

U.S. oil and gas services companies are also working in Libya.

¶11. (C) After years of isolation under sanctions and limited spending by the GOL, Libya is currently in the midst of an economic boom, partly driven by a desire to complete large-scale infrastructure projects as tangible symbols of the regime's achievements in advance of the 40th anniversary of al-Qadhafi's revolution on September 1, 2009. High oil prices have helped fuel the outlays. Western companies, eager to establish a position in what is expected to be a lucrative market, are arriving in sizeable numbers. A temporary pause prompted by adoption of the Lautenberg Amendment in January 2008 and concern about asset seizure is coming to an end on news of the comprehensive claims agreement. U.S. companies recently secured lucrative contracts for infrastructure development and construction contracts - AECOM and the Tennessee Overseas Construction Company have the largest non-energy cohorts of expatriate Americans here - and are competing in a variety of other sectors, including communications and aviation. Despite great promise, Libya remains a challenging business and investment environment. Contradictory regulations, inefficient government bureaucracy, limited human capacity and rampant corruption (in 2007, Transparency International ranked Libya 133rd out of 180 countries in terms of being most corrupt) are significant challenges that could hamper greater investment.

AL-QADHAFI & HIS FOREIGN MINISTER

¶12. (C) Muammar al-Qadhafi is notoriously mercurial. He often avoids making eye contact during the initial portion of meetings, and there may be long, uncomfortable periods of silence. Alternatively, he can be an engaging and charming interlocutor, as he was during NEA A/S Welch's meeting on August ¶14. A self-styled intellectual and philosopher, he has been eagerly anticipating for several years the opportunity to share with you his views on global affairs. We've been told that issues he might raise include Sarkozy's Union for the Mediterranean proposal (which al-Qadhafi opposes), the Georgia conflict, illegal migration (Libya is a key transit country), Iran, Iraq and the Arab-Israeli conflict (including his "Isratine" one-state solution), and Africa. Intellectually curious and a voracious consumer of news - trusted advisers are tasked with summarizing in Arabic important books and articles printed in other languages, including your recent article in Foreign Affairs - al-Qadhafi will be well-informed and more inclined to focus on strategic views than pragmatic measures. Foreign Minister Abdulrahman Shalgham, whom you met in Washington, is also expected to meet with you during your visit the status of any pending legal action against them.  One detainee's trial has reportedly been completed and he understands he has been sentenced to 25 years imprisonment. The trial of the second detainee has begun and several hearings have been held; the next is scheduled for September 3. End summary.

¶2. (S/NF) Per refs A and B, P/E Chief interviewed separately returned Guantanamo detainees Muhammad Abdallah Mansur al-Rimi (AKA Abdul Salam Abdul Omar Sufrani, ISN 194) and Ben Qumu Abu Sufian Ibrahim Ahmed Hamouda (ISN 557) on September 1. The meeting took place at a GOL security service facility in Tripoli. A host government security official facilitated the meeting; however, no host government officials participated in the meetings with the two returned detainees. The last visit to the two returned detainees took place on June 10, 2008 (ref C).

¶3. (S/NF) Al-Rimi (ISN 194), who was returned to Libya in December 2006, said he remains in detention at the Abu Salim prison, located in the Tripoli suburbs. (Note: Al-Rimi had been detained at an External Security Organization (ESO) detention facility between his return to Libya in December 2006 and June 2007, when he was transferred to Abu Salim. End note.) Al-Rimi said he continues to be held alone in his cell, but he is able to exercise at least once a week for about an hour at a time. He indicated he is able to leave his cell and interact with other prisoners. He is provided with drinking water, tea and three meals a day. He does not have access to books, radio or television. He has access to medications and has been visited by a prison doctor on the occasions when he has been ill. Al-Rimi stated that he had received one family visit - his sisters came to see him in July - since our last meeting with him on June 10. (Note: Our understanding is that members of his family have visited him on four occasions since his return to Libya - January 2007, May 2007 (ref D), March 2008 and July 2008. End note.) Al-Rimi said he would like to receive more family visits, if possible.

¶4. (S/NF) Asked about the condition of his arm and his teeth, about which he had previously complained (ref E), al-Rimi said both were fine. He noted that he needed dental care for another tooth, which had developed problems after his return to Libya. A dentist recently visited him at Abu Salim prison and told al-Rimi the tooth (a back tooth on the upper row in which al-Rimi has recently experienced pain) should be extracted. Al-Rimi said he instead requested that it be "cleaned and repaired", but the dentist said the tooth was not salvageable. According to al-Rimi, the dentist is to visit him again soon to discuss how to proceed.

¶5. (S/NF) In our previous meeting on June 10, al-Rimi said he understood his case was being deliberated at that time by a panel of judges, who were to render a verdict and issue a sentence on/about June 16. Al-Rimi said he was not present when his verdict and sentence were issued, but heard from other prisoners who were present in the courtroom on June 16 in connection with their own cases that he was found guilty of some charges (NFI) and sentenced to 25 years imprisonment. (Note: Per ref C, al-Rimi's understanding was that he faced four charges: 1) membership in the Libyan Islamic Fighting Group; 2) membership in al-Qaeda; 3) forging a passport and travel documents and using them to exit the country, and; 4) failing to secure permission to exit the country when he left to fight in Afghanistan. It is not clear which of those he was convicted of. End note.) Al-Rimi has received no information from Libyan officials about his trial, verdict or sentence. He met with his court-appointed legal counsel on one occasion about two months before his reported conviction and sentencing on June 16, and has not heard from him since.

¶6. (S/NF) Hamouda (ISN 557), who was returned to Libya in August

¶6. (S/NF) Hamouda (ISN 557), who was returned to Libya in August 2007, said he remains in detention at the Abu Salim prison, located in the Tripoli suburbs. (Note: He was detained at an ESO detention facility for about three months after his return and was then transferred to the Abu Salim prison. End note.) He remains in solitary detention, his biggest complaint. He is able to speak through the walls with prisoners in adjacent cells, but is not able to leave his cell and interact with other prisoners and is not able to exercise. Hamouda wants to be able to leave his cell. (Note: During our previous meeting on June 10, the security official who facilitated the meeting explained that detention protocols for extremists and terrorists mandate that they be held in solitary detention to preclude the possibility that they could recruit other members of the prison population. End note.) Hamouda complained about the lack of sunlight and fresh air. He is provided with drinking water, tea and three meals a day. He does not have access to books, radio or television. He requested that he be provided with pens, paper and books. Hamouda said he not received a family visit since our last meeting with him on June 10, but conceded that he was unsure whether they had tried to do so. (Note: Our understanding is that Hamouda has had two visits by members of his family since his return: his wife and children visited in late December, and his wife and brother-in-law saw him in January. End note.)

¶7. (S/NF) Hamouda has access to medications and was visited by a prison doctor in March/April, who responded to his complaints of depression and anxiety by prescribing him anti-depressant medication that left him "groggy and tired". He also received a prescription at that time from the Libyan doctor for an indeterminate condition for which he said he had been treated at Guantanamo Bay. He complained that the medication prescribed by the Libyan doctor for the condition was ineffective and asked for Laproxin, which was prescribed for him at Guantanamo Bay and had been effective; however, he has been told that Laproxin is not available in Libya. (Note: Per ref C, Hamouda said on June 10 that he may be seen by a prison doctor if he is ill, but that he had not needed to so since his return. He had no answer when he was asked to explain the contradictory accounts. End note.)

¶8. (S/NF) Hamouda said his trial had begun and that there had been three hearings to date, which he attended, at a court facility in the Abu Salim prison. His next hearing is scheduled for September 3; it is unclear whether the court will render a verdict at that hearing. He has court-appointed legal counsel, but has not met his lawyer outside of courtroom hearings. His understanding is that he faces three charges: 1) membership in the Libyan Islamic Fighting Group; 2) membership in al-Qaeda, and; 3) that he performed illicit work for a private company in Sudan and Afghanistan. He also faces charges related to a drug trafficking offense for which he was convicted and imprisoned in the early 1990's. He complained that the charges against him are based entirely on hearsay from witnesses whose credibility is suspect, and maintained that he was innocent.

¶9. (S/NF) Facilitation of access to the detainees under the revised rubric detailed in ref D was quick and straightforward. Post submitted a diplomatic note on August 24 formally requesting access to the detainees and, despite the beginning of Ramadan and Libya's national day celebrations in the intervening period, access was granted on September 1 (i.e., within a week of the request).

¶10. (S/NF) Despite several requests for information about the legal basis on which the two returned detainees are being held and the status/schedule of any legal proceedings against them, Post has received no response from the GOL to date. The only information we have is from the two detainees. We pressed the GOL to provide information about the detainees' legal status and the state of play in the legal proceedings against them, stressing that we needed to receive such information directly from the GOL. To date, however, we have not received the requested information from the GOL.

SUBJECT: LIBYA FURTHER PRIVATIZES FUEL DISTRIBUTION

¶1. (SBU) The Chairman of the Libya's National Oil Corporation (NOC), Shukri Ghanem, launched the country's third privately-owned fuel distribution company, al-Rahila, in a low profile ceremony at a newly refurbished filling station last week. The al-Rahila Company is one of three companies established to participate in the privatization of fuel distribution in Libya; the other two are al-Sharara and the Libyan Company for Distribution of Petroleum Products. Ghanem told local press the aim was to accelerate privatization and to improve the quality of service by introducing competition.

¶2. (SBU) The chairman of al-Rahila, Mohamed bin Hussain, told the press his company and two other firms emerged as a result of the restructuring of Braiga Oil Marketing Company. Capitalized with 50 million Libyan dinars, al-Rahila currently owns 106 gas stations and is planning to build eight modern stations in various parts of the country. According to Ghanem, NOC will continue to have a role in fuel distribution in Libya through the state-owned Braiga Company.

¶3. (SBU) Comment: The launching of Libya's third privately-owned fuel distribution company marks another step in Libya's efforts to further privatize key sectors of its economy. The GOL hopes that this process will contribute to more reliable fuel supplies and help mitigate any shortages (earlier this year Tripoli residents faced gas shortages due to delayed shipments of refined gasoline). End comment.

SUBJECT: QADHAFI, BERLUSCONI SIGN HISTORIC AGREEMENT

TRIPOLI 00000688  001.2 OF 002

¶1.  (SBU) The Italian Ambassador in Tripoli briefed local heads of mission on a "historic treaty of friendship and cooperation" (or "colonial compensation agreement", as the Libyan government has characterized it) signed on August 30 in Benghazi by Libyan leader Muammar al-Qadhafi and Italian prime minister Silvio Berlusconi.  The signing ceremony took place on the front terrace of the former residence of the Italian colonial military governor of Libya, and was witnessed by several hundred descendants of Libyans who had been exiled by the Italians during that period, as well as by the son of famed Libyan resistance fighter Omar al-Mukhtar.  In remarks at the event that were widely publicized in Libya, Berlusconi expressed regret for the pain that Italy's colonization had caused to Libyans.

¶2. (SBU) According to the ambassador, the treaty is intended to "turn a new page" in Italian-Libyan relations, which have been plagued by difficulties due to Italy's colonial history in Libya. He said his government had insisted that Qadhafi, rather the the prime minister, sign the document to underscore its historic nature and to help ensure that it would be respected by Libya. It contains 23 articles covering a wide variety of topics including trade and investment, illegal immigration, scholarships, the return of stolen antiquities, the re-naming of a Libyan holiday, and, most prominently, an Italian commitment to fund USD 5 billion of infrastructure projects in Libya.

¶3. (SBU) Highlights of the treaty, which the ambassador said must be ratified by the Italian parliament, are:

-- Infrastructure investment: Italy will provide USD 5 billion in funding for infrastructure projects in Libya over a 20-year period (i.e., USD 250 million/year). Libya will propose projects; a joint Libyan-Italian committee will decide which will be funded; and Italian companies will implement them.

-- "Special initiatives": Italy will build 200 housing units for descendants of Libyans who were deported to Italy during the Italian occupation; provide hospitalization in Italy to victims of land mines (according to the local United Nations head representative, there are approx. 2 million land mines in Libya dating from the Italian colonial era, WWII, and Libya's conflicts with Egypt and Chad); provide a number of scholarships for Libyans to study in Italy; and return antiquities that had been taken from Libya to Italy (the "Venus of Cyrene," a Roman-era statue that had been removed from Libya in 1916, was unveiled at the signing ceremony).

-- Non-discrimination: Libya will revoke a regulation requiring Italian companies investing in Libya to double-register with the Ministry of Economy and the Prime Minister's office. This regulation had added a discriminatory, political layer of regulatory approval for Italian investments, the ambassador said.

-- Illegal migration: The treaty calls for implementation of earlier bilateral agreements aimed at stemming the flow of illegal migration from Libya to Italy. The ambassador noted that the number of such migrants, who are mainly sub-Saharan Africans, had sharply risen, from 8,000 last year to 18,000 this year.

-- Border control: In response to a longstanding Libyan request to the European Union to fund a border control surveillance system for its southern land border, Italy in this treaty agreed to fund up to 50 percent of the cost of such a system, provided that Italian firms are awarded a corresponding percentage of the project.

-- Visas: Italians who were expelled from Libya in 1970 (shortly after Qadhafi came to power) will be allowed to return to Libya to visit. They originally numbered over 20,000 and had been barred from returning to Libya.

-- Fishing: Libya agreed to negotiate an MOU with Italy over fishing rights in disputed waters.

-- Human rights: The agreement includes a provision on respect for human rights.

TRIPOLI 00000688 002.2 OF 002

-- Dialogue: The two sides agreed to meet yearly at the prime minister and foreign minister levels.

-- New holiday: Libya agreed to cancel the annual October 7 "Italian Evacuation Day", marking the expulsion of Italians from Italy, and replace it with a "Libyan-Italian Friendship Day," to be celebrated annually on August 30, the date of the signing of the treaty.

¶4. (SBU) Comment: The GOL was eager to conclude the historic treaty with Italy this year as part of its recent, accelerated opening to Europe that began with the resolution in 2007 of its dispute with the EU over the jailed Bulgarian nurses. The GOL views the signing of a claims settlement agreement with the United States on August 14 and the Secretary's upcoming visit as similarly major milestones in its re-engagement with the West. ¶1. (C) Summary. Dr. Ali Treiki, Secretary for African Affairs in the General People's Committee for Foreign Liaison and International Cooperation (MFA-equivalent), is optimistic that Chad and Sudan can be brought to the table to make peace through Libya's tri-lateral efforts. Treiki said the "Group of Three" (Treiki and the Chadian and Sudanese foreign ministers) is "the only effective group," contrasting it against the Contact Group (CG), which he characterized as "not being neighbors, like we (CG), which he characterized as "not being neighbors, like we are, to the conflict." While Libya plans to attend the CG meeting in Asmara on September 12, Treiki thought that agreements reached in Sirte and Tripoli over the past two years have a better chance of success than the Dakar agreement signed in March 2008. Treiki dismissed the African Union peacekeepers as poorly trained and undisciplined. He preferred that a joint Chadian-Sudanese force be deployed to Darfur after Presidents Deby and Bashir make peace. Libya strongly opposes the recent charges brought against President Bashir in the International Criminal Court (ICC), and Treiki predicted most African and Arab countries will withdraw from the Treaty of Rome if the indictment goes forward. Treiki invited Special Envoy Williamson to visit Tripoli in early-to-mid October. We think a visit next month could be useful. End Summary.

LIBYA'S TRI-LATERAL DIPLOMACY SUPERCEDES DAKAR PROCESS

¶2. (C) CDA met with MFA's Dr. Ali Treiki just one day after Libya celebrated the auspicious 9th anniversary of the September 9, 1999 Sirte Proclamation, which launched the African Union and is seen here as the road to a "United States of Africa." Libya feels that the conflict between Sudan and Chad is an African problem that demands an African solution. Treiki was optimistic that the peace process is moving forward and Libya will attend a meeting of the Contact Group (CG) in Asmara on September 12. Treiki said the CG plays an important role, but he thought it was relatively ineffective because it is comprised of states that are too far removed from the conflict to understand the complex issues involved. Instead, in Treiki's view, the "Group of Three" -- consisting of Dr. Treiki and the foreign ministers from Chad and Sudan -- is the body that will bring results. He highlighted the distance from Dakar and Asmara to the Sudan/Chad border, saying that Libya alone shared a frontier with the conflict.

¶3. (C) Treiki also opposed a proposed Arab League meeting in Doha on the issue, again saying that African problems should be dealt with in Africa. He was optimistic that Libya can broker and implement a viable solution with both parties soon. President Deby, he says, is "keen to cooperate" and Chad will work with Libya "regardless of [Deby's] relationship with the government in Sudan." Treiki confirmed that he has ongoing contact with rebel leaders -- most of whom have returned to Darfur and Chad -- but thinks that demobilization requires that both governments reconcile their differences first.

¶4. (C) Libya, he said, views peace in Darfur as essential for the security of Chad. Unfortunately, the international peacekeepers in Darfur are "poorly trained" and "are the worst troops from each nation." Libya believes that a stable settlement will require a bilateral peacekeeping force consisting of both Chadian and Sudanese troops who will have more incentive to keep peace.

BASHIR AND THE ICC

¶5. (C) Part of Treiki's confidence in Libya's chances for a breakthrough stems from his assessment that Bashir is ready for peace. The CDA asked if the recent charges brought against Bashir by the ICC had anything to do with his readiness, to which Treiki responded, "No, no, no. It is not true that this helps. It is very bad. We should have avoided it; it will hurt the peace process." In general, Libya feels strongly that genocide cases should be tried within the Sudanese judicial system. Speaking on behalf of all Arabs and Africans, he said that they all stood in opposition to the ICC. According to Treiki, Arabs won't recognize a conviction in front of the court and he expects most African and Arab states to withdraw from the Treaty of Rome if the Bashir indictment goes forward. He twice asked if we knew "who was behind the charges."

COOPERATION WITH THE US

¶6. (C) Treiki signaled that his window of opportunity to broker peace will be short-lived because he will take up a new responsibility next spring. After two stints as Foreign Minister and three as Libya's PermRep in New York, Treiki is looking forward to a new UN tour, this time as the African representative to the UNGA. Though he will not start his duties until June of 2009, he plans to travel to the US for consultations as early as March. He expressed gratitude for his ongoing dialogue with A/S Frazer, and gave an impressive recitation of his friends in the US government dating back 40 years. He asked the CDA to extend an invitation to Special Envoy Williamson to visit Tripoli in early- or mid-October.

¶7. (C) Comment: Libyan Leader Muammar al-Qadhafi sees himself as a major player in African issues and Dr. Treiki is his point man on the conflict between Chad and Sudan and the situation in Darfur. We strongly support a visit to Tripoli by Special Envoy Williamson to Tripoli in October, if the timing can be worked out. End Comment.

REASON: 1.4 (d)

¶1. (C) Summary: During a September 16 meeting, Dr. Ali al-Issawy, the Secretary of the General People's Committee for the Economy, Trade and Industry (equivalent of minister of economy and trade) told the CDA that he looked forward to the visit of Assistant Secretary of Commerce Israel Hernandez in October, and to finalizing the Trade and Investment Framework Agreement. Commenting on GOL plans to distribute oil revenues directly to the public and to privatize Libya's public sector, al-Issawy expressed concern about the impact on prices and the Libyan work ethic. Al-Issawy said he was interested in pairing U.S. and Libyan universities, and requested U.S. experts visit Libya to advise on the mortgage market. End summary.

WELCOMING A/S HERNANDEZ

¶2. (SBU) Minister al-Issawy said he looked forward to the planned visit of Assistant Secretary of Commerce and Director General of the U.S. and Foreign Commercial Service, Israel Hernandez in October. CDA, introducing the Embassy's new FCS officer, said the visit was intended to highlight the growing commercial relationship between the two countries, and to open the Embassy's U.S. and Foreign Commercial Service office.

TIFA: WAITING FOR THE END OF RAMADAN

¶3. (SBU) Al-Issawy said he looked forward to finalizing the Trade and Investment Framework Agreement (TIFA). He suggested that his staff work directly with Embassy staff (in coordination with USTR) to finalize the agreement. He preferred to wait until after Ramadan to meet and go over any remaining points in the text. (Note: Embassy had previously sent the latest USTR-cleared draft to the ministry's lead negotiator, Mr. Dia Hammouda and his team).

PLANS IN PROGRESS ON OIL WEALTH DISTRIBUTION

¶4. (C) Referring to Muammar al-Qadhafi's recent national day speech, the CDA asked about plans to distribute Libya's oil revenue directly to the public. The Minister expressed concern about inflation, noting they could not simply hand out cash. It would be preferable to distribute a combination of cash, securities and shares. He said the final decision on a framework for the distribution was not yet finished. Once the plan was finished, he believed it would be presented to the General People's Congress for final approval.

"LIBYA HAS A CULTURE OF RENT, NOT WORK"

¶5. (C) Minister al-Issawy commented that some Libyans were already dreaming about using the money they will eventually receive to live in Tunisia or Malta (two favorite nearby holiday destinations). He added some students are already wondering about the utility of studying because they think they won't need to find jobs once the wealth distribution program starts. He attributed these attitudes to what he called Libya's "culture of rent" as opposed to a "culture of work."

¶6. (C) On the other hand, the Minister noted a wealth distribution plan could smooth the way for greater liberalization of the economy, especially in terms of lifting price controls and doing away with subsidies. His thinking was that if people have more disposable income, they will be able to afford unsubsidized goods. When asked when the program would start, he said teams were working "day and night" to finalize the wealth distribution program and the related privatization plans.

MOVING AHEAD ON PRIVATIZATION AND LOOKING FOR U.S. PARTNERS IN HIGHER EDUCATION

¶7. (SBU) Minister al-Issawy said plans for privatizing key sectors of the economy, including health, education, utilities, and transportation were almost finished. The CDA said he had heard concerns from Libyans that they would be negatively affected by privatizing health and education, in particular. The Minister agreed these were the sectors that worried people the most.

¶8. (SBU) On higher education, in particular, the Minister said they were interested in joint ventures with U.S. universities, such as MIT. The CDA told him the Ministry of Foreign Affairs had raised a similar idea. He noted there were many models in the region for such collaboration, including in Dubai, Qatar, and Morocco. The CDA said the Embassy would provide him with more information on these partnerships.

.AND ALSO LOOKING TO LEARN FROM THE U.S. MORTGAGE CRISIS

TRIPOLI 00000741 002.2 OF 002

¶9. (SBU) The Minister also asked if the Embassy could provide an expert to speak about the mortgage situation in the U.S. since Libya plans to privatize the housing sector and make loans more broadly available to potential home-owners. He mentioned Freddie Mac and Fannie Mae. The CDA said he would look into potential U.S. experts to engage with the GOL.

SUBJECT: GERMAN OIL FIRM RWE MAKES TWO MORE DISCOVERIES IN LIBYA

REF: A) 08 TRIPOLI 474 ; B) 08 TRIPOLI 597

¶1. (SBU) The German oil firm RWE made two more oil discoveries in the Sirte Basin in Libya in September 2008. RWE's new successful discoveries do not reveal any new fields, but ensure the potential of its blocks in the Sirte Basin, where the quality of its sweet crude is high, and operating costs are low ($1-5 a barrel). Further appraisal work will be required in order to confirm the scale of the anticipated reserves and the possibilities of exploiting them economically.

¶2. (SBU) RWE is assessing these new reservoirs and is planning five further exploratory wells. RWE also intends to drill a series of appraisal wells in order to further define the most series of appraisal wells in order to further define the most promising areas in its concession.

¶3. (SBU) The agreement signed in June 2003 between RWE and the Libyan National Oil Corporation (NOC) fell under Exploration and Production Share Agreement-III (EPSA-III), and covers six blocks with a total area of 30,270 square kilometers. This EPSA agreement runs for a period of 30 years, with the NOC retaining a 68 percent interest in the block, and RWE holding the remaining 32 percent. RWE is the Operator with a 100 percent participation interest in these concessions. (Note: The EPSA-III framework featured significantly higher production shares for international oil companies (IOC's) whereas the latest EPSA-IV framework entails higher Libyan government shares (see reftels a, b). End note.)

¶4. (SBU) Comment: Overall, the exploration program of RWE in the Libyan Sirte Basin, with seven discoveries to date, is successful but not surprising since the Sirte Basin contains approximately 80 percent of Libya's total proven oil reserves. End of comment.

Drawing on points contained in reftel, Charge d'affaires sought Libyan support to prevent Abkhazian and South Ossetian participation in UNSC meetings in a September 23 discussion with MFA Secretary for Americas Affairs Ahmed Fituri. Fituri made no substantive response, but promised to inform appropriate officials of the USG position. He noted that the head of the MFA's International Organization Affairs Department, Hindi Abdulatif Hindi, is currently in New York for the UNGA, and that FM Abderrahman Shalgham had not/not traveled to New York to head Libya's delegation to the UNGA as had been previously anticipated.

¶1. We are still trying to arrange a face-to-face discussion on Libya's outstanding UNSCR 1267 nominations (reftel) with the MFA's International Organizations Affairs office. The combination of Ramadan hours and the absence in New York of the leadership of that office has so far frustrated our efforts. On September 17, we sent a diplomatic note transmitting the essential points concerning our desire to work with the Libyans to resolve the issues surrounding the libyan nominations for the 1267 list.

¶2. We will continue to seek a meeting with the relevant Libyan officials, but do not think it will occur until after the Id al-Fitr ends here on October 3.

SUBJECT: SCENESETTER FOR THE VISIT OF SE WILLIAMSON TO LIBYA

¶1.    (SBU) Your trip to Libya comes one month after Secretary Rice's historic visit marked a new chapter in Libya's re-engagement with the West and nearly two months after a U.S.-Libyan agreement to settle outstanding claims for compensation for attacks including the Lockerbie bombing of 1988.  In recent years, Libyan Leader Muammar al-Qadhafi has rebranded himself as a leader of Africa and a mediator in African affairs.  He is personally invested in peace in Chad and Sudan.  Libya's diplomatic effort is led by Dr. Ali Treiki, a career diplomat and former foreign minister with over 40 years of experience.

QADHAFI'S LEADERSHIP ASPIRATIONS

¶2.    (SBU) Libya celebrated 39 years of the "Al-Fateh" revolution last month. Since taking power in a bloodless coup in 1969, Qadhafi has pursued policies ranging from support for terrorism, rebellion, and insurgency to forging diplomatic bonds throughout the Arab and African spheres. The Sirte Declaration of September 1999 is touted here as the genesis of the African Union and a platform for the future "United States of Africa." Domestic propaganda celebrates Qadhafi as the father and guide of closer integration on the continent. Despite his leadership aspirations, the Leader is open to an international solution for Darfur. During her visit, the Secretary told Qadhafi that the U.S. wants to cooperate with Libya to secure peace in Africa and particularly in Sudan.

¶3. (SBU) Resolving the conflict in Darfur is also strategically important for Libya. Regime security depends, in part, on regional security. Senior GOL officials have made it clear that they are concerned that al-Qaida and associated groups could gain a foothold in ungoverned areas like Darfur. They worry about a potential "belt of terrorism" running from Somalia in the east to Mauritania in the west. A secure Sudan would bisect that belt, but if Chad and Sudan are unable to control their territories, Libya fears its own desert south will be vulnerable to terrorist infiltration.

LIBYA'S POINT-MAN ON DARFUR, SUDAN, CHAD

¶4. (SBU) Dr. Ali Treiki personally leads the GOL's diplomatic engagement on African issues. Treiki is a career diplomat who has served multiple times as PermRep in New York and as foreign minister. He now handles the Africa portfolio within the Foreign Ministry, but sits in the Prime Minister's office -- possibly a sign of his unique status within the GOL, as he is said to report directly to the Leader, and not to the Foreign Minister. Treiki will leave Libya in the spring or summer of next year to take on the presidency of the UN General Assembly for 2009.

¶5. (SBU) Treiki is supportive of the UN-AU peace process in principle, but worries about the effectiveness of AU troops in the region. He sees reconciliation between Chad and Sudan as a prerequisite to peace in Darfur and has hosted meetings between both sides to reach an end to hostilities. Treiki is willing to pay lip service to the Dakar Process and the efforts of the Contact Group in order to maintain cordial African relations. He has expressed doubt about the effectiveness of Arab League or Qatari intervention. He sees tri-lateral engagement between Libya, Chad, and Sudan as the most promising approach, given these governments' direct stake in the outcome. He views last month's agreement to exchange ambassadors between N'Djamena and Khartoum as a first step toward Chadian-Sudanese cooperation that will include a bilateral peacekeeping force to monitor the border. Treiki recently told us that Libya strongly opposes the ICC indictment of President Bashir, believing this will only harden Bashir's stance on Darfur.

¶6. (SBU) Libya's previous attempts to broker peace under Treiki's guidance have not yet borne fruit. The Darfur peace conference held in Sirte in 2007 disbanded after key rebel groups failed to attend. An intra-Chadian reconciliation conference held at the same time and attended by President Deby, Bashir, and Chadian rebels resulted in an agreed ceasefire. That ceasefire proved to be shortlived, however, and rebels resumed their attacks against the government in February 2008. Chadian intra-rebel talks held in Tripoli last spring and observed by the EU and UN also fizzled.

¶7. (SBU) Treiki enjoyed a good relationship with your predecessor and appreciates working with the United States. He thinks Libya is best positioned to bring peace to Darfur because of its proximity to the conflict, but he is open to effective foreign cooperation. However, he believes the situation in Sudan is an African problem that demands an African solution and will prefer to work within the framework of a resurrected Sirte agreement.

MANAGING PERCEPTIONS IMPORTANT FOR COOPERATION

¶8. (SBU) Qadhafi's desire to be viewed as a leader defines the parameters under which Libya can coordinate efforts in Sudan. He has railed against Western colonization in Africa and raised his concerns on AFRICOM with the Secretary. Treiki will need to balance the Leader's interest in success in Sudan with the need to show independence and leadership.

Drawing on background and talking points contained in reftel, we informed via dipnote on October 6 the General People's Committee for Foreign Liaison and International Cooperation (MFA equivalent) of the USG intention to vote against the Serbian resolution at UNGA concerning the legality of Kosovo's declaration of independence.  We urged Libya to join us and other concerned countries in voting against the measure.  We have been unable to meet with appropriate Libyan officials at the General People's Committee because of their Ramadan and the Eid al-Fitr holiday work schedules.  Given Libya's previous position on Kosovo, we expect that its delegation to the UNGA is likely to vote with any emerging Arab/Islamic consensus.

SUBJECT: U.S. FOREIGN COMMERCIAL SERVICE OPENS FOR BUSINESS IN LIBYA

¶1. (SBU) Summary: During his October 5 visit to Tripoli, Department of Commerce Assistant Secretary and Director General of the U.S. and Foreign Commercial Service Israel Hernandez officially opened the new Foreign Commercial Service office at the Embassy and discussed commercial opportunities with U.S. and Libyan business leaders and cooperation with senior Libyan government officials. Coming one month after Secretary Rice's historic trip to Libya, Libyan government representatives enthusiastically welcomed him, as did the small but growing Libyan private sector and representatives of U.S. firms in the Libyan private sector and representatives of U.S. firms in the energy, telecommunications, and construction sectors. The main messages to him were that there are significant commercial opportunities for American firms in Libya, but challenges still remain in terms of visas, and legal and bureaucratic obstacles. End summary.

¶2. (SBU) In a breakfast roundtable, the leaders of the major U.S. firms in Libya briefed A/S Hernandez on their activities here and described some of the challenges they face, such as procuring visas (both U.S. and Libyan) for employees and Libyan government trainees, and navigating the Libyan legal system. Most of the U.S. companies are involved in oil exploration, production and services, while others have contracts in the burgeoning construction sector (such as AECOM, based in Los Angeles). Some U.S. firms, such as Motorola, are seeking to enter the Libyan telecommunications sector. All the participants voiced complaints about visas, either for their U.S. staff (and their families) to reside in Libya or for their national staff and government partners to travel to the U.S. for training. Some said they believe the Libyan government is delaying the issuance of U.S. employees' visas because Libyans must still travel abroad (i.e., to Tunis) in order to apply for a U.S. visa. The Charge d'affaires pointed out there is a Business Visa program at post to facilitate visas for U.S. companies' Libyan employees and also informed the group the Embassy expects to expand visa issuance in Tripoli in 2009.

¶3. (SBU) Another concern of the U.S. businesses relates to the Libyan legal system. One general manager noted "nothing is written, so all is interpretation." He remarked that he believes Libya is even more litigious than the U.S. and since there are no international law firms and no internationally-trained lawyers, the companies have to rely on local legal counsel. As Libya has been isolated for 20 years, even legal firms based in the Middle East (such as in Dubai) have limited utility in Libya since they lack experience here. On the positive side, U.S. businesses have not had major problems importing materials for their operations, especially since most activities are tied to Libyan government entities, such as the National Oil Company (NOC).

¶4. (SBU) A/S Hernandez also met with the Libyan Businessmen Council, the main organization of Libya's nascent private sector. The Council welcomed the opening of an Embassy Commercial Office because they would like to do business with small- and medium-sized U.S. companies. Most of the American delegations they have seen were from large companies that dealt mainly with the Libyan government. Most of the Council's members, however, are smaller Libyan enterprises. One of the Libyan representatives for a major U.S. equipment provider noted the Libyan market is highly competitive and many European companies (French, German, Italians) never left Libya during the embargo years. It is therefore even more difficult for U.S. companies to enter or re-enter this market, he said. He did not foresee a "u-turn" on the part of the Libyans to nationalize the economy, as in the past, but he did see a need for a more aggressive U.S. approach to help U.S. businesses and to promote the education of Libyans in American universities, especially in medicine and technology.

¶5. (SBU) The next stop was the Libyan government's National Planning Council in which Under Secretary Mohamed Zidoun and his staff briefed A/S Hernandez on Libya's efforts to diversify its economy and to privatize government enterprises. The Assistant Secretary outlined the purpose of his trip to Libya, i.e. to open the new U.S. FCS office here, noting that Libya was one of the fastest growing markets for U.S. trade. He said the US already had a significant trade deficit with Libya (USD 2.9 billion) so the new FCS office would seek to increase U.S. exports to the Libyan market. Under Secretary Zidoun explained the role of the National Planning Council as a Libyan "think tank" that prepares studies related to economic, commercial and trade policy. The proposed government restructuring aimed to provide better services to the population and to further development in education, technology, and healthcare. U/S Zidoun's staff would like to see Libya adopt U.S. models for an educational curriculum. Libya is also trying to diversify its "mono-source" economy so as to raise the standard of living. Libya sees itself as a potential transport hub (like Dubai) and in particular, seeks to be the "gateway" to the rest of Africa. Libya also wants to learn from the Gulf countries' experiences: "It is not enough to construct sky-scrapers but one must also train people to run the companies that occupy them."

¶6. (SBU) On privatization, the Planning Council emphasized "expanding the base of ownership." The Council has conducted studies on how to provide services to Libyans everywhere in the country via the municipalities (akin to counties in the U.S.). The goal is to provide wealth directly to citizens who may spend the money as they like. The Council's staff noted Libya has a relatively small population concentrated along the Mediterranean coast. Therefore, they think reforms are possible so that government will provide only the "basics." One Council member commented, "we cannot go back; we have suffered a lot and we are facing hard moments" in terms of "rebuilding our country" and engaging with the world. He said to A/S Hernandez, "we need your help in education and training" in order to rebuild Libya.

¶7. (SBU) Lastly, A/S Hernandez met with the Under Secretary of the General People's Committee (GPC) for Economy, Trade and Investment. Under Secretary Taher Sarkez and his staff explained the GPC's role in negotiating international trade agreements (such as the ongoing Trade and Investment Framework talks with USTR) and in promoting Libyan exports. A/S Hernandez extended an invitation to Under Secretary Sarkez to visit Commerce Department offices in the U.S. to learn about programs to assist small- and medium-sized businesses. Under Secretary Sarkez welcomed this opportunity. A/S Hernandez said the new FCS office would also work with Libyan businesses who were interested in participating in American trade shows and other networking opportunities in the U.S. U/S Sarkez noted the need to host more U.S. business groups in Libya and said Libya would probably need to issue more visas to Americans. Finally, U/S Sarkez' staff described an initiative of the GPC to promote Libyan exports other than oil and gas, such as agricultural and fisheries products, via the newly-created Libyan Export Promotion Center.

¶8. (SBU) Comment: A/S Hernandez' trip to Libya is the first high-level delegation here since Secretary Rice visited Libya just a month ago. He was enthusiastically welcomed by Libyan government representatives, the small but growing Libyan private sector, and representatives of U.S. firms. The main messages to him were that Libya is open to American companies and future educational/technological exchanges but that challenges still remain in forging the new relationship in terms of visas, legal and bureaucratic obstacles and re-establishing new ties with Libyans after a 25-year absence from the market. End comment.

¶1.   (C)  Summary: Regime critic Idriss Boufayed, who was sentenced to 25 years in prison in June and who is suffering from cancer, has been released from custody on humanitarian grounds and has returned home.  He may seek to secure travel documents (seized at the time of his arrest) and permission to travel abroad for medical treatment. The Qadhafi Development Foundation (QDF) played a role in urging his release; the Human Rights Society of Libya (HRSL), which is affiliated with the QDF, is monitoring Boufayed's case and has offered to help him secure travel documents and permission to travel. 10 other individuals convicted and sentenced in connection with Boufayed's case remain in custody. EU missions are waiting for permission from Brussels to collectively demarche the Government of Libya (GOL) to request consular access to one of them, a dual Danish-Libyan national. The HRSL has petitioned the QDF to urge the GOL to release the 10 other individuals; QDF Chairman Saif al-Islam al-Qadhafi is currently reviewing the petition. While Boufayed's release is a positive gesture, some Libyan interlocutors have noted that he was essentially let go to avoid criticism of the regime if he were to succumb to cancer while still in the GOL's custody. End summary.

BOUFAYED RETURNS HOME

¶2. (C) Libyan opposition website Libya al-Mustaqbal reported October 8 that Libyan authorities allowed detained regime critic Dr. Idriss Boufayed to leave the Sabratha Hospital, where he had been held and undergone treatment for lung cancer since his transfer from prison earlier this year (ref A). Mohammed Tarnesh, Executive Director of the Human Rights Society of Libya (HRSL), told us October 12 that he had spoken with members of Boufayed's family, who confirmed that Boufayed had returned to the family's home in Gharyan on October 8. Tarnesh said intervention by the Qadhafi Development Foundation (QDF), chaired by Saif al-Islam al-Qadhafi, son of Muammar al-Qadhafi, had helped facilitate Boufayed's release on humanitarian grounds. Boufayed was convicted on June 10 of planning to foment a rebellion against the "people's authority system" and meeting with an official from a foreign government, and was sentenced to 25 years in prison (details ref B).

MAY SEEK TO TRAVEL ABROAD FOR MEDICAL TREATMENT

¶3. (C) Tarnesh said Boufayed, whose medical condition was described by family members as "poor", was considering whether to try to travel abroad for medical treatment. Tarnesh believed Boufayed was inclined to do so. A complication was that Boufayed's passport and identity documents were confiscated at the time of his arrest in February 2007. Tarnesh said he offered the assistance of the HRSL in helping Boufayed obtain his passport and identity documents and permission to exit the country. Noting that Boufayed was very weak, Tarnesh lamented that he had not been granted a humanitarian parole sooner after his conviction in June to allow him to benefit from specialized medical treatment that could not be obtained in Libya. In remarks to the press on October 14, the QDF's Human Rights Committee Director, Saleh Abdulsalam Saleh, gave media interviews in which he said the QDF would facilitate Boufayed's travel to Switzerland for cancer treatment; however, ongoing Swiss-Libyan contretemps related to the July arrest of Hannibal al-Qadhafi (ref C), son of Muammar al-Qadhafi, could hamper those efforts.

EU CONTEMPLATES FURTHER ACTION; HRSL URGES ACTION TO RELEASE OTHER PRISONERS

¶4. (C) French and British diplomats told us EU heads of mission had agreed to a joint demarche to the GOL requesting consular access to Jamal al-Hajj, a Danish-Libyan dual citizen who was among the individuals arrested along with Boufayed. EU officials in Brussels are currently reviewing the proposed joint demarche, which would call for consular access to Boufayed, information on the status of the appeal of his conviction and possibly urge his release. It is not expected that missions in Tripoli will receive a decision on the joint demarche by weeks' end.
As reported refs B and D, EU member missions previously

As reported refs B and D, EU member missions previously demarched the GOL to urge Idriss Boufayed's release and consular access to Jamal al-Hajj; however, they have not/not raised the cases of the other members of the group convicted in connection with the case. Separately, the HRSL's Tarnesh told us October 14 that his organization had submitted a petition to the QDF asking that the organization intervene to urge the GOL to release the other individuals convicted in connection with the case. Tarnesh argued in the petition that gross improprieties in authorities' investigation of the case and the excessive sentences justified a review of their case, if not an outright pardon. Tarnesh told CDA Saif al-Islam al-Qadhafi is currently considering the petition.

BACKGROUND

¶5. (C) Boufayed is a long-time critic of Libyan leader Muammar al-Qadhafi, and directed a small opposition group called the National Union for Reform during 16 years of exile in Switzerland. He returned to Libya in September 2006 and was briefly detained in November and December 2006. 14 self-described dissidents and regime critics were arrested on/about February 16, 2007 on the eve of staging a peaceful public demonstration in Tripoli's Green Square to protest Libyan authorities' violent suppression of a demonstration in Benghazi a year earlier. The arrests came shortly after Idriss Boufayed and al-Mahdi Humaid met with an Emboff to discuss the planned demonstration (see refs E-G and H-I (NOTAL) for details on the arrest and the GOL's reaction to Emboff's meeting with dissidents). Eleven members of the group, including Boufayed, were convicted on June 10 of planning to foment a rebellion against the "people's authority system" and of meeting with an official from a foreign government; sentences ranged from 6 to 25 years (see ref B for details on sentences). Juma'a Boufayed, brother of Idriss Boufayed, and Adel Humaid were released in late May and early June 2008, respectively. Abdulrahman al-Qutawi has not been seen in prison or at trial proceedings since he was arrested with Juma'a Boufayed in February 2007. Opposition websites have alleged that he died in police custody while being interrogated shortly after he was taken into custody.

¶6. (C) Comment: While Boufayed's release is a positive gesture, some Libyan interlocutors have noted that he was essentially let go to avoid criticism of the regime if he were to succumb to cancer while still in the GOL's custody. The HRSL's Tarnesh stressed that six months elapsed between the QDF's announcement that it had facilitated Boufayed's transfer from prison in Tripoli to the Sabratha Hospital (60 km west of Tripoli) for treatment and his ultimate release to return home. End comment.

REF: TRIPOLI 719

TRIPOLI 00000820 001.2 OF 002

CLASSIFIED BY: John T. Godfrey, CDA, U.S. Embassy - Tripoli, Dept of State.
REASON: 1.4 (b), (d)

¶1. (C) Summary. Special Envoy Richard Williamson emphasized the urgent need to stem the violence in Darfur in order to bring relief to the millions of displaced persons and refugees during his meeting in Tripoli with Libyan Secretary for African Affairs Ali Treiki on October 6. SE Williamson said he appreciated Libya's interest in securing peace in the region and welcomed Libya's initiatives to broker an agreement between the governments in Khartoum and N'Djamena. Treiki reiterated Libya's tri-lateral peace plan that includes a joint Chadian-Sudanese peacekeeping force. The first meeting of Treiki and the Foreign Ministers of Chad and Sudan is scheduled for October 23 in Tripoli. End Summary.

TREIKI REITERATES "TRI-LATERAL" PROPOSAL

¶2. (C) SE Richard Williamson met with U/S-equivalent for African Affairs Ali Treiki October 6. Treiki thanked SE Williamson for visiting Tripoli and highlighted the importance of the regular consultations he enjoys with U.S. counterparts, especially A/S Jendayi Frazer. Treiki told SE Williamson that his visit came at an important time, as many initiatives have been proposed to end the crisis in Sudan and that the time had come to choose which vehicle would be most effective in ending violence and providing relief in Darfur.

¶3. (C) Treiki presented SE Williamson with a detailed explanation of Libya's "tri-lateral" peace initiative. The first step is to ease tensions and renew diplomatic relations between Chad and Sudan. After state-to-state hostility has been reduced, Libya envisions a joint peacekeeping deployment consisting of 1,000 troops from both Chad and Sudan at 10 locations on the border. He stressed that proximity to the conflict gave Libya a unique position to bring the parties to the negotiating table. He dismissed the recent Contact Group meeting in Asmara as "unsuccessful," and said "nothing was done there - we don't need meeting after meeting." He was equally doubtful that a Qatari proposal to work through the Arab League would net results, noting that African rebels would be distrustful of Arab mediators and noted that even Egypt is not happy with the Qatar initiative. He repeated his recommendation that the "AU/UN framework" was the appropriate venue for other countries to intervene.

¶4. (C) During the meeting, Treiki answered a call on his cell phone from Sudanese Advisor to the President, Mustafa Osman Ismail to coordinate a tri-lateral meeting in Tripoli for mid-October. Ismail said he would be traveling but called back a bit later to say October 23 would be fine. Treiki dispatched aides to coordinate the date with the Chadian FM Moussa Faki. (Note: As in previous meetings, Treiki had to ask - in Arabic - for his aides to remind him of Faki's name. End note.)

WILLIAMSON WELCOMES LIBYA'S INITIATIVES, PRESSES FOR IMMEDIATE RELIEF

¶5. (C) SE Williamson noted four rings of interest in Darfur: First, the parties on the ground in Sudan; second, the neighbors with a large stake in peace in Sudan, including Libya; third, more distant countries with a deep interest in the region like the U.S. and EU partners; and fourth, countries who want to help, but are too far removed from the crisis to be effective. He agreed that resolving tensions between the governments in Khartoum and N'Djamena would be a positive step in stabilizing the region. Williamson and Treiki shared their concerns on the inevitable lack of implementation of the September 19 agreement between Minni Minnawi and Ali Osman Taha. Treiki said GOS treatment of Minnawi, and lack of implementation of the Darfur Peace Agreement would prevent other rebel groups from negotiating with Khartoum.

¶6. (C) The Special Envoy stressed the importance of immediate relief for the millions suffering in Sudan. After providing Treiki with USG efforts to bolster the UN/AU peacekeeping force and our aid to the region, SE Williamson conveyed our concern that new violence could erupt at the end of the rainy season or with an ICC warrant for President Bashir. Treiki thought that there were "no serious immediate threats except Khalil Ibrahim," and that he is in contact with the GOC to prevent an attack by Ibrahim. Treiki belittled the role of rebel leaders in Europe, especially Abdul Wahid al-Nur, who he derided as, "sitting peacefully in Paris making propaganda."

TRIPOLI 00000820 002.2 OF 002

LIBYAN REACTION

¶7. (C) After initially agreeing to a low-key visit, Treiki rolled out the red carpet and had both photos and video of the hour-long meeting. State media reported the visit on the front page and Treiki gave a five-minute interview on TV evening news. However, neither report gave specifics of the meeting, referring merely to friendly consultations, holding out the prospect of further policy consultations with the USG.

¶8. (C) Comment. While the Special Envoy made clear that our priorities were humanitarian relief and an immediate cessation of violence, Treiki's focus continues to be a state-based solution with a longer timeline. SE Williamson gave specific detail of refugee camps of particular concern and recent attacks, but Treiki preferred to talk about high-level diplomatic solutions. The GOL's initiative may be complementary to our goals, but Treiki seems more concerned about securing diplomatic and security gains for Libya than immediately and directly addressing the humanitarian crisis. End Comment.

¶9. (U) This cable has been cleared by SE Williamson.

¶1. (C) CDA met October 15 with Jalal Jaidi of the MFA's International Organizations office to discuss Libya's response to reftel demarche. Jaidi said the GOL was working to develop additional supporting evidentiary and bio-identifier information on the eight USG holds and expected to provide that information in seven to ten days. On the proposed visit of OFAC Director Adam Szubin to discuss 1267 listing modalities and counterterrorism finance, Jaidi said it was unlikely that key GOL interlocutors for those issues would be available during the last week of October. The GOL would strongly prefer that the visit be delayed until early November.

(S) CDA met October 13 with Jalal Jaidi of the MFA's International Organizations Department to follow up on reftel demarche and urge that the GOL freeze assets of entities listed reftel, require comprehensive mandatory inspections of IRISL-related cargo and ensure that all Libyan national companies cease business operations with IRISL. Jaidi argued that it was up to individual shipping companies and freight forwarders to determine whether to do business with IRISL, and said he was unsure whether a customs mechanism existed that would facilitate mandatory inspections of IRISL-related cargo. He said the GOL would review demarche points and notify us if they decide to take any measures related to IRISL. ¶1.   (C) Summary: In a meeting with a visiting U.S. trade specialist, Libya's Central Bank Governor shared his thoughts on the current financial crisis and outlined steps the government is taking to maintain financial stability.  Libya is less focused on the short term impact of declining stock and investment holdings and more concerned by potential near to mid-term declines in oil prices, which could adversely impact the government's ability to finance its ambitious development programs. He had cancelled his trip to the recent IMF/World Bank meetings to help orchestrate Libya's efforts to shift its position in global markets, to include a decision earlier this week to purchase some two billion dollars worth of depreciated stock in European and U.S. markets. End summary.

¶2. (C) On October 13, Public Affairs-sponsored speaker Bruce Stokes, a trade and economic specialist with the National Journal, met with Libyan Central Bank (CB) Governor Farhat Omar Ben Gdara. Stokes was accompanied by the CDA, PAO, Econoff and PA Assistant. (Note: Ben Gdara is one of our more impressive and candid interlocutors on banking and financial matters. Young, intellectually curious and dynamic - there is always a stack of books on current affairs, which he reportedly devours, on his desk - there is criticism that he is unqualified. He is reportedly a protigi of Saif al-Islam al-Qadhafi, son of Muammar al-Qadhafi, who strongly advocated his selection as CB Governor. End note.) Ben Gdara discussed how the current global financial crisis has affected Libya's development plans and steps the government is taking to maintain financial stability.

¶3. (C) Downplaying concern about the short-term impact of the crisis on Libya's sizeable investments in international markets, Ben Gdara stressed that a continued flattening of oil prices could significantly and adversely impact Libya's ambitious development programs. Current development budgets, most of which date to 2006 and 2007, were calculated on the assumption that oil prices over the next five years would be at/around USD 65; however, as oil prices spiked earlier this year, larger development-related commitments were made. If oil prices continued to decline, Libya could be forced to reconsider projected development project outlays and/or seek additional foreign investment capital. A combination of flat oil prices and continued volatility in global markets would be particularly difficult for Libya. Ben Gdara also suggested that implementation of the ambitious government re-structuring and privatization program proposed by Muammar al-Qadhafi in March 2008 (details refs A-B) could be delayed by lower oil prices.

¶4. (C) Ben Gdara said maintaining Libya's current level of foreign currency reserves was a priority for the GOL; declining oil prices could make that difficult. He said Libya currently has roughly USD 50 billion worth of foreign currency holdings in offshore accounts, which he likened to an emergency fund, and an additional USD 45 billion in foreign currency holdings managed by its sovereign wealth fund, the Libyan Investment Authority (LIA). (Note: Italian and French diplomats have told us that GOL policy calls for maintaining sizeable hard currency holdings as a hedge against the possibility that Libya could fall out of international favor and again be subject to international sanctions. End note.)

¶5. (C) Due to the financial crisis, Libya has reconfigured its own foreign investments to take advantage of low prices. Ben Gdara said GOL fund managers had decided earlier this week to purchase USD 700 million worth of depreciated stock in the U.S. market and almost USD 1.3 billion worth of stock in European markets. (Note: The U.K. Embassy's DHM told us that the LIA had recently contracted with several well-respected fund managers in London's financial sector (NFI) to manage day-to-day investment decisions for Libya's sovereign wealth fund. End note.) He partly attributed the decision to cancel his attendance at the recent IMF/World Bank annual meetings in Washington to having had to stay home to help make decisions about re-positioning Libya's investments in light of the ongoing crisis. He stressed that he had looked forward to meeting with Under Secretary Jeffrey and others, and hoped those meetings could be re-scheduled.

¶6. (C) Comment: Libya's decision to re-invest in U.S. financial markets is an interesting development in light of the fact that it divested itself of billions of dollars worth of U.S. holdings earlier this year in response to adoption of the Lautenberg Amendment (ref C), which allows claimants in terrorism-related cases in U.S. courts to seek attachment of Libyan assets. End comment.

¶1. (C) CDA met October 15 with Jalal Jaidi of the MFA's International Organizations office to discuss Libya's response to reftel demarche. Jaidi said the GOL was working to develop additional supporting evidentiary and bio-identifier information on the eight USG holds and expected to provide that information in seven to ten days. On the proposed visit of OFAC Director Adam Szubin to discuss 1267 listing modalities and counterterrorism finance, Jaidi said it was unlikely that key GOL interlocutors for those issues would be available during the last week of October. The GOL would strongly prefer that the visit be delayed until early November.

¶1. (C) Summary: Russian diplomats in Tripoli said Libyan leader Muammar al-Qadhafi planned to travel to Moscow October 31-November 2 to reciprocate the visit of then-President Vladimir Putin to Tripoli earlier this year. Al-Qadhafi will be preceded by his son, Muatassim al-Qadhafi (Libya's National Security Adviser), who plans to arrive as early as October 25 to meet with officials at the Federal Security Bureau and the Ministry for Emergency Situations. The visit would come on the heels of a recent port call in Tripoli by Russian naval vessels. Al-Qadhafi reportedly considers his relationship with Putin to be good, and Libya seems eager to at least give the appearance of cultivating closer ties with Moscow, possibly to counter-balance recent agreements with Italy and the U.S. on colonial compensation and terrorism-related legal claims, respectively. A successful visit to Russia could prompt closer military-to-military cooperation and equipment sales, something Russian diplomats here say they've been advocating for some time. End Summary.

LIBYA HEADS INTO THE COLD

¶2. (C) Poloff met with Russian Emboff Evgeny Kozlov October 16 to discuss the recent visit to Tripoli of Russian warships. Kozlov volunteered that he was involved in finalizing arrangements for an upcoming October 31-November 2 visit to Russia by Libyan leader Muammar al-Qadhafi. It is expected that military-military cooperation and sales of Russian military equipment to Libya will feature prominently in al-Qadhafi's visit. (Note: Per refs B-C, Russian DCM Anatoly Martinov told us in April in advance of Putin's visit that Russia hoped a joint Russian-Libyan military cooperation council established in the late 1990's would yield increased sales to Libya of Russian military equipment. End note.) Kozlov said al-Qadhafi had hoped that Putin would attend his Revolution Day speech on August 31 in Benghazi and help inaugurate the Russian Railroad Company's work on a multi-billion dollar contract to construct a 554-kilometer rail spur between Benghazi and Sirte, which was negotiated during Putin's visit in April (ref A). Al-Qadhafi had also arranged a joint meeting with Italian PM Berlusconi and Bolivian President Morales - both attended the Revolution Day celebration - and was disappointed that Putin had not joined them. Describing the atmosphere between al-Qadhafi and Putin during the latter's visit to Tripoli on April 16 as "very friendly", Kozlov said Libya seemed eager to deepen its "productive coordination efforts" with Russia.

¶3. (C) According to Kozlov, Muatassim al-Qadhafi, son of Muammar al-Qadhafi and National Security Adviser, will travel to Russia ahead of his father to meet with senior officials at Russia's Federal Security Bureau and Ministry of Emergency Situations. (Note: Muatassim and another al-Qadhafi son, Khamis al-Qadhafi, have undertaken military studies in Moscow. Khamis al-Qadhafi spent 14 months in a combined Russian staff college course especially designed for him and obtained a PhD in military sciences in 2007. End note.) Kozlov did not yet know whether External Security Organization chief Musa Kusa would accompany Muatassim. He noted that nearly 200 Libyan protocol and MFA officials, together with another 100 military and security personnel, were en route to Moscow to advance the visit. Russian officials believed al-Qadhafi planned to stop in Minsk and Kiev on his way back to Tripoli from Moscow.

THE BEAR VISITS THE SHORES OF TRIPOLI

¶4. (C) Al-Qadhafi's visit would follow the October 11-13 port call of Russian warships to the shores of Tripoli (ref D). The nuclear-powered missile cruiser Peter the Great, together with the frigate Intrepid and anti-submarine destroyer Admiral Chabanenko and support vessels, were in and around Tripoli harbor. (Note: Tripoli's relatively shallow port prevented the Peter the Great from docking in the harbor. End note.) According to Kozlov, at least seven senior Libyan naval officers, including the commander of the Tripoli naval base, officers, including the commander of the Tripoli naval base, toured the vessels. Defense attaches accredited to Tripoli did not have an opportunity to tour the vessels, but children from the Russian Embassy-sponsored school did. In an apparent nod to tensions between Moscow and Kiev, Ukrainian children at the school stayed in class while their Russian, Belarussian and Central Asian classmates enjoyed their field trip. Kozlov said the flotilla would stop in Turkey and Syria before heading to Venezuela for joint Russian-Venezuelan naval maneuvers scheduled for late November. Media reports indcate that the Intrepid will proceed separately to waters off Somalia.

¶5. (C) Comment: Kozlov touted the ship visit and al-Qadhafi's upcoming trip as signs that Russian-Libyan ties continue to grow. Saif al-Islam al-Qadhafi made several statements to the press supporting Russia's actions at the height of the Georgia crisis in August, and Libyan PM al-Mahmoudi reportedly told the Kremlin that Libya would support Russia in the UNSC; however, it is difficult to assess the extent of Libya's commitment to deeper ties with Moscow. Having just concluded agreements with Italy and the U.S. to resolve issues of longstanding concern - colonial compensation and terrorism-related legal claims, respectively - al-Qadhafi may be seeking to balance engagement with Western powers by reminding us and others that he still has other options for military-to-military cooperation and other engagement. On a lighter note, Kozlov told us Libyan protocol had not yet raised whether and where it might pitch al-Qadhafi's tent - his preferred mode of lodging while on the road - in Moscow during the chilly fall season. End Comment.GODFREY

¶1. (C) During a recent meeting at the office of MFA Secretary for the Americas (A/S-equivalent), Dr. Ahmed Fituri, P/E Chief commented on a stack of English-language books on current affairs on Fituri's desk. Fituri offered that he had been personally tasked by the Leader, Muammar al-Qadhafi, to read and summarize in four- to seven-page Arabic-language reports "significant" English-language books dealing with American politics and policy, current affairs and history. The books on his desk were those on which he was currently working. Fituri said the Leader occasionally assigned Fituri to translate particular books. Fituri, an academic by training with a Phd from the University of Michigan, said he had begun the work several years ago, before assuming his position at the MFA. Characterizing al-Qadhafi as an avid consumer of television and print media, he said other "trusted officials" were similarly tasked with preparing summaries of books written in other non-Arabic languages. He noted that al-Qadhafi's demand for these translations had somewhat diminished in the past year.

¶2. (C) Fituri estimated that he has summarized six to eight books per year, as well as miscellaneous articles from key journals and magazines. He was currently summarizing Fareed Zakaria's latest book, "The Post-American World" and was about to begin work on Thomas Friedman's "The World is Flat 3.0". He had recently translated in full the Secretary's article in the Foreign Affairs journal. Other books Fituri had summarized in the past year included Zakaria's "The Future of Freedom: Illiberal Democracy at Home and Abroad" (which al-Qadhafi liked), Barack Obama's "The Audacity of Hope" and George Soros' "The Age of Fallibility: Consequences of the War on Terror".

¶3. (C) Fituri offered that al-Qadhafi and External Security Organization Director Musa Kusa had asked him about six months ago to undertake a similar program for Muatassim al-Qadhafi, son of Muammar al-Qadhafi and National Security Adviser, with an emphasis on security/intelligence issues and European and American politics and history. Fituri had so far only sent Muatassim summaries of articles and books he had already prepared for his father. Kusa, he said, had complained to him in August that Muatassim was "not an avid reader" and had to be prodded to read even summaries. Stressing that Muatassim had "his own strengths", Fituri offered that many in senior GOL circles did not consider Muatassim to be as intellectually curious as either his father or his older brother, Saif al-Islam, who is enrolled in a Phd program at the London School of Economics.

¶4. (C) Comment: The beginning of the relative downtick in the Leader's reading roughly coincides with the period early last summer in which al-Qadhafi reportedly suffered a series of minor strokes. Fituri's characterization of Muatassim's less than enthusiastic embrace of the reading program is no surprise, given what we've heard from other contacts, who describe him as a traditional strongman who has focused on consolidating his power-base and pursuing his business interests and social life. End comment.

implemented shortly thereafter, the CB Governor expects the process to take several years. End summary.

¶2. (C) Public Affairs-sponsored visitor Bruce Stokes, a trade specialist with the National Journal, met with Libya's Central Bank Governor, Farhat Bengadara on October 13. Stokes was accompanied by CDA, PAO, Econoff and PA Assistant. (Note: Bengadara is one of our more impressive and candid interlocutors on banking and financial matters. Young, intellectually curious and dynamic - there is always a stack of books on current affairs, which he reportedly devours, on his desk - there is criticism that he is unqualified. He is reportedly a protege of Saif al-Islam al-Qadhafi, son of Muammar al-Qadhafi, who strongly advocated his selection as CB Governor. End note.) Among other topics such as the global financial crisis (ref A), Bengadara spoke at length about Libya's financial situation and its plans to restructure existing government structures and distribute oil revenues directly to Libyans as part of a program of radical privatization (ref B).

¶3. (C) Conceding that Libya's ambitious infrastructure and development programs would likely be adversely affected if oil prices continue to fall (the GOL's 5-year plan is based on a price of USD 65/barrel) and that attracting foreign investment could be harder in light of the global financial crisis, Bengadara said Libya's development plans would have to be reconsidered and adjusted. Asked whether slumping oil prices would slow implementation of reforms proposed by Muammar al-Qadhafi, he said it was more likely that infrastructure development would be postponed.

¶4. (C) Addressing al-Qadhafi's proposed reforms, Bengadara said he favored a strong "shock therapy" approach that would jump start the transition from a largely statist economy to one with a more robust private sector. Taking issue with GPC Secretaries (minister-equivalent) who advocate a more gradual approach, Bengadara said he preferred direct cash payments to Libyans (in line with al-Qadhafi's proposal) to a continued program of price supports for key commodities and services; however, he conceded that details for implementing direct distribution of oil revenues had not been finalized. In contrast to al-Qadhafi's insistence in major public addresses earlier this year that direct wealth distribution be inaugurated by year's end and be fully implemented soon thereafter, Bengadara said he expected the program would take two to three years at a minimum, and likely five to ten, to fully realize. He offered that once a plan had been finalized, it would likely have to be approved by the General People's Congress before it could be implemented.

¶5. (C) Reiterating themes he touched on in our meeting with him in March, he said a program of direct wealth distribution could undermine parallel efforts by the GOL to encourage entrepeneurial enterprise and a more robust private sector. Noting that Libyans did not have a strong work ethic, he expressed concern that after years of living in a system of oil-funded cradle-to-grave subsidies, prompting people to be more self-reliant was a challenge. Direct wealth distribution could disincentivize them to work at all, but the proposed reforms could help temper that effect. For example, health and education would no longer be free in the future and there would be competition, which he viewed as the necessary driving force of the economy.

¶6. (C) The fact that 95 percent of the economy currently comprises government entities - something "not correct if you want to accelerate growth" - put a premium on accelerating privatization. Bengadara said he saw merit in the U.S. economic system and admired companies like General Electric, with its vast numbers of shareholders; however, during times of crisis large numbers of ordinary people were hurt in capitalist systems. Libya was striving for "people's capitalism," which he described as something between socialism and capitalism. A first step would be to develop public-private partnerships, particularly in non-oil sectors.

TRIPOLI 00000842 002 OF 002

¶7. (C) Comment: The fact that details for a plan to implement direct wealth distribution, together with Bengadara's candid assessment that the process is likely to take multiples of years, vice months, suggests that al-Qadhafi's vision of distributing checks to Libyan families by early next year is unrealistic. In our meeting with him in March, Bengadara advocated a basket of subsidies, stock and cash as opposed to lump sum payments, but expressed frustration that Libya's limited bureaucratic capacity made such a scheme difficult. His remarks in our most recent meeting suggest that he has modified his thinking and may be leaning towards a heavier cash component of the proposed wealth distribution program. End comment.

REASON: 1.4 (b), (d)

¶1. (C) Summary: Earlier predictions that the Swiss-Libyan contretemps prompted by the mid-July arrest of Hannibal al-Qadhafi in Geneva would soon end have not been fulfilled, according to the Swiss Ambassador to Tripoli. Although key Libyan demands have been met -- charges against Hannibal have been dropped, a joint commission is looking into the incident and Switzerland is prepared to make a formal public apology -- Libyan officials now want Swiss police officers and officials involved in the incident to be punished, a line the Swiss government has so far refused to cross. Media reports that Libya had withdrawn USD 7 billion from Swiss banks and cut oil shipments to Switzerland appear to have been a warning; Libyan MFA officials told the Swiss Ambassador that such actions could be taken unless the joint commission's findings are to the GOL's liking. For its part, Switzerland has linked issuance of a humanitarian visa to the relative of a prominent regime official to obtaining an exit permit for a Swiss company representative who has been stranded since the conflict began in July. Swiss Air's station manager in Tripoli also notified civil aviation authorities that Swiss Air would close its one remaining weekly flight unless the GOL issued her a one-year, multiple entry visa and restored the other two weekly flights operated by Swiss Air until mid-July. End summary.

¶2. (C) Reversing his earlier prediction (ref A) that the crisis prompted by the arrest in Geneva of Hannibal al-Qadhafi, son of Muammar al-Qadhafi, was all but resolved, Swiss Ambassador Daniel von Muralt told P/E Chief on October 21 that he was no longer optimistic that the contretemps would be resolved anytime soon. A Libyan-Swiss memorandum of understanding signed August 31 in Tripoli stipulated that Switzerland: 1) drop the charges against Hannibal; 2) establish a joint commission of inquiry to investigate the incident; and 3) issue a formal public apology for the incident. As reported ref A, the Moroccan claimant in the case accepted compensation in exchange for agreeing not to pursue charges against Hannibal and his wife. Swiss authorities have cooperated with the joint investigation; the next meeting (the Swiss hope it proves to be the final one) is scheduled to take place in Geneva in early November. Switzerland is also prepared to issue a formal apology (von Muralt said it has already been drafted); however, it does not plan to do so until Swiss authorities are convinced that Libya is prepared to accept the conclusions of the commission of inquiry, let the matter die and restore relations to the status quo ante.

¶3. (C) Von Muralt said it had become increasingly clear in the past six weeks that Libyan officials were effectively pursuing a fourth condition: punishment of the Swiss police officers and officials involved in detaining Hannibal and his wife. Libyan officials have been unhappy with the testimony of eyewitnesses and others interviewed by the joint commission, which had not substantiated allegations by the GOL that Swiss police and officials acted inappropriately in detaining Hannibal and his wife and subsequently facilitating consular access to them. Libya has insisted that the Swiss officers be punished and has blocked efforts to bring the joint commission's work to a close and issue a report of its findings. Libyan members of the joint commission have instead insisted on calling more witnesses to try to bolster its claims of wrongdoing. Interviewing the additional witnesses delayed the commission's report, which was to have been issued in early October.

¶4. (C) To the great consternation of the Swiss, the GOL publicly accused Swiss officials of delaying the investigation. Hotly rejecting the idea that Swiss authorities had been anything but cooperative and emphasizing Bern's keen desire to resolve the issue amicably, von Muralt noted that Swiss authorities recently agreed to make three police officers involved in the arrest available for questioning (reversing an earlier decision) "as a gesture of good faith". He said there was "no chance" that the officers would be punished, stressing that their handling of the arrest had been "professional and correct". Swiss authorities were keen to demonstrate that they had done all they could to facilitate the joint commission's work to enable issuance of a mutually-agreed report. Swiss officials are concerned that Swiss and Libyan joint commission members could fail to agree on language for their final report, potentially constituting another stumbling block in the effort to mend frayed bilateral another stumbling block in the effort to mend frayed bilateral ties.

¶5. (C) Citing senior Libyan officials, including Central Bank

TRIPOLI 00000851 002 OF 002

Governor Farhat Bengadara, media reports on October 8 said Libya had withdrawn some 7 billion USD in deposits from Swiss banks and stopped deliveries of Libyan oil to Switzerland to "protest poor treatment of Libyan diplomats and businessmen". Von Muralt said Swiss authorities had received no confirmation that either had occurred. He shared with us a Libyan note verbale dated October 10 that: 1) reiterated claims that Swiss authorities violated diplomatic protocol in arresting Hannibal; 2) conceded that Libya had not withdrawn funds from Swiss banks or terminated oil shipments to Switzerland, but suggested it could; and, 3) called on Swiss authorities, specifically authorities of the Geneva canton, to cooperate so the joint commission could conclude its work as soon as possible. Separately, von Muralt obtained copies of notices from the office of Libyan Prime Minister-equivalent al-Baghdadi al-Mahmoudi to Libyan government agencies forbidding them from executing existing contracts or finalizing new ones with Swiss companies.

¶6. (C) In addition, von Muralt was convoked by MFA Secretary for European Affairs Abdulati Obeidi on October 11 and told that Switzerland should regard media reports that Libya had withdrawn its Swiss deposits and cut oil shipments as a sign of next steps the GOL would take unless the results of the joint commission's work were to the GOL's satisfaction. Von Muralt interpreted Obeidi's message as "a baldfaced attempt" to blackmail Switzerland into punishing police officers involved in the incident. Citing unnamed contacts close to the al-Qadhafi family, he claimed that the GOL's motivation for doing so was to further discredit the Swiss and deflect attention from Hannibal's egregious behavior. Stressing the al-Qadhafi clan's public relations problem, von Muralt noted that a number of Libyans had approached him to express "quiet support" for Switzerland and "embarrassment" about Hannibal's behavior.

¶7. (C) Von Muralt shared that Switzerland responded to Obeidi's October 11 demarche by linking issuance of a visa to the daughter of a prominent regime official, who needs specialized cancer care in Switzerland, to obtaining an exit permit for a representative of a Swiss company who is currently living at the Swiss Embassy. The Swiss individual was detained and his travel documents confiscated immediately after Hannibal's arrest in mid-July. Von Muralt contacted Bashir Saleh, Muammar al-Qadhafi's chief-of-staff-equivalent, a week ago to make it clear that no visa would be forthcoming unless the Swiss businessman was able to leave Libya; he has received no response. In addition, Swiss Air's station manager in Tripoli sent a formal notice to Libya's Civil Aviation authorities in early October advising that Swiss Air would close its one remaining flight per week to/from Switzerland at the end of October unless the GOL issued her a one-year, multiple entry visa and restored the other two weekly flights operated by Swiss Air until mid-July.

¶8. (C) Comment: Von Muralt characterized the ongoing contretemps as "an education" for Swiss leaders in Bern, who have been surprised that their willingness to compromise has so far failed to secure agreement by the GOL to resolve the incident and move on. Drawing a parallel to the case of the Bulgarian medics, he ascribed the GOL's tactics to a desire to deny any culpability, blame foreign powers for domestic shortcomings (in this case, the behavior of one of the Leader's sons), and aggressively counter-attack in the media to secure maximum concessions. According to von Muralt, Muammar al-Qadhafi and senior regime figures are determined that Swiss officials be punished to mitigate damage caused by Hannibal's misbehavior in Europe to the family's already sullied reputation in Libya. End comment.

MODERNIZATION EFFORTS

REF: A) TRIPOLI 827 , B) TRIPOLI 842

¶1.  (SBU) Summary: Libya's Central Bank Governor briefed a visiting U.S. trade expert and Emboffs on efforts by the Government of Libya (GOL) to modernize the financial sector, in part to attract greater foreign direct investment in non hydrocarbon sectors.  Libya is working with international organizations to improve financial sector transparency, plans to organizations to improve financial sector transparency, plans to bring international credit rating agencies to Libya to assess Libyan financial instruments and its fledgling stock market, and is working to improve basic banking supervision and operations. Libya plans to sell Certificates of Deposit (CD's) to banks and eventually directly to the public, and is in the process of training banking officials in loan risk assessment as part of an effort to broaden lending to small and medium sized enterprises (SME's). End summary.

¶2. (SBU) On October 13, Public Affairs-sponsored speaker Bruce Stokes, a trade and economic specialist with the National Journal, met with Libyan Central Bank (CB) Governor Farhat Omar Bengadara. Stokes was accompanied by the CDA, PAO, Econoff and PA Assistant. Bengadara discussed, inter alia, a financial sector reform program that comprises encouraging financial market operations - including modernizing Libya's stock market and selling CD's to banks and the general public - and modernizing Libya's banking practices and the CB itself. (Note: See reftels for details on Libya's response to the global financial crisis and Bengadara's views on Muammar al-Qadhafi's proposals for government restructuring and privatization. End note.)

¶3. (U) Stressing the negative impact of sanctions-era isolation on Libya's banking sector and the need for technical banking assistance, Bengadara said the CB is also working actively with the World Bank, IMF and McKinsey (with whom it has a consulting contract) to improve Libya's banking and financial sector. The overarching goal is to help create a better functioning, more transparent financial sector to make Libya a more attractive destination for foreign direct investment (FDI). Noting that there was plenty of interest in oil and gas exploration and production, which benefitted from well-organized investment under the auspices of the National Oil Corporation's Exploration and Production Sharing Agreement scheme, Bengadara stressed that the CB's efforts were targeted at securing FDI in non-hydrocarbon sectors such as agriculture and tourism. There was also room for more FDI in downstream hydrocarbon industries such as petrochemical production and refining (Libya imports most of its gasoline from Italian refineries). Echoing a line we've heard from other senior GOL officials, he said Libya - with its strategic location, long shoreline and multiple port facilities - wanted to become a regional center for travel, banking and investment akin to Dubai.

¶4. (U) As part of the program to sell CD's, the CB is working to facilitate visits by rating agencies Moody's and Standard and Poor in an effort to secure credible ratings of GOL financial instruments and as assessment of the fledgling stock market. The CB is also interested in improving greater overall transparency in the Libyan economy; Bengadara and his team have been involved in ongoing discussions with international groups working on this issue. Specific areas of discussion included infrastructure development, tax reform and streamlining visa issuances for foreign businesspeople.

¶5. (SBU) Bengadara said the CB is also focused in efforts to improve basic banking supervision and operations. The CB has two external advisors who oversee a credit risk initiative to train banking officials in analyzing loan applications from small- and medium-sized enterprises, although the retail banking sector is still very limited. In broader terms, Libya views itself as being more akin to Saudi Arabia than the UAE, in the sense that the UAE has fewer oil and gas resources and therefore depends to a greater degree on FDI. Like Saudi Arabia, Libya's considerable hydrocarbon resources afford it more cushion and make it less dependent on FDI; however, Bengadara is trying to encourage GOL officials to take a longer-term view of FDI as a means by which to help diversify Libya's oil-dependent economy.

¶1. (C) U.K. Embassy PolOff told P/E Chief on October 30 that HMG had decided not/not to approve a license for U.K. company York Guns to export to Libya 130,000 Kashnikov automatic rifles. Per ref A, York Guns was to have acted as intermediary between an unidentified Ukrainian party and procurement officials at Libya's Temporary People's Committee for Defense (MOD-equivalent). Based on the intervention reported ref B and on concerns expressed by the U.K.'s Embassy in Tripoli that the Government of Libya (GOL) might have intended to re-export the weapons to either the governments or armed rebel factions in Chad and Sudan, the U.K.'s Foreign and Commonwealth Office recommended about one month ago against approving the export license. After conducting a review of the case, Whitehall concurred on October 30 with the decision to not/not approve the export license.

¶2. (C) Separately, Muhammad el-Obeidi, a Libyan businessman with ties to some quarters of Muammar al-Qadhafi's regime, told P/E Chief on October 23 that he had signed a contract with a Romanian company (NFI) for the export from Romania to Libya of 100,000 AK-47S automatic rifles. (Note: El-Obeidi's older brother was Libya's Minister of Defense from 1954-1969; his nephew is a former Prime Minister and the current MFA Secretary (U/S-equivalent) for European Affairs. End note.) El-Obeidi signed the contract in late September in Paris during a business trip there. El-Obeidi said he had been tapped to help facilitate procurement for the Jafl al-Khamis ("Khamis Brigade"), a special forces unit headed by Khamis al-Qadhafi, son of Muammar al-Qadhafi. He said Captain Ahmed Ben Shraga'a, head of procurement for the unit, has instructions to work through el-Obeidi on a number of "special procurement issues". El-Obeidi was open about the contract, but avoided the question as to whether the rifles were to be used in Libya or re-exported to another destination.

CLASSIFIED BY: Chris Stevens, CDA, Embassy Tripoli, U.S. Dept of State.
REASON: 1.4 (b), (d)

¶1. (C) Summary: Apparently seeking to balance perceptions of recent overtures to the U.S. and Italy, Libyan leader Muammar al-Qadhafi conducted a five-day visit to Russia, Belarus and Kiev. Expectations that major agreements for large military equipment sales, gas exports and an "OPEC for natural gas" appear to have been inflated - al-Qadhafi left Moscow with a framework agreement for civilian nuclear cooperation and potential defense purchases in the future. Russian Embassy officials in Tripoli implied, but did not state, that media reports that Libya had agreed to provide a naval base in Benghazi to the Russian navy were inaccurate. They also expressed frustration at Libya's failure to implement previously concluded agreements, noting that the GOL had nonetheless pushed hard to sign a bevy of ill-prepared agreements during al-Qadhafi's visit. Most local observers said that al-Qadhafi's visit was designed to signal to the U.S. and other western powers that despite its relatively recent reintegration into the international community, Libya is an independent actor that will seek to balance its engagement between East and West. The relatively prominent role played by Muatassim al-Qadhafi, son of Muammar al-Qadhafi and National Security Adviser, suggests that he is becoming a more seriously-regarded player in the regime. End Summary.

AMID HEIGHTENED EXPECTATIONS, MEDIA ANTICIPATES MAJOR AGREEMENTS ...

¶2. (U) Libyan leader Muammar al-Qadhafi made his first trip to Moscow since 1985 during a five-day, three-country tour of Russia, Belarus and Ukraine. Russian Poloff Evgeny Kozlov gave Poloff a readout of the Russia stop on November 5. Al-Qadhafi's delegation included his son, National Security Adviser Muatassim al-Qadhafi, Foreign Minister Abudlrahman Shalgam, External Security Organization Director Musa Kusa, and National Oil Corporation Chairman Shukri Ghanem, all of whom held meetings and pursued negotiations on the margins. Citing senior Russian and Libyan sources, media reports in the run-up to the visit predicted major defense, energy (natural gas) and nuclear agreements.

¶3. (C) Muatassim al-Qadhafi and Kusa arrived in the Kremlin in advance of al-Qadhafi for meetings with the Foreign Ministry and security officials, fueling expectations that Libya would sign long-awaited arms deals rumored to be worth upwards of USD two billion. Russian Embassy officials told us in advance of the visit that a joint Russia-Libya military cooperation committee was working to finalize defense procurement contracts. The failure to conclude contracts for sale of military equipment to Libya during the visit to Libya earlier this year by former President Putin had been a disappointment for the Kremlin (ref A). Russian newspaper Russkiy Kommersant - the media organ in which Saif al-Islam al-Qadhafi, son and putative heir of Muammar al-Qadhafi previewed his announcement in mid-August of his intention to withdraw from politics - also reported at the outset of the visit that Tripoli would offer Russia the right to establish a naval base in the eastern Libyan city of Benghazi. Multiple media reports claimed the two sides had also concluded a civilian nuclear agreement encompassing construction of nuclear power plants and nuclear medical cooperation.

¶4. (C) Rhetoric for the visit was grandiose, with much made of Russian-Libyan agreement on "strengthening the foundations of a multi-polar world and political settlement of conflict situations". Referring to al-Qadhafi's crowning in August by African tribal leaders as "King of Kings" in Africa, Kozlov joked that al-Qadhafi now aspired to be "the Great Balancer" between East and West. A range of diplomatic and private sector contacts in Tripoli attributed the timing of the visit to al-Qadhafi's desire to remind the world that he has options and is not beholden to the west in the wake of a recent colonial is not beholden to the west in the wake of a recent colonial compensation agreement with Italy (ref B) and a comprehensive claims agreement for terrorism claims with the U.S. Reiterating familiar themes, al-Qadhafi lamented that the world had become unipolar and unstable because of "violations of the balance of power".

... RUSSIAN EMBASSY CONFIRMS ONLY ONE

TRIPOLI 00000870 002.2 OF 002

¶5. (C) Kozlov said the two sides ultimately signed only a general framework agreement for civilian nuclear cooperation that had been the subject of negotiations for several years. (Note: Per ref A, an MOU was signed during Putin's visit in April committing both sides to concluding a formal cooperation agreement on civilian uses of nuclear energy by the end of 2008. End note.) Kozlov refused to confirm that Libya had offered Russia use of a naval base in Benghazi, but seemed to downplay the possibility by stressing Russia's efforts to restore a large naval base in Tartus, Syria. He confirmed that the Russian navy planned at least two more port calls in Libya by warships during 2009, following on last month's visit by a flotilla en route to Venezuela (ref C). Kozlov said Muatassim al-Qadhafi discussed military cooperation and engaged in negotiations for big-ticket defense equipment sales, but gave no specifics and indicated nothing had been finalized.

¶6. (C) Moscow still hopes to reach agreement for an "OPEC for natural gas" with Libya, Qatar, and Iran; however, we were told the only energy agreement discussed in Moscow was a three-way deal between Gazprom, Eni, and Libya's National Oil Corporation to build additional pipelines and a refining facility in Libya. The GOL also offered to direct investment from its sovereign wealth fund to Russian firms hard hit by the global financial crisis, focusing particularly on those that had suffered losses on investments in U.S. markets and financial instruments.

LIBYA SHOOTS FOR THE MOON, RUSSIA DEMURES

¶7. (C) Echoing complaints we heard from Spanish counterparts in the wake of al-Qadhafi's visit to Madrid in December 2007 (ref D), Kozlov said Libyan officials "dusted off agreements that were still under negotiation" on the eve of the Moscow visit, expecting that they could be readied for signature. Pointing to delays in implementing commercial and military agreements that constituted part of the agreement earlier this year to forgive USD 4.5 billion of Soviet-era debt, Kozlov bemoaned the fact that " ...the Libyans always want to sign everything, but only implement what they want - an agreement is only valid if both sides read it the same way". According to media reports, stops in Minsk and Kiev saw technical agreements on prevention of double taxation and expressions of mutual cooperation in the energy sector. Notably missing from public announcements were announcements of weapons sales, although media reports indicated al-Qadhafi discussed purchasing strategic and tactical airlift assets in Ukraine.

¶8. (C) Comment: Al-Qadhafi's itinerary and the trip's timing - he touched down in Moscow on the same day the final deposits were made in a humanitarian relief fund to compensate U.S. victims of Libyan acts of terrorism - suggested a desire to signal that Libya is not beholden to the west and still has foreign policy options, themes he touched on directly in his Revolution Day speech on August 31 (ref E). While the GOL wants to preserve room for maneuver with respect to energy and arms purchases, several reliable Libyan interlocutors noted that Libya's relationship with Russia has never been genuinely warm. "Libyans believe Russians are too dour and are not trustworthy", one contact with regime ties told us. The fact that Muatassim al-Qadhafi featured in the visits is an interesting development, suggesting that he is becoming a more seriously-regarded player in the regime. Our Russian interlocutor bemoaned Moscow's lack of understanding of intra-Libyan regime dynamics, noting that Muatassim was initially scheduled to meet only mid-level bureaucrats until the Russian Embassy in Tripoli intervened to explain that he was a potential successor to his father. His reports from Moscow were that Muatassim took a clear lead in his meetings, albeit with Musa Kusa at his side as an advisor, and comported himself reasonably well. End comment.

CLASSIFIED BY: Chris Stevens, CDA, Embassy Tripoli, U.S. Dept of State.
REASON: 1.4 (b), (d)

¶1. (C) Summary. Both the GOL and Darfur rebel groups resident in Tripoli are busy crafting agreements with their respective interlocutors regarding efforts in Darfur. In late October, Libya chaired a "Tripartite Committee" meeting, brokering an agreement between Chad and Sudan that called for an exchange of ambassadors in early November and a commitment to refrain from ambassadors in early November and a commitment to refrain from providing support to opposition groups in both countries. Libyan officials told us the parties also agreed to stand up a 2,000-member bilateral security force on the Chad-Sudan border; that agreement was not included in the joint statement issued after the meeting. At the same time, representatives of SLA/Unity in Libya en route to southern Darfur discussed their efforts to bring other rebel groups under the SLA/Unity umbrella (they claimed JEM/Collective and members of Khalil Ibrahim's leadership were in the process of joining with SLA/Unity) to enable a strike against Khartoum. Abdallah Yehia's leadership of SLA/Unity is undisputed, according to them. They outlined their strategic approach, criticizing the less effective tactical mindset of other rebel groups, and were dismissive of both the Sudan People's Initiative and Qatari efforts. End Summary.

GOL CLAIMS DIPLOMATIC VICTORY, BUT IMPLEMENTATION NOT ASSURED

¶2. (C) Ali Treiki, MFA Secretary for African Affairs (U/S-equivalent), hosted Sudan's Presidential Advisor, Mustafa Osman Ismael, and Chad's Foreign Minister, Moussa Faki, for talks in Tripoli on October 22-23. The parties released a joint statement agreeing to refrain from providing support to opposition groups in both countries and to an exchange ambassadors between Chad and Sudan before November 7. They also committed to a series of follow-on meetings in Tripoli November 19-20. Treiki's chief of staff, Mahmoud Azzabi, characterized both sides as "desperate," but said that negotiations had nevertheless been "very difficult." A Libyan-led joint security force comprising 1,000 troops each from Chad and Sudan was not announced in the joint communiqui; however, in an October 27 meeting, Treiki told the CDA that both sides had agreed to contribute to the force, which will be deployed at 10 points along the border. Treiki stressed that the joint Chad-Sudan force is designed to augment efforts of UN/AU forces already in place.

¶3. (C) The GOL also plans to host on November 15 a military and security meeting between the three parties, which will run through the next meeting of the Tripartite Committee on November 19-20. French and British diplomats have told us that Muammar al-Qadhafi plans to host a Deby-Bashir summit in Tripoli by the end of November (Note: Treiki also said there would be a summit, but was vague on the timeframe. End note.) Chadian diplomats here told contacts they were doubtful the follow-on meetings would occur given the Contact Group meeting scheduled to take place in N'Djamena November 12-13. Reiterating remarks reported ref A, Treiki was careful not to rule out non-Libyan initiatives, but broke out laughing when asked about Qatar's efforts in Darfur. "Help from any country is appreciated . . . especially if the country is rich," he said, but shared that Qatar's lack of experience in the region and feel for the complex nuances of the situation likely limited its potential contribution to peace efforts.

SLA/UNITY CLAIMS LEADERSHIP ISSUES RESOLVED & SAYS OTHER REBEL GROUPS SEEK TO ALLY WITH IT

¶4. (C) London-based SLA/Unity Spokesman Mahjoub Hussein and Netherlands-based Saayid Sharif joined Osman Muhammad Busra in a meeting with P/E Chief and Poloff on October 29. Echoing remarks made in our previous meeting with them (ref B), they stressed that internal divisions among SLA/Unity leadership had been resolved, and that Abdallah Yehia is the undisputed leader of SLA/Unity. Yehia's authority stemmed from his election to leadership by other SLA/Unity members in 2006. Other notables - specifically Suliman Jamous and Sharif Harir - were not empowered to negotiate without Yehia's approval. Hussein and Busra claimed that other Darfur rebel groups were in the process of coming under the SLA/Unity umbrella, ostensibly because they "see the strength" of SLA/Unity. Busra said JEM/Collective and even members of SLA/Abdul Wahid (SLA/AW) were "coming down the mountain to be with us", and claimed some rebel leaders and forces had recently co-located themselves with SLA/Unity forces in southern Darfur. Hussein, Sharif and Busra agreed that Abdul Wahid was a historic figure for Darfur and Sudan, but downplayed his relevance in the future, characterizing him as "a rebel version 1.0". The longer Wahid remains outside Sudan and away from the fighting, the less credible he is. Husein claimed that SLA/Unity has enjoyed a recent surge in support from IDP's in the camps, saying they realized that "we (SLA/Unity) are the future".

¶5. (C) Hussein, Sharif and Busra agreed that stability in Chad was in the strategic interest of SLA/Unity and the region, in part to help serve as a bulwark against a "janjaweed state that would stretch from Khartoum to Mali". Hussein claimed SLA/Unity does not receive direct military or material support from Chad or Libya; however, Khalil Ibrahim and his group receive military equipment and funds from Libya, which is routed through Deby's regime in Ndjamena. Hussein and Busra (Sharif was the most reserved of the three) stressed that SLA/Unity's leadership had adopted a more "strategic approach" towards establishing ties with other rebel groups than other rebel leaders, who had followed a more tactically-minded and less effective approach. SLA/Unity's aim was to overthrow Bashir's government in Khartoum, not just to gain tactical advantage vis a vis other groups. Hussein and Sharif were to travel from Tripoli to Kufra, and then on to southern Darfur for meetings "in the field".

SUDAN PEOPLE'S INITIATIVE "A PLOY"; QATARI INITIATIVE NOT SERIOUS

¶6. (C) Hussein, Sharif and Busra dismissed the Sudan People's Initiative, stressing that "nearly all" Darfurians and Sudanese viewed it as a deliberately-timed ploy to undermine President Bashir's indictment by the ICC. "It is not a genuine initiative, but a game to try to stop the ICC", said Busra. He was equally dismissive of Khartoum's desire to achieve peace. "Bashir's government speaks about peace while preparing for war; the problem in Darfur is not in Darfur, it is in Khartoum", he said. All three were skeptical that Qatar's recent efforts to play a positive role in Darfur would yield results. Doha did not have relationships with key rebel leaders and lacked a feel for the complicated situation on the ground. Busra claimed Qatari representatives, for example, seemed not to understand the way dynamics in Chad bear on problems in Darfur. The three agreed that Doha's initiative appeared to mostly represent an effort by the Arab League to deflect attention from Bashir's indictment.

¶7. (C) Comment: Treiki seems serious about developing concrete milestones for progress in Libya's trilateral mediation efforts. After having been publicly embarrassed by the failure of key rebel leaders to show up in Sirte for peace talks under Libyan auspices, he and the GOL appear to have focused greater attention on the governments in Khartoum and Ndjamena, and relatively less on direct engagement with rebels. Treiki has also been more measured in conversations with us in predicting progress, suggesting that the GOL remains a bit chastened after the public failure of the Sirte process. That said, the GOL has not abandoned its propensity for dating around; Treiki himself suggested that the GOL would seek to re-engage with rebel groups after upcoming meetings attendant to Sudan-Chad rapprochement. The SLA/Unity representatives we speak with appear to have extensive contacts with other rebel groups, but it is difficult to gauge how much of the talk about SLA/Unity gaining strength and attracting allies represents reality, and how much is just rhetoric. End comment.

REF: STATE 118192

¶1. (U) Post received on November 9 via telefax a letter from Leader Muammar al-Qadhafi conveying his congratulations to the President-elect. We have not yet received the note in hard copy.

¶2. (SBU) Post's informal translation of the Arabic language letter follows:

Begin text of letter:

Dear Mr. President Obama,

I have the pleasure to send a congratulation note for the first time to an American president, and on behalf of all Africa, and of Cen-Sad, the base of the African pyramid, and on behalf of the Arab Maghreb Union, and in the name of all Arab leaders as I am their dean.

Since relations are resumed between our two countries, we have the right to congratulate you from the bottom of our hearts because you are the son of Africa.

God gives reign to whom He wishes and takes it away from whom He wishes; he holds dear whom he wants and humiliates whom he wants as well. He retains all the good in His hands, and He is the all powerful; and He pledged to confer His favors on those deemed weak and to bequeath them the Earth.

Blacks were deemed weak and were oppressed, and were taken to the American continent as slaves and indentured servants.

The main point is that Blacks shall not have an inferiority complex and imitate the Yankees.

They have to prove that they are partners to the whites and sharing the same continent; that the Whites themselves are not indigenous, but that they have come from overseas; that the black man is not less competent than the white man; and that the black color shall prevail in the world as predicted by the Green Book.

I salute the American people who have chosen you in these historical elections for such a high position, so that you may lead the change that you have promised them and for which they have rallied around you.

We hope that you lead the United States of America on the path of good and respect peoples' sovereignty and observe the policy of neutrality.

Sincerely,

Muammar al-Qadhafi

End text.

¶3. (U) Post will forward the original via diplomatic pouch if/when we receive it.

TRIPOLI 00000088 001.2 OF 002

CLASSIFIED BY: Chris Stevens, CDA, Embassy Tripoli, Dept of State.
REASON: 1.4 (b), (d)

¶1. (C) Summary. Libyan leader Muammar Qadhafi, backed by an informal mandate from AU leaders, plans to continue a round of personal diplomacy with both the Chadian government and rebel groups, possibly including an emergency meeting in the coming days. Libya is in contact with France to evacuate Libyan diplomatic personnel and dependents from Ndjamena. The GOL recognizes that the latest violence could complicate peacekeeping deployments to both Chad and Sudan; however, Libya has no objections to the peacekeeping deployment and favors a quick resolution to the latest hostilities. Though Libya strongly supports Chadian President Idriss Deby, Qadhafi has an apparently sincere, if egotistical, interest in seriously working towards a renewed ceasefire. End summary.

SECURITY SITUATION "VERY SERIOUS"

¶2. (C) Echoing February 2 press comments by MFA Secretary for African Affairs Ali Treiki, Salam al-Riyani, Treiki's chief of staff, told Poloff on February 3 that the GOL believes the situation in Chad is "very serious." The GOL estimates approximately 300 vehicles carrying 2,000-3,000 armed rebels are in Ndjamena on February 3. Libya believes Chadian President Deby is holed up in a heavily-fortified presidential palace. Al-Riyani speculated that rebels are receiving vehicles across Chad's borders with Sudan, CAR, and Niger, but he categorically denied that any elements in Libya were supporting the rebels. On Sudan's role in the latest violence, al-Riyani conceded the rebels' support "had to come from somewhere."

LIBYAN LEADER TO CONTINUE "PERSONAL" DIPLOMACY

¶3. (SBU) According to al-Riyani, the African Union, meeting in Addis Ababa, had asked Libya and the Republic of Congo to take the lead on AU efforts to resolve the current crisis. Pressed about Libya's mandate, al-Riyani said that the AU did not actually vote or officially nominate Libya to act on its behalf; rather, Libya's leadership role on the Chadian crisis emerged after a series of "informal consultations" of AU leaders on the margins of the Addis Ababa summit.
